Index to Reviews, Comments, and Stories of the Films

Appended is a list of subjects covered by our reviews and comments and the synposes furnished by the manufacturers released for the three months ending September 30, 1917. This list of releases with dates is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or synopsis can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "S" for synopsis. Where reference letter is omitted to either review or comment it signifies that none was published, and the omission of reference letter "S" indicates that synopsis was not furnished by the manufacturer. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.

(N. B.)—Synopses, comments, or reviews of episodes of serials or series, are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode. Date shown for Pathe and Universal subjects indicates the week during which they were released.

Exhibitors should endeavor to gain the confidence of their patrons. Prove to them that the same intense bright light is used every day. No flickers or sputters and a perfect picture.

The demands of the public today are very severe but to satisfy them means success. It also means the adoption of the famous "Speer Hold-Arks" as the negative carbon.

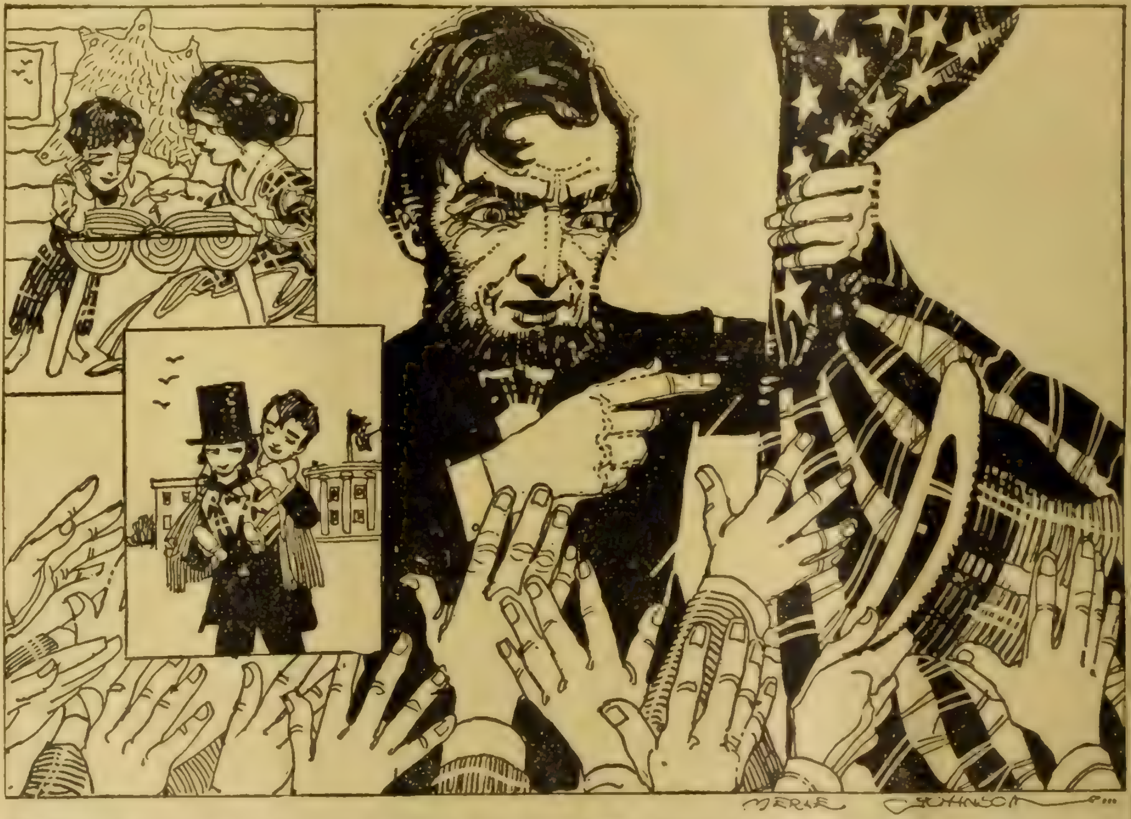
"The Lincoln Cycle" Rich in Humor and Human Interest



THE Lincoln pictures at the Strand Theatre, with Benjamin Chapin impersonating Abraham Lincoln make a vastly entertaining photo-drama, aside from their patriotic or historical interest. They are rich in humor—as any Lincoln film or story should certainly be—have a very human, swift-moving plot and show intimately the background of the great President's life.

Of the four features that make up "The Lincoln Cycle," it is difficult to tell which is more enjoyable, more significant as a character study. "My Mother" shows the spiritual influence of Nancy Hanks in moulding the mental and moral nature of a mischevious and rather pugnacious little "Abe.". With her death begins the harsher but none the less important influence of "My Father." There was never a very clear understanding between this father and son, but, as Lincoln once said, "My father taught me to fight, that at times half-way measures must be thrown aside, and that to strike hard then became a sacred duty."

"Myself" gives glimpses of the President at Washington before the Civil War was fought and outlines the simple but sturdy Lincoln principles of life. "The Call to Arms" is tense with scenes of action and emotion at the White House, though at the same time it shows the President's home life and love of his little sons, Tad and Willie.

Altogether, "The Lincoln Cycle" is a delight. Mr. Chapin's characterization is so vital it seems the living Lincoln moves before our eyes. At no time in the country's history could the production of these pictures be more opportune, for Lincoln the man and the national ideal is in the mind of every American during this period of storm and stress, when patriotism needs the stimulus of history and the people look to Lincoln-like leaders for guidance in a world war.

A high school boy may a few months hence become a national figure. Never has a period offered greater opportunity for American youths of character and integrity. The simple, humble beginnings of Lincoln are thus peculiarly an incentive and an inspiration.

So "The Lincoln Cycle" is a picture for boys and girls, as well as their parents, to see and enjoy. Its success at the Strand Theatre has already been so great Mitchel H. Mark of the Strand management, and Mr. Chapin have engaged the Globe Theatre for a special run for "The Lincoln Cycle," beginning Monday, June 4.

"THE VOICE"

Many Exhibitors Have Made a Clean-up by Heeding Its Call.

From Canada, south to the border, from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore., Exhibitors have listened to the call of "The Voice On the Wire," the Universal's popular mystery serial, founded on the novel of the same name, written by Eustace Hale Ball. And to everyone that has listened to the call has come an unprecedented serial success for sixteen consecutive weeks. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber have scored individually and the company make a collective hit. For these sufficient reasons this splendid production, directed by Stuart Paton, is being booked for repeat showings all over the country. It has every element a popular serial should have—mystery, thrills, suspense, swift action, a love story—and each episode winds up with a punch. Book now thru your nearest Universal Exchange.

LAUGHTER PAYS

Comedians' Antics Cashed In by Wise Showmen.

Universal Comedies, including Nestors, L-KO's and Jokers, afford Exhibitors the opportunity of giving a "Comedy Night" that can be equaled from no other source. Nestors, with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, present parlor comedy that easily tops anything on the market. L-KO's, with a huge bunch of daredevil comedians and a host of pretty girls, offer stunt comedy of the hilarious kind. Jokers, with William Franey, Gale Henry, and their merry crew, give you the fresh, funny foolishness that makes folks happy. The combination is irresistible, and makes a box-office attraction that gets the crowds and the coin.

ALWAYS ANIMATED

Popular Universal News Weekly Always Filled With Live Subjects.

Like the hundred-yards sprinter, the editors of the Universal Animated Weekly are on their toes at every minute of the day's work. Nothing of general interest to the vast army of fans who want to see the world's greatest news events on the screen ever escapes them, and the result is that "Animated Night" in thousands of theaters gets the crowds, even if that happens to be what was formerly the dullest day of the week. If any Exhibitor has a day when nothing seems to get the business, let him give the Animated a trial and he will learn of a sure cure for a very expensive ill.

A MASK OF MYSTERY

"The Purple Mask" Serial Mystifies Audiences and Magnetizes the Coin.

From the underworld of Paris to the highest strata of society runs the swift action of "The Purple Mask," in which the two most popular serial stars on earth, Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, have made the big hit of their successful career. Mystery and suspense, huge sets, and strange locations, mark "The Purple Mask" as one of the most notable serials of the year. It has not only been getting the money for thousands, but hundreds of wise Exhibitors are taking advantage of its popularity by rebooking it and making a second clean-up. Write your nearest Universal Exchange about "The Purple Mask" today.

NOTHING QUITE SO POPULAR

Say Exhibitors Regarding Universal Current Events.

Every Program Exhibitor knows that there is no more popular subject in moving pictures than the news weekly, and when the Universal released a new one under the highly informative title of "Current Events," its success was instantaneous. It is right up to the minute, released every week, and supplies a want long felt by progressive Exhibitors. Each week sees an increase in the number of prints needed to supply the demand, and this increase is due entirely to the freshness and up-to-date quality of the subjects included in each week's release of "Current Events." Shoot a trial order in to your nearest Universal Exchange for the current release, and you will place a standing order soon.

Keeping Ahead of the Times

Just as the Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Current Events cover the day's news in the manner of a great daily newspaper, so the Universal Screen Magazine gives to the movie fans throughout the country a great popular magazine in moving picture form. The range of subjects is such as to please every patron, young and old, of both sexes. Something for the housewife; for the business man; for the tradesman; for the kids; for young people, eager to see and learn (and be entertained at the same time); with many topics of general interest that make the Screen Magazine unique in its field. Here is a one-reel feature that you can book with the positive assurance that it will "draw."

POPULAR PUPS PROVE PULLERS

Vincent Colby made a ten-strike with his funny pups long before they were presented in moving picture form as "Seven Cutey Pups" by the ever progressive Universal. Wherever post cards are sold Colby's pups have made friends, and millions upon millions of these cards have been sold throughout the country. This one-reel feature will prove as popular in your house, Mr. Exhibitor Reader, as they have in hundreds of others. While in reality this is a comic animated cartoon, the treatment of the drawing and the titles, and, in fact, the entire story is so different from anything you have ever seen that you cannot judge "Seven Cutey Pups" by anything you have ever seen. Throughout the country—the world in fact—the people—rich and poor—cry, "Give us food—lest we perish."

Our nation is at war. Our Allies look to us for FOOD. The struggle of the Ages will be won or lost on the American Farms.

Meanwhile the American people bend to the soil. The earth God bequeathed gives forth its fruit. But still the cry—"Food, give us Food."

And far across the waters of the earth from distant shores, the echo reverberates, "Food, give us Food, lest we no longer have strength to withstand our enemies."

Why is this so?

There is food aplenty—but the FOOD TRUST—the most criminal combination in America's business history—is grinding the masses in its insatiable desire for PROFITS.

Herbert Hoover, food administrator of the U. S. A., and chairman of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, publicly assailed the FOOD TRUST before the U. S. Senate last week, stating: "In the last five months $250,000,000 has been extracted from the American consumer in excess of normal profits of manufacturers and distributers.

Paramount

Paramount's greatest boosters are the several million men, women and children who declare—by their attendance in more than five thousand theaters in America—that Paramount Pictures are the most consistently entertaining type of amusements offered on the screen.

The Paramount stars are not only the best known—but, collectively, they represent the greatest aggregation of artists appearing under one management in the world's history.

Generally speaking, exhibitors in America may be divided into two classes—those who always have played Paramount Pictures, and those who are going to.

Paramount's greatest boast is that 92 per cent of the first one thousand exhibitors in America to play Paramount pictures are on the Paramount Books today.

Think what this means!

It means that Paramount distribution is as great as Paramount Pictures and Paramount Stars and the great Paramount organization.

Distribution

The secret of Paramount's successful distribution lies in this short business principle—insistence that the man (exhibitor) who sells you product makes as much money as you do from each individual transaction!

With the inauguration on

August 5th, 1917

of the "Selective Star Series System" of distribution, Paramount puts into effect a plan whereby exhibitors will make more money—greater profit—than ever before.

The "Selective Star Series System" offers him this guarantee—since he can choose for himself the pictures and the stars he knows—by past profits—are the ones his patrons want to see.

The exhibitors of America, having had the opportunity to study the "Selective Star Series System" are endorsing it with hundreds of contracts daily.

Are you among them?

If not, apply to yourself another short business principle—DO IT NOW!

Write, wire or call at any branch office for particulars. The nearest Paramount exchange will send a representative.

ARS GRATIA ARTIS

These Are The Things That Goldwyn Knew

FROM the beginning, Goldwyn had little or no trouble shaping and agreeing on the basic policy of this organization. We had certain definite knowledge on which we could work.

1. We knew that the Goldwyn policy must embody those things of which exhibitors approved.

2. We knew that exhibitors desired a staple, sane policy of open bookings.

3. We knew that exhibitors demanded improved productions—an increase in the quality of pictures.

4. We knew exhibitors preferred to conduct business with us through our own branches, instead of through regional franchise middlemen.

5. And we also knew that exhibitors desired new refinements, new ideas, new skill, new stories—in fact, an entirely new type of productions.

Knowing all of these things to be desired, Goldwyn has done them. And that is all there was to the shaping of the Goldwyn policy. . . . Our twenty-five branches are now open in the United States and Canada and our managers are ready to discuss contracts with exhibitors.

A Year's Time, A Million Dollars and Faith

ALL of these elements have been put into the twelve Goldwyn productions that will be completed in advance of our first release in September.

A year's time in which to do our work well; time in which to make pictures slowly and carefully; time in which to organize our distribution and build up in your minds the confidence and trust that our methods deserve to inspire.

$1,000,000 in completed pictures to prove to all exhibitors in advance of booking that Goldwyn Pictures, each and everyone, will be splendidly made and tremendously powerful productions.

And the FAITH that can be found only in the hearts and minds of men and women who know what they are doing; who know HOW to do big things well; who have the foresight and imagination to see that the motion pictures of the present and the future must be bigger and better and finer than any other pictures have ever been before.

We feel that few exhibitors will care to sign contracts for any other pictures until they have first seen the Goldwyn productions. . . . . Trade showings in 25 branch offices throughout North America in July.

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS EXCHANGES

JULY 7, 1917

SERIAL "FANTOMAS" IN BIG NEWSPAPERS AID TO BOX-OFFICE

SUNDAY newspapers all over the country are now beginning the publication of the fiction version of the Gaumont series of motion picture stories entitled "Fantomas," the film version of which was made by Gaumont and is now available at Mutual Exchanges everywhere.

Wide Spread Publicity.

The story, "Fantomas," is appearing now in such papers as the New York Sunday World, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the New Orleans States, the Ft. Wayne Journal-Gazette, the Minneapolis Journal, the Salt Lake City Telegram, the St. Louis Post Dispatch, the Tacoma Ledger, the Seattle Post Intelligencer, the Los Angeles Tribune and the Columbus State Journal. It is a story that abounds in mystery and the solution of a sensational series of crimes, together with the capture of the master criminals. Statistics prove that mystery stories are the favorite form of fiction. Hundreds of thousands of people are reading the story. Exhibitors can appeal to this vast army of readers by playing the "Fantomas" series now. On the screen the exciting incidents related in the story are even more thrilling.

Mutual Exchanges Will Co-Operate.

Every Mutual Exchange stands ready to co-operate in the heartiest fashion with any exhibitor booking "Fantomas." The majority of exhibitors will prefer to run "Fantomas" right now while the newspapers are printing the fiction version. Any Mutual Exchange can quote exhibitors prices, open dates, and supply the needed accessories in the way of paper, announcement slides, etc.

Mutual Press Sheets — Are You Using Them?

With each Mutual Star Production the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation is issuing a special press sheet in colors as an aid to the exhibitors running that particular subject. These press sheets contain music cues, press stories, advertising and banner catch lines, specimen advertising set-ups, synopsis of the stories for use in theatre programs, and countless other exhibitor aids. To get full value from each attraction booked the exhibitor should make use of all the helps offered. The press sheet costs the exhibitor nothing. It is his for the asking. Press sheets on any subject can be secured from your nearest Mutual Exchange.

Margarita Fischer Starts New Picture

Having completely recovered from the serious illness which confined her to a bed in St. Joseph's Hospital for a fortnight, Margarita Fischer has started work on her next Mutual Picture. "Little Miss Missionary" is its title. J. Edward Hungerford, the famous novelist, is the author of the new story. Most of the action is laid in a Hopi Indian village, and some most unusual stage settings and effects are promised. "Little Miss Missionary" is the fifth of the Fischer Series of Mutual Pictures. Those released and now showing are "The Pearl of Paradise," "Miss Jackie of the Navy," "The Butterfly Girl" and "The Devil's Assistant." Bookings on the entire Fischer Series can be made at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

"Reel Life" Is Adding Department of Wit

By special arrangement with "Life," America's leading weekly of wit, humor and satire, the Mutual weekly featurette called "Reel Life," will add a new department consisting of jokes from the pages of the periodical, presented in animated form. This arrangement marks the beginning of a new epoch for the lighter side of motion pictures. It is also worthy of note that what may be called a consolidation of interests, is formed between the most popular magazine of its class and America's foremost producer of single reel novelty films. The first animated contributions from "Life" will appear in "Reel Life" No. 62, released through all Mutual Exchanges on Thursday, July 5th. The first jokes to reach the screen are entitled "Hands Up!" and "A Saving Grace." They will be found enjoyable by every single spectator, but doubly so by the hundreds of thousands who read "Life" weekly.

WILLIAM RUSSELL IN "THE MASKED HEART" —A ROMANTIC STORY

"THE MASKED HEART" is the next William Russell picture. It is five acts in length and is a romantic drama of a type wholly different from anything that Mr. Russell has done to date. It will be released through all Mutual Exchanges the week of July 2nd. Like other Russell pictures, it was made at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc.

The Mysterious Unknown.

A beautiful masked woman—a veritable mysterious unknown—plays a prominent part in the story and is the cause of many of Mr. Russell's tribulations in the role of Philip Greycourt. As the story runs, Philip meets the mysterious masked stranger at a masquerade ball. He rescues her from the embrace of a drunken dancer, and is granted permission to see her home in a taxicab. When the taxi stops at its destination—the Hotel Egbert—Philip is made to promise he will not seek to follow her from the taxi and reluctantly consents. After a romantic farewell the mysterious lady disappears within the portals of the hotel without having lifted her mask and without revealing her identity. Philip is so enamoured of her that he ignores the promise not to follow her farther and returns to the hotel only to learn with dismay that she has passed directly through the lobby and entered another taxi on the opposite side. Philip vows then and there to find her again and learn her real identity. Ere he does so events of the most surprising sort occur—events that make "The Masked Heart" an exceptionally interesting story.

Directed by Edward Sloman.

Edward Sloman, who produced previous Russell-American subjects, staged "The Masked Heart," and to those who have witnessed his masterly productions on the screen this fact alone is an assurance of quality. Bookings on the entire series of William Russell pictures may be made at Mutual Exchanges everywhere. Other subjects in this series are :"My Fighting Gentleman," "High Play," "The Frame-Up" and "Shackles of Truth."

Newest Chaplin Film Is Packing Theatres

Capacity houses are the rule at every theatre showing Charlie Chaplin's latest offering—"The Immigrant." One and all are agreed that it is the biggest laugh getter on the screen today. "The Immigrant" and ten other Mutual-Chaplin Specials can be booked now at any Mutual Exchange.

"Few photo plays possess the gripping fascination that characterizes this remarkable production," says the Clarkesburg, West Virginia Exponent of "High Play," a recent William Russell production. "Photographically speaking and from the point of stage direction, the piece is a studio triumph."

The plays of the new William Russell Series are playing to capacity business the country over. These Russell Pictures are picked by shrewd exhibitors as the best box-office tonic on the market. If you want to see a waiting line in front of your theatre arrange right now to play the whole Russell Series. You can book them at the nearest Mutual Exchange.

PARALTA PLAYS INC.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN
"A MAN'S MAN"

PETER B. KYNE'S play of romance staged in the unknown places where civilization and savagery lock in the death struggle; where men of iron hearts are moulded by a woman's tenderness; where Knave and Knight cross the barrier to confront each other in the great reckoning; where nobility and courage throw down the gage to evil and intrigue and the gun-brand leaves its seared and indelible impress upon the brow of a scoundrel.

THE PARALTA PLAN

FURNISHES each Paralta Plan Exhibitor with 24 big feature Paralta Plays a year.

Assures to each Paralta Plan Exhibitor all Paralta Plays in which Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan and other Paralta Stars appear.

Gives each Paralta Plan Exhibitor exclusive control of the showing of these productions in a defined exhibiting territory.

Charges each Paralta Plan Exhibitor only a "rock-bottom" price, which is made fixed and unalterable in his Paralta Exhibiting Franchise Agreement.

Permits each Paralta Plan Exhibitor to show each Paralta Play as long as he may desire on its first showing in his house.

Provides that each Paralta Plan Exhibitor may make future repeat runs without additional charge.

ASSURES each Paralta Plan Exhibitor certainty and stability in bookings, charges and in quality of productions.

Shows each Paralta Plan Exhibitor how the Paralta Capacity Plan—the development of the full possibilities of his exhibiting territory—will give him packed houses.

Relieves each Paralta Plan Exhibitor of all doubt. The Paralta Plan is a fixed, permanent, immovable and unalterable 12 months contract—the Gibralta of film distribution.

Everyone seeks a sure thing. What could be surer, or more certain, in the moving picture business?

"BUY THE PLAY, NOT THE DAY." A penny postal card bearing your name will bring you all the details.

WE ABOLISH ADVANCE DEPOSIT SYSTEM

NOTICE TO EXHIBITORS

When the system of advance deposits was introduced into our business to guarantee contracts I announced

1. That these sums would be held in a separate trust fund, apart from our business bank accounts, and that they would be withdrawn from time to time when earned by film rentals.
2. That a cash discount of six per cent. upon the amount deposited would be allowed.

These agreements have been kept. The unearned advance deposits of the K-E-S-E Service are deposited separate from our business funds in the Harriman National Bank of New York, the Merchants Loan & Trust Company and the Continental Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

Recognizing the justice of the Exhibitors' attitude that the advance deposit works a great hardship upon many whose funds are tied up—one exhibitor tells me that he has on deposit, scattered among various exchanges, without security, the sum of $14,000—and after consultation with the manufacturers associated with me, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Mr. Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Company, and Mr. Spoor, of the Essanay Company, I take pleasure in announcing that

K-E-S-E WILL ABOLISH THE SYSTEM OF ADVANCE DEPOSITS.

No further collections will be exacted to guarantee rental contracts by Keys Service.

Funds now in our hands will be returned to their owners as soon as adjustments can be made and current business protected. These adjustments and refunds will be made from the home office through our branches, and will require some time for the labor of accounting, but all will probably be closed out before August 1st.

It is necessary that our rental charges be protected, and I confidently look for the co-operation of exhibitors in asking payment of each rental charge before shipment of the film.

ARE YOU BRAVE?

This is a question every man must ask himself in this time of war. In the Essanay photodrama taken from Mary Brecht Pulver's famous story in the SATURDAY EVENING POST, a young soldier who quit his company at his mother's behest, discovers he is a coward. Despising himself, and stung by the sneers of his friends, he re-enlists. Risking his life to save a friend he finds he is a coward no longer.

"The Man Who Was Afraid"

Facts and Comments

PUT your shoulder to the wheel. The usual summer slack season is here, and under the circumstances it was to be expected that the slowing down of business would be more pronounced this season than usual. It seems to us, however, that the thing to do is to put a little more thought, greater effort and added energy into our business, whatever it may be. He is surely a short-sighted theater manager, for example, or exhibitor of pictures who will endeavor to offset reduced receipts by renting junk film for a few dollars less than he would pay for good new productions. One of the staff of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD found such an exhibitor last week who was actually running films that were three years old with the idea of keeping down expenses. This exhibitor was also making less than his usual effort in advertising, if it is possible to do less than nothing. How much more sensible would it seem if this exhibitor had met the decline in business with a little bit better program than usual, a little additional local advertising, a little summer dressing up of the theater and increased ventilation, a few flowers and pots of shrubbery in the lobby and on the platform.

DON'T be a slacker in business. What can you do right now to improve yours, Mr. Exhibitor? A fresh coat of paint, perhaps on only the lobby and ticket booth or the front or the whole theater. How about ventilation? Is your theater cool, clean, fresh looking and inviting? Have you noticed the effect of a few, only a few, growing plants in lobby and near the screen? It's a poor theater that can't be made more inviting than the hot, dusty streets. Is the screen and stage clean and bright to the eye when the audience is gathering or perhaps only looking in at the door? And the ushers a little bit more attentive than usual, finding the best locations, anticipating the desires of your patrons, extending a welcome and making them feel comfortable? Do they pass down the aisles at least once during these hot evenings with glasses of cold water? In other words, just add a bit more in the way of service. All this will count just as surely in the smaller theaters as in the larger houses.

NOW that that matter of the Liberty Bond issue is well taken care of the whole moving picture industry can and undoubtedly will lend a strong and ready hand in helping the Red Cross Fund. Our correspondence this week already tells of circuits of theaters that are devoting the entire proceeds of a matinee, including in some cases, a full day's pay from each of the employees. This is the way to help a good cause and help yourself at the same time. The theater management that keeps at the very front of local efforts of this sort, that lends its theaters and staff and individual effort in securing results for the common cause, whatever it may be, is disarming antagonism and criticism and securing the esteem and respect of its fellow townspeople to an extent that it could in no other way.

CONVENTION week in Chicago is July 14 to 22. Are you planning to have your State represented by live men, who are familiar with the exhibitors' side of every question and who will refuse to be used merely as the tool of those seeking their own personal advancement? We have already had more than a hint of what may be expected at the convention (see letter of the Secretary of Manhattan Local on page 1917 of June 23 issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD). Insure better conditions for next year by your attendance or representation at the convention. Put a real exhibitor at the head of the League and not one who simply wants the office to enable him to sell something of his own. That is merely making the League presidency a tail to his own little kite, no matter with how much specious argument the present incumbent may try to becloud the real issue.

EVERY branch of this industry will undoubtedly experience a boom in business as soon as the first shock of our entry into the war and depression of the summer months pass. The manufacturers and exhibitors of moving pictures should, however, carefully study the best type of productions for the coming season. No war pictures will be wanted, or only a few, showing drilling and preparation of troops. Good comedy, comedy-drama, strong dramatic subjects glorifying home life and home ties, historic and biographical subjects that stir manhood will be acceptable. To an even greater extent than under normal conditions in times of peace should the pictures in all our theaters be selected with a view to furnishing entertainment and amusement, and they should avoid to an equal extent exerything that will remind us of that which will be ever present in most minds.

Our Lost Opportunities

By Louis Reeves Harrison

The war has driven from our vocabulary
So far as strange events are concerned
The meaning and the very word "improbable."
Things imagined before now daily happen;
Desperate chances rarely believed in
Have now become a regular occurence.
The wildest adventure, almost inconceivable,
The craziest melodrama, has now become prosy.
Exciting romance of our youthful fancies
Is now the bitterest truth of realism.
We cannot realize that we are living
In a marvelous period of human activity,
Participating in a clash of purposes,
Of commercial interests, of lofty thoughts,
Of noble sentiments inspiring democracy
Against desperate schemes to save autocracy.
This is especially true of non-thinkers,
Lost in their own individual struggles.
The daily grind takes all their energy.
They are impelled by immediate surroundings,
Compelled to think within a small circle.
And we are feeding them slender rations
Of the tasteless storage warehouse kind
Instead of material fresh from real life.
True art, according to Lyof Tolstoy,
Expresses the best ideal of our times.
It fashions the cosmic pattern of history.
But true art must spring from minds capable
Of understanding all the diverse factors
Which enter into events of this period.
They are like so many threads interwoven
Through the complete design of a tapestry.
In order to produce an impressive effect
By a screen revelation of great power
One must study the guiding and shaping of it,
Know how to construct according to principles.
Just so it is necessary to scrutinize,
Not only the tremendous events of today,
With their infinity of dramatic material,
But the story must dig beneath the surface
And bring to light meanings and motives.
Why is it that the ordinary plain soldier
Of a European power highly intelligent
Does not even know what enemy nation
He will be called to arms to fight against?
Find the starting place of this enmity
And determine whether it is justified
By the maintenance of a great principle
Affecting our lives and our happiness,
Or if it is a mere outburst of insanity
On the part of self-appointed monarchs.
Contrast the spirit of this republic,
Which seeks to enforce the rights of man
To liberty of thought and spiritual freedom
With that which would repress the conscience
Of men and nations by ruthless warfare.
Picture it through romantic adventure,
Enforcing it with powerful contrasts,
With scenes that stir the hearts of men,
And there will be no need of preachment.
Show that all of our civilization
Is being destroyed or pushed aside
Or threatened by the hideous monster
Who rolls his bloodshot eyes to heaven
And thanks our God that he is allowed
To revel on in bestial slaughter.
He who tore the heart of Belgium,
Whose greedy claws are reaching outward
For lovely France and struggling Russia,
Whose yellow fangs have long been dripping
For this rich morsel beyond his clutches,
Who lives for himself, not for his people.
He has had them trained from childhood
Not to think in terms of fatherland
Disassociated from the Hohenzollern.
Me and my God and my greedy family
Are totally apart from common folk.
How citizens of splendid intelligence,
Such as there are many in "Mittel Europe,"
Can subscribe to any such insane illusion
Is beyond the grasp of rational thinking.
It is entirely a question of psychology
To reveal what is behind this warfare.
We easily guess that it is love of power
Permeating the people through their rulers.
The whole idea is that of world conquest
Not for the people, but at their expense,
Yet they are the ones who make it possible.
Nothing is more interesting on the screen
Than powerful character development.
It is really the essence of human interest
In all that the human thinks and does.
Such is the element we have yet to enjoy
In plays dealing with our present ideals.
We are picturing movement without motive.
While dealing with the largest of questions
We must come to reveal the individual soul.
That is the finest kind of artistry.
What is the soul of men at this time,
When called upon to give up their comforts
And the liberty our ancestors made for us
In order to guard and cherish that freedom?
Are we out of harmony with the purposes
Of our best men and of our government?
Is not our weakest spot our confidence
That there is nothing at all weak about us?
Is not our let-well-enough-alone policy
That of Tories during the Revolution?
Much could be illustrated by plays historical
Of our present disturbed condition of mind.
We need not depict military operations.
Our place is to portray the impression
They make on our civilizing forces.
There are some weaknesses now coming out
In our social and political systems
Which have hitherto been unsuspected.
The remedies now being hastily provided
Are not entirely beyond our criticism.
The situation is replete with material
For the drama, and it will grow more so
During our immediate war preparations.
We are social and political animals.
Our story is that of our experiences.
Our tragedies are those of our mistakes,
With a sprinkling of comedy besides.
We are to become a giant participant
In a great world battle for freedom.
Let us picture ourselves and our destiny.
Let us expose folly, fraud and imposture,
Make ourselves worthy of our own ideals,
Take our place at the council of nations
To re-establish peace, justice and liberty.

Here We Are Again

By Sam Spedon

AFTER vacating this page for a week we return to our job of commenting upon a few timely subjects of more or less consequence. If you like or dislike them don't tell us, you might encourage us to do better or stay away longer next time.

A GOOD SIGN.

The many recent additions to the membership of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry seem to indicate that the manufacturing interests are alive to the part they play in the business interests of the industry. They also indicate that the association will have a strong representation at the National Convention in Chicago to look after its business interests. The association claims that it now has about 75 per cent. of the big producing companies in the organization and by July 1st it expects to have 90 per cent. enrolled, which means that it will start on its second year with every assurance of a national organization worthy of the industry. This looks like business and it should be able to accomplish wonders for the good of the industry. One of the first steps necessary to make the National Association a greater power for good is the acquisition of a reserve fund to which every member should contribute a proportionate amount. We hope they will take the step.

OPEN AND CONTRACT POLICY.

During our recent trip to North Carolina and the convention of exhibitors of that state we took occasion to open a discussion here and there of the merits of open and program bookings. The consensus of opinion and argument favored the program or contract system as being a protection to the exhibitors as well as the exchanges. It insures the exhibitors obtaining features for the time contracted without inference from competing exhibitors and at the same time it insures the exchanges against loss and damages. As to the deposit demanded by exchanges, the exhibitors were not generally opposed to that if they could feel their deposits were secured and they would receive a fair interest on their investment when held for any length of time. In defense of the deposit system the exchanges claim that the cancellation clause in the contracts makes it possible for the exhibitor to cancel service and receive his money any time he wants it and the salesmen with whom we talked said they did not know of an instance when the money had been withheld, unless it were for loss or damages, which had not been settled by the exhibitors. A very forceful but homely argument advanced in favor of the deposit system was this: "If a man hires a full dress suit of clothes, he is obliged to leave a deposit to cover loss and damages as well as pay the price of rental."

BOOKING BY STARS.

The general opinion of exhibitors favors stars. They want the stars and claim their patrons want them. Very rarely a star is hitched to a poor picture and story, which always assures a good house and satisfactory box office receipts. Outside of trade paper advertisements the names of the producers mean nothing. On the billboards and in the local newspapers the stars are the whole thing, unless it may be in the case of a picture that has had national advertising and met with universal approval. How this undeniable popularity of stars will affect the system of booking by stars we can only guess; the exhibitors are waiting, like the producers, to see how the experiment works before expressing an opinion. Its success will depend largely upon the stars and there again the stars are the acknowledged attractions. We will have to wait and see.

ACKNOWLEDGED WITH THANKS.

While in Washington, D. C., we called on Robert W. Wooley, who is head of the publicity department of the Liberty Loan bonds. He spoke of the wonderful assistance that had been rendered the Government by the motion picture industry and the great power of the screen, which he considered a close second to the press. When governments the world over recognize the power of the screen is it expecting too much of those who control it to exercise all due precaution and individual censorship to make sure it is not contaminated and prostituted?

We paid our respects to Francis Holly, director of the Department of Public Instruction, who showed us several letters acknowledging the service of motion pictures which he had sent into the mountain districts of Tennessee and backwoods of Maine, some places seventy miles from a railroad, to entertain and enlighten those who could not afford to come in contact with the more advanced communities and far-distant countries of the world.

VARNER A CANDIDATE.

The announcement of H. B. Varner as a candidate for the presidency of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is the first open declaration of a candidate for the office. He is to be commended for throwing his hat in the ring and becoming a candidate on his record without first receiving the endorsement of the New York and Chicago "leaders" who have heretofore exercised the right to make and unmake officers of the national organization and control the industry through their political affiliations and a "trade journal." We hope the other candidates for the office will now come out in the open and give everybody an opportunity of "sizing up" their fitness. The importance of selecting the right man for such a position cannot be overestimated any every exhibitor whether a member of the league or not, or a delegate to the national convention or not, should give the matter deep and serious consideration. He should use his influence to elect a man who has the qualifications necessary to make the presidency of the national league a credit to the organization and a power for good in the industry.

Encourage Your Convention

By SAM SPEDON.

EVEN in these turbulent times there is no reason why we should not keep up a pleasant exterior and keep on doing business the same as usual. Things are bad enough and there is no need of making them worse. If we were to follow the opinion of some folks we would at once clothe ourselves in sack cloth and ashes, retire into asceticism and close up shop. There is more need of doing business and keeping alive now than ever before. It is one of the biggest mistakes possible to indirectly discourage in any way the convention at Chicago by trying to belittle the exposition and circulating false rumors at this late date. Read what President Wilson and the Merchants' Association say:

WANTS CONVENTIONS TO GO ON.

The Merchants' Association has placed itself on record today as urging that the annual custom of conventions or organizations, especially trade and commercial bodies, should be held despite the war. The association takes the ground that such meetings and gatherings are more necessary and helpful at this time than at any other.

The expense attached to these meetings, the association asserts, is trivial as compared to the vast amount of good accruing, and now that this country is striving to husband all its resources it would be false economy to eliminate these meetings. The association, through its president, William Fellowes Morgan, wrote President Wilson last week urging the Chief Executive to discourage the postponement of these conventions and annual meetings.

He received this response from the White House:

> My dear Mr. Morgan:
> The President asks me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 6th and to say that he agrees with you that there is no sufficient reason for foregoing the holding of conventions and general commercial meetings by business interests, so far as he can see.
> J. P. Tumulty, Secretary to the President.

Censorship of This Kind Undesirable

By Sam Spedon.

ONE Theodore Hanson, who has appointed himself the emissary of all that is truly good and immaculately pure, has recently been circulating himself through Colorado advocating a bill that provides for a board of censors in every city, to supervise all matters of public welfare pertaining to public health and morals, public benevolence and charities of said cities, also to have the supervision and regulation of theaters, public dance halls and other places of public amusement or recreation, maintained or conducted for profit or otherwise. Said board to fix their own salaries, to be paid by a special tax levy.

No one seems to know where the aforesaid Hanson gets his authority to "plug" for this bill, but he persistently sets forth its merits before church societies and other organizations that give him a hearing and in some cases he insists upon being heard where he is not specially invited or welcome.

Mr. Hanson is apparently, consciously or unconsciously, promoting a censorship bill to add to the spoils of ambitious politicians who see some fat pickings at the expense of the motion pictures. These same motives plus notoriety, are answerable for a legion of "public spirited" reformers who are more than anxious to become saviors of the people and custodians of their morals.

The public has as much use for these censors as a cat has for two tails and all fair minded and decently inclined citizens are getting "hep" to the motives which prompt them to agitate the need of them.

The Film Exchange Board of Trade of Denver, Col., received the following letter on Feb. 10 from Mrs. Fred Dick, state president of Colorado Branch of National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association; Mrs. W. R. Ramsey, president of the Denver District of Parent-Teacher Association; Mrs. Ralph Palmer, chairman of Committee of Better Film Movement; Julia Tyler Davis, chairman of Child Welfare Committee:

> The committee representing the Mothers' Congress and Parent-Teacher Associations which has been working for better films for the city of Denver wish to express their appreciation to the Film Exchange Board of Trade of Denver and Rocky Mountain Screen Club for their splendid co-operation.
> In a very short period we have accomplished a movement that has invariably failed in other parts of the United States and so great has been our success that it has attracted attention and inquiries from all over the country. We went at this movement for better films in an unusual way. We did not demand or try to force the exhibitors to stop showing undesirable pictures, but proved to them by liberal financial showings that the mothers of Denver desired and would patronize picture houses that showed films approved by the Mother's Congress. To our surprise the exhibitors—even the worst offenders—agreed to co-operate with us, and the result is altogether gratifying.
> Our success leads us to believe that the real way to accomplish public welfare reform is not by legislation, but by a concerted movement by those people most concerned, which movement we feel sure can be successful if conducted in a co-operative spirit.
> Legislation on public welfare invariably means helping a political machine, lays open an opportunity for graft, antagonizes the amusement concerns so that they only just keep on the legal side and causes the taxpayers a large amount of needless expenditure, while our method has made the exhibitors feel the weight of public opinion and has been fair to both sides with pleasant relations established.

The above communication from Denver expresses the sentiments of all fair and public spirited citizens in every community and we can trust them in co-operating with the exhibitors in protecting the morals of the public as far as motion pictures are concerned.

Theodore Roosevelt, American

Colonel Officiates at a Flag Raising at the Church of a Member of the Moving Picture World Staff.

THE Rev. W. H. Jackson, who has been a member of the staff of this paper for many years, is the pastor of the Oyster Bay Reformed Church of Brookville, Long Island, as some of our readers know. This church is situated only a few miles from Sagamore Hill and has had a most active branch of the Red Cross Society at work for some time. The Rev. Mr. Jackson is the type of minister who believes churches should be the centers of and leaders in every good work affecting the welfare of the individual and the nation. Consequently he and the members of his congregation arranged for a patriotic flag raising on Sunday, June 24, in connection with their Church and Red Cross activities.

Colonel Roosevelt kindly agreed to be present, to the great gratification of his neighbors and friends, and his presence was another excellent evidence of his ever ready and generous willingness to help at all times. Whatever our political faith or religious creed, no one can question the genuineness, the virility and militancy, the adequate breadth, length and depth of Colonel Roosevelt's type of American spirit. In the course of his short address he paid his respects to the hyphen who was not first of all an American and reminded his hearers that it would take seven hyphens to classify himself if they considered ancestry. One could not help wishing that every man, woman and child in our great country might have been within the sound of his voice to have absorbed a little of the American spirit and backbone that will be so necessary during the coming months.

There is only space for a few of the many epigrams that followed in rapid succession in the course of his stirring address. He reminded his hearers that the same obligations must apply in international relations as apply in their own neighborhood. Besides refraining from wrongdoing to others they have got to prevent wrongdoing. No man who hasn't got it in him to fight for those who are near and dear to him is fit to be tolerated anywhere. There is no justification for universal suffrage without universal service. Equality of rights means we've all got equality of duties. "What more doth the Lord require than to do justice?" the Colonel quoted from the Bible, and continuing, said that you can't do justice except by strength and the willingness to use your strength in doing justice. That means, if necessary, to fight for justice. This nation can do justice now only by sending its sons abroad to fight for justice. It was in this address that the Colonel revealed the fact that two of his sons had already gone to join Pershing and that other sons would follow.

He urged every one of all ages to give whatever service lay within their power and reminded them that service in many different lines was required. The great work before the American Red Cross of preparing to care for the wounded and for the American prisoners if any were taken and interned in enemy countries was pointed out as well as the humane and urgent work of caring for the hunted civilians of other countries.

Not every pastor or church or community is fortunate enough to be within a few miles of famous Oyster Bay as is the Rev. Mr. Jackson, of the Educational Department of the Moving Picture World, but this echo of former President Roosevelt's remarks will be well worth more space and the consideration of every reader at this time of crisis not only in our nation's history but in the democratic life of the whole world.

Sennett Withdraws from Triangle

Future Plans Not Known—Hart Serves Notice on Triangle—He and Ince May Connect with Big Company.

MACK SENNETT, founder and producer of Keystone Comedies, has withdrawn from Triangle. Papers definitely releasing Sennett from the Triangle Film Corporation were approved on Friday, June 22. The Keystone trademark will be retained by Triangle, and production of the comedies, as well as production of all other Triangle pictures, will be supervised by H. O. Davis, general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation. It is not definitely known just what Sennett intends to do. Rialto rumors have it that he will produce comedies independently, but more credence is given the belief that he soon will tie up with a big film company.

Several other threads have been more or less straightened out of the tangled Triangle skein during the week just passed, chief of which is William S. Hart's notification to Triangle Film Corporation that he no longer will appear in Triangle productions. Hart has cast his lot with Thomas H. Ince, who a week ago retired as supervising director of Triangle productions. Hart contends that his contract specifies that all Hart pictures shall be supervised by Mr. Ince. He also asserts that other clauses in the recently signed document automatically made the contract invalid when Mr. Ince ceased to rule Culver City. Hart likens his contract to that of Douglas Fairbanks, who quit Triangle and was successful in the legal proceedings that followed.

Mr. Davis combats Mr. Hart's assertions with the statement that the clause in the contract to which the latter refers is not analagous to that of Fairbanks' contract; that the clause is merely to the effect that Mr. Ince must direct Mr. Hart "as long as he is supervising director." Mr. Davis said that the clause was inserted to prevent the possibility of Mr. Hart's being directed by any one of less ability than Mr. Ince. The star recently has been directing his own pictures, but always under the direct supervision of Mr. Ince.

It is known along Broadway that Mr. Ince and Mr. Hart have been in almost daily communication with one of the biggest program companies in the business, but no definite announcements have been forthcoming. It is a safe venture that the matter will reach the courts before being cleared up.

MARION E. WONG, CHINESE FILM PRODUCER.

THE Mandarin Film Company, located in Oakland, Cal., is composed entirely of Chinese—all the officers of the company as well as the actors and actresses. Miss Marion E. Wong is president of the concern, which has recently completed its first production, entitled "The Curse of Quon Qwon."

Marion E. Wong.

Miss Wong is now in New York City in the interests of her company and its first production. The principal female parts are played by Miss Wong and her sister, who are American born and are well known in Oakland and vicinity. They have also lived in Canton City, China, for a time, and all the latter part of their first picture was made in China.

The Mandarin Film Company expects to continue the production of films dealing with Chinese subjects, and, needless to say, all the details and settings in its films will be correct from the Chinese viewpoint. The company has its own studio in Oakland, constructed and designed entirely acording to Chinese ideas and equipped with a large stock of Chinese costumes and properties. It is the only Chinese producing concern in this country.

MOTION PICTURE CONTENDERS WIN DEBATE.

Members of the Young Women's Hebrew Association of Yonkers recently debated with representatives of the Young Women's Christian Association of that city the following question: "Resolved, That the motion picture is not a detriment to the welfare of the people." The affirmative was sustained by the former association—and it was awarded the decision. Which would indicate that not only did the winners have the advantage of the facts, but knew how to present them.

Edith Storey Goes to Metro

Talented Screen Player Will Be Seen in Six Special Seven-Part Productions—Baker and Carewe to Direct.

EDITH STOREY has joined the Metro organization. Her first work will be in a series of a half dozen productions averaging seven reels in length. The first of these subjects will be directed by George D. Baker and the second by Edwin Carewe.

Under a special marketing arrangement these productions are to be sold to the exhibitor at a price which he can afford to pay, and this providing for big productions at a price which is not exorbitant is regarded by the Metro management as one of the important features of the announcement.

Edith Storey.

Edith Storey is one of the best known women on the screen. She has been a favorite of picturegoers for practically a decade, her first work having been with Vitagraph as a little girl. Then she went to Texas with Melies, in the days when William Clifford was playing leading roles and Francis Ford the heavy. Miss Storey was an accomplished horsewoman, one of the best the screen has known. She has not forgotten how to ride either, as is seen sometimes these days. She is one of the few players who have been equally successful in "cowgirl" or in society roles. Many will maintain that in the combination she has no peer.

Her work in "The Christian" alone was of sufficient strength to settle any question in the minds of the Metro officials that her engagement would add to the Metro output. There are many other larger productions, however, in which her acting has been the feature. "The Island of Regeneration" is one of these. Then there are "Dust of Egypt," "Price for Folly" and "The Tarantula."

"In signing this great artist to a long time contract Metro is carrying out its policy of providing the best talent the field affords for the exhibitor," said Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro. "She will appear in the biggest productions obtainable, which will be given to the exhibitor at a price he can afford to pay. We have been very fortunate in getting subjects for her which do not have to be changed to allow the star to show her screen ability, for there is none too great for her.

"While we feel like congratulating ourselves on the signing of Miss Storey, we must congratulate the exhibitor and the public, for she will appear in Metro productions de luxe worthy of her ability. I do not have to tell the exhibitor in whose theater Miss Storey's pictures have appeared of her great drawing powers."

ADDITIONAL OFFICES FOR GOLDWYN.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation now occupies the entire Forty-second street wing on the seventh floor of the Rogers Peet building. The new offices overlooking Forty-second street, where the executive and sales organizations are located, were formally opened June 18, and Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures and chairman of the Advisory Board, celebrated "moving day" by transferring his office to the newly completed addition. The Goldwyn executive offices now occupy an entire wing of a building almost a city block in length.

Marines Have Official Cameraman

Quartermaster Sergeant Leon H. Calverly, Formerly With Mutual and Fox, Will Record Doings of "Soldiers and Sailors, Too."

IN THE regiment of United States marines under Colonel Charles A. Doyen, which has been ordered to France, is Quartermaster Sergeant Leon H. Caverly. Sergeant Caverly is to be more than a fighter—he is to take along with him his camera and record for the films of today and of later days the activities of the marines. Some of his work will be seen in the regular releases of the weeklies.

Sergeant Caverly, who joined the marines at the outbreak of the war, knows his camera. He was at one time an operator of the Mutual Weekly, and for that publication traveled to South America. Also he was one of the cameramen for "The Daughter of the Gods," the big production featuring Annette Kellermann.

The work assigned to Sergeant Caverly will be no "snap." Nearly 20 per cent. of the cameramen working at the front have been killed or wounded. It is a matter of pride to all Americans that the marines are nearly always the first fighters on a job, and that they make complete work of it. Lieutenant Charles P. Cushing, of the Marine Corps, says that so far as is known in the bureau with which he is connected the marine division is the only branch of the United States service which has so far appointed an official cameraman.

The Roll of Honor

ROLAND BOTTOMLEY, whose work in "The Neglected Wife" and "The Grip of Evil," two Pathe releases, have made him known to motion picture fans, is doing his "bit." He has joined the Officers' Training Corps in Toronto. After three months' intensive study in the university there, he will go to England and train for three months more at the Cambridge University and then will receive a commission in the English army.

George Beranger, who has just completed work in the new Triangle play "Time Locks and Diamonds," and who recently has been an assistant director at the Triangle studio, left this week for Australia, his native land, where he will join the army.

Claude Fulgham, formerly of the Vitagraph shipping department at Chicago, has enlisted in the navy. He is now at the Great Lakes Training station.

S. N. Kanner, formerly with the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., and manager of the Elite theater, San Francisco, and George L. Frye, an operator largely with the Burlingame theater, Burlingame, Cal., have joined the Eighth Reserve Regiment of Engineers and have left for training at American Lake, Wash.

The Portland Pathe office is about to lose through enlistment W. S. Morse and H. C. Wharton, who are enrolled in the Second Oregon Naval Militia. They expect to be called to the colors about July 1. Mr. Morse, cashier, has been given the berth of chief quartermaster, and Mr. Wharton, poster clerk, enlisted as a yeoman.

Frank T. Robinson, who has been covering Maine for V-L-S-E, traveling out of the Boston branch, has enlisted in the ambulance corps.

Everett S. Penick, exhibitor of Elkton, Ky., recently left for Fort Benjamin Harrison, near Indianapolis, Ind., where he has gone into the Officers' Reserve Corps military training camp.

Frank Whittle, assistant to the cashier of the Gaumont Company, has enlisted in the artillery arm of the regular army. Mr. Whittle speaks French fluently, and will be valuable in the "liaison" service.

L. S. Wise, cameraman of Mt. Vernon, Ill., has joined the navy.

Stephen Graham, chief booker of General Film's Twenty-third street exchange, and L. M. Cooper, stock keeper at headquarters, 440 Fourth avenue, have enlisted in the navy.

FAIRBANKS STARTS RED CROSS FUND.

Douglas Fairbanks has organized the "Douglas Fairbanks Chapter" of the Red Cross Fund, which will operate throughout the entire country with the assistance of Artcraft exhibitors showing his "Wild and Woolly."

Exhibitors all over the country showing the subject will present an attractive lobby display with placards urging patrons of the theater to contribute to the Red Cross Fund. A coin box will be placed in the lobby so that patrons may donate their "bit" on passing in and out of the theater. The entire receipts taken in this manner will be turned over to the local red cross organization.

ABRAMS GIVES AMBULANCE TO RED CROSS.

George M. Cohan, now fully established as an Artcraft film star, last week presented to the American Ambulance in Russia organization a fully equipped ambulance donated by Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. Mr. Abrams had the machine built especially for the Red Cross in Russia and in his absence asked the famous actor-author-producer to present the car to Miss Elsa Maxwell, chairman of this body.

George M. Cohan and Miss Elsa Maxwell, Chairman of American Ambulance in Russia.

Promptly upon being completed, the ambulance was shipped to the Fifty-sixth street studio. Miss Maxwell was notified and visited the studio, where the machine was turned over to her with due ceremonies by Mr. Cohan. The ambulance was immediately prepared for shipment and is now en route to Russia, where it will soon see service.

The Great Demand

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

AFTER several years of what may be termed "watchful waiting" the time has at last come when the pictures of a distinct educational type are in demand. It has long been the desire of those who sought an educational standard in moving picture work that a period of popularity should come to their aid. That period is now here. It is hard to imagine a picture house in any part of the United States in which pictures of an educational type are not used. The whole country is alive with a yearning desire for a true knowledge of things as they are, as the people's educator the moving picture exhibitor fails in his mission if he does not meet this great demand of the present day.

In New York City the leading theaters which for several years have given the educational picture a small place now find that the public at large demand a larger share of these pictures which shall give them more facts of the true conditions of the times, not in fragments, but in continuity, with details that shall impress them as these pictures do, with a more thorough realization of events which the cold print of newspapers fails to impart.

The class of pictures more greatly sought for now are of four kinds and may be classified as general knowledge, patriotism, war—its activities and not its miseries—and the Red Cross.

In the general knowledge series such pictures as illustrate the current events of the day are asked for. Never before in history were these events so rapid and important and the public at large so thirsty for them. No pictures were ever more popular than those showing the visits of the English and French commissioners, and the forthcoming pictures will be the reception of General Pershing in France and Commissioner Root in Russia, which, with kindred subjects, will follow in a steady stream for some time to come.

On the subject of patriotism the tide is running high, affording an opportunity for bringing to light the many excellent pictures which only for the fact that they were a few years old have been consigned to a period of forgetfulness. If resurrected, they will come in greater demand than many present day productions. Historical facts never grow old, thus a new birth is given by this era of patriotism to all these subjects which in days gone by have pleased, but which in these days will thrill them.

War Pictures.

On the war pictures it is interesting to know that the educational value of these pictures lies in the fact that they present actually and periodically the events without any of the attendant miseries which are repulsive to every audience. We have grown accustomed somewhat to pictures from the western front; we are now getting them from the eastern front—Macedonia, Egypt and Palestine—in a full growing series which at once creates and satisfies an evergrowing knowledge of the reading public. For some time American audiences were apathetic, but now the apathy has given way to enthusiasm and a passive interest to a besetting demand.

Red Cross Pictures.

Humanity in all its virtue has become a universal attribute. The work of the Red Cross only a few years ago had existed or was supposed only to exist in cases of unusual necessity and severity, and within an extremely limited area, filled only with doctors and trained nurses. It is now becoming worldwide, principally because in every land, especially the United States, it is barely possible to find a community without its chapter, branch or auxiliary. Classes for the home care of the sick, first aid to the injured and instruction in surgical dressings are as common as the schools on the land.

All classes of society, high and low, rich and poor, are again attending school, not for the acquirement of book learning, but for principles far higher—a trained and sympathetic humanity dealing with all the ills of life. This has created a demand for pictures illustrative of all phases of Red Cross work, so that it is becoming a necessary part of every exhibitor to meet these conditions. Classes cannot receive too many illustrations in their own limited surroundings. Where else shall they go except to the picture house, and to whom shall they look except the exhibitor? Along these lines, Mr. Exhibitor, you have the greatest opportunity for at once doing great good, and making felt in the most powerful way that which has long been known, that the moving picture was an educational giant, asleep only because that condition had not arrived that should demand its awakening; and the time has come, and the giant is awake and is meeting the greatest motion worldwide educational demand with herculean response.

Herewith is given a printed sample list of pictures exceedingly useful at this time, and every exhibitor knows where he can get scores more of the same type.

Patriotic and Red Cross Films.

"The Declaration of Independence," Educational Films Corporation of America.

"Battle Hymn of the Republic," Vitagraph.

"American Soldier in the Philippines," Educational Films Corporation of America.

"The Eagle's Wings," (five-part military drama), Bluebird.

"How Uncle Sam Prepares" (five parts), Pioneer Film Corporation.

"Making of a U. S. Jackie," Reel Life No. 15, Mutual-Gaumont.

"Manning Our Navy," Mutual-Rothacker.

"Mobilizing the Red Cross," Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 61.

"Mothers of France" (multiple reel war drama), World Film.

"Our American Boys in the European War" (showing the Red Cross Ambulance Corps at work in France), Triangle.

"Uncle Sam Awake," Rogson Film Company.

"United States Guard in Action" (Reel Life No. 28), Mutual-Gaumont.

"Making a United States Soldier," Universal-Powers.

"A Zeppelin Attack on New York," Mutual Rothacker.

"Romance of a Red Cross Nurse," Vitagraph.

It should be noted that the demand for films described in the above article is so great that Red Cross headquarters are unable to deal with them. In many places exhibitors by agreement with Red Cross branches show suitable pictures and divide the proceeds.

Goldwyn Gives Pictures to Soldiers

In Letter to Secretary Baker President Goldfish Outlines Offer that Means Much to American Troops Abroad.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation, through Samuel Goldfish, its president, has placed at the disposal of the United States' European army prints of all Goldwyn pictures to be produced during our soldiers' stay in France. The offer is made in a letter from Mr. Goldfish to Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and is self-explanatory.

"These pictures and the stars appearing in them will, we believe, bring pleasure to our soldiers and reproduce for them plays and scenes with which they are familiar in their homeland," says Mr. Goldfish in his letter. "The manner of exhibiting the Goldwyn pictures for our soldiers is left entirely in your own hands, subject to whatever assistance or co-operation you desire us to give. To our knowledge many projection operators have enlisted and will be a part of our army in France, so there will be no difficulty on that score.

"Goldwyn likewise desires the privilege of equipping whatever unit of the service that takes this in charge with two standard projection machines and these will be delivered to you wherever and whenever desired. It occurs to us that you may wish this done in conjunction with a unit of the Red Cross, the representatives of the Y. M. C .A., the Y. M. H. A. and such other organizations as may be co-operating with them."

Goldwyn will be ready to ship prints of its first ten productions, and maybe even more of its pictures, on the first troop transport leaving an Atlantic port for France. The first prints will include pictures of Mae Marsh, Maxine Elliott, Madge Kennedy and Jane Cowl, and prints of Miss Garden's first Goldwyn production will follow shortly afterwards.

MARY PICKFORD DOING HER "BIT."

Mary Pickford's latest patriotic demonstration took place recently in San Francisco when she addressed a gigantic mass meeting of ten thousand persons at the Auditorium. The meeting was held to stimulate the purchase of Liberty Bonds and $2,000,000 were subscribed on this occasion. As a result of the great advance publicity, in which Miss Pickford was featured on the front pages of San Francisco dailies, the big Auditorium was jammed to the doors with again as many people outside of the building. As the guest of honor the Artcraft star addressed her many admirers and received an ovation such as even she has never before experienced.

K-E-S-E Abolishes Deposits

Will Return to Exhibitors All Such Funds as May Now Be in Its Possession.

GEORGE KLEINE has announced the abolishment of advance deposit system in connection with Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. This step was taken voluntarily by Mr. Kleine who, when he issued instructions for this new departure, said:

"When the system of advance deposits was introduced into our business to guarantee contracts, I announced that these sums would be held in a separate trust fund apart from our business bank acconts, and that they would be withdrawn from time to time when earned by film rentals, and that a cash discount of 6 per cent. upon the amount deposited would be allowed.

"These agreements have been kept. The unearned advance deposits of the K-E-S-E Service are deposited from our business funds in the Harriman National Bank of New York, the Merchants' Loan and Trust Company and the Continental Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

"Recognizing the justice of the exhibitors' attitude that the advance deposit works a great hardship upon many whose funds are tied up—one exhibitor tells me that he has on deposit, scattered among various exchanges, without security, the sum of $14,000—and after consultation with the manufacturers associated with me, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Mr. Selig of the Selig Polyscope Company, and Mr. Spoor of the Essanay Company, I take pleasure in announcing that K-E-S-E will abolish the system of advance deposits.

"No further collections will be exacted to guarantee rental contracts by Keys Service. Funds now in our hands will be returned to their owners as soon as adjustments can be made and current business protected. These adjustments and refunds will be made from the home office through our branches, and will require some time for the labor of accounting, but all will probably be closed out before August 1.

"It is necessary that our rental charges be protected, and I confidently look for the co-operation of exhibitors in asking payment of each rental charge before shipment of the film."

K-E-S-E is now releasing fifteen reels each week. From its publicity department comes the announcement that it has already inaugurated a vigorous campaign in behalf of Conquest Pictures which, beginning July 14, it will release a program of seven reels each week, made up of a four-reel feature and three shorter subjects of one reel each.

New C. K. Young Company Announced

Popular Actress Takes Business Trip to South and West to Close Contracts with Exchanges.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, who has finally realized her ambition to become the head of her own producing company, left New York last week for a hurried business trip through the southern and middle western states. Temporary offices of the Clara Kimball Young company have been established in Fort Lee, N. J. The productions of the company will be distributed through the medium of the foremost exchanges throughout the country, and it was for the purpose of closing contracts with a number of these exchanges that Miss Young is making the trip.

The first release of the company will be about August 15. The name of the production has not yet been made public, nor have the names of the directors and the supporting players.

Clara Kimball Young spent three days in Dallas, Texas, last week as the guest of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cressey. Mr. Cressey is well known in film circles, holding at present the booking privileges of Selznick pictures. He will control the southern territory on Miss Young's further productions, the contract having already been agreed upon.

Miss Young's popularity in Texas was attested by the many telegrams from exhibitors all over the state requesting that she appear in person at their respective theaters. Owing to pressing business matters concerning the development of her producing company, she was unable, however, to comply with the insistent demand for her appearance, making only two lectures while here.

Sunday night she appeared at E. H. Hulsey's Old Mill theater, where thousands cheered her as she stepped before the screen. Manager Laurence Stewart stated that never before had attendance at the theater been so swelled as it was on this particular night. Miss Young appeared again Tuesday afternoon, making a brief lecture. Prior to her talks she filmed about 200 feet of film in front of the Old Mill, more than a thousand persons getting into the picture, which will later in the week be shown at the theater.

Monday matinee and night Miss Young appeared in person at the leading theater in Fort Worth, thirty miles from Dallas, where she was accorded the same cordial welcome that greeted her appearance here.

National Association Holds Special Meeting

Annual Convention Called for July 18 in Chicago—Asked to Supply Films to Soldiers.

AT A special meeting of the directors of the National Association of the motion picture industry on Thursday, June 21, it was decided to hold its next annual meeting in convention at the Princess theater in Chicago, July 18. The Congress Hotel, Chicago, will be the official headquarters of the association. The different branches of the association will meet at its rooms in New York some time before July 1 to nominate their representatives to be elected at Chicago. A letter from Food Administrator Herbert C. Hoover was read by President W. A. Brady requesting the association to co-operate with the various Federal departments in the publicity propaganda.

A letter from Lieutenant Governor Edward Schoeneck of New York, stated that there were 8,000 regular army soldiers stationed at the State Fair Grounds at Syracuse and asking the various film companies to furnish, without charge, such pictures as will be of interest to the soldiers. Lieutenant Governor Schoeneck, who is president of the State Fair Commission, has stated that a special day will be set aside during the State Fair in September to be known as motion picture day and each producing company will be invited to send one of their stars to appear at that time.

President Brady appointed a committee, consisting of Arthur S. Friend of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. J. Robert Rubin of Metro Pictures Corporation, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, to go to Syracuse and confer with Lieutenant Governor Edward Schoeneck, State Senator J. Henry Walters, Colonel Wright and Chaplain Shouinard, and to take the necessary steps to put into operation any suggestions made by the state officials and army officers.

Export and Import Buys Foreign Rights

Excepting England, Will Handle Metro Productions, Large and Small.

A LARGE international deal was completed last week when a contract was signed and sealed by which the Export and Import Film Company, of 729 Seventh avenue, buys the complete foreign rights, except England, to the entire Metro output. This includes features, serials and any specials or short length productions under the Metro trade-mark. In making this purchase Export and Import verifies its earlier promise of engaging in some sensational film deals.

"The great trouble with American manufacturers," says Mr. Blumenthal, "is that they fail to study sufficiently the foreign situation—particularly the man who makes an individual feature. European buyers pay well and gladly when the subjects justify it. Many a maker here has found that a subject which sold only fairly (or even not as well as that) has found a surprising demand among European buyers. The reason is one of fitness, pure and simple. Many things that are done with no special reason in pictures turn out to be selling points in Europe, because the buying is selective. On the other hand, many a big, expensive subject has fallen completely with European buyers. These are facts; it is established that success here does not imply a hit on the other side."

Paramount to Issue Serial

Beginning in September It Will Release the First of Fifteen Episodes—Big Campaign Planned.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Paramount Pictures Corporation that it will issue a serial of fifteen episodes in September. This is the first serial this organization has put out. It will go to all exhibitors, and special departments will be established in each exchange for the handling of the new product.

A big advertising and publicity campaign will be inaugurated in the very near future for the promotion of this production. Prior to the time the picture is shown in any theater, every person in every city and town will know of this production. Exhibitors' aids and accessories of all sorts and descriptions are being planned for the production, which will help every exhibitor showing the picture to make big money with this serial.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Brandt Calls for National Executive Secretary

President of Brooklyn Local Declares Solution of Problems Is a Salaried Official From Cutside the Business.

By William Brandt.

RECENT events again have demonstrated the great need for proper organization in the motion picture business, and recent events again have demonstrated that when the time for real action comes it is the exhibitors, properly organized, who can be of greatest service to the whole industry.

Here are 16,000 theaters, spread out in every assembly, senatorial and congressional district of the United States, with 16,000 voices able to speak their wishes to every lawmaker in the land; with exhibitors able to mold public opinion by personal contact with their patrons and through the tremendous influence of their screens. Yet on every important question affecting the industry no intelligent, concerted action has been taken. In almost every instance there has been a lack of united front, and in a good many instances everybody shot off in tangents, with the result that the lawmakers were confused and muddled. This has been due to the fact that there has been no central authority directing the line of battle for the exhibitors. Each man has been free to express his own opinion, wrong or right, facts or no facts.

On other equally important matters the same situation exists. The matter of paying a tax for the use of copyrighted music to the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers has never properly been attended to by the National League, because outside of the national convention there was no machinery provided by which the league could take action. Here was a matter that meant a good many dollars and cents to every exhibitor in the country, and yet because the burden was immediately thrown upon the exhibitors of Greater New York no concerted action was taken to find out whether the tax was right or wrong.

At the present writing the locals of the big city are endeavoring to effect some form of settlement on this important question, which will affect their own communities. There are other matters of equal importance that deserve the earnest consideration of the National League and that ought to be acted upon promptly.

It is believed by big business men that should the time come when these 16,000 theaters can be welded together into one solid unit it will be the greatest factor for good possible to conceive. Educational and health campaigns are not only among the possibilities, while others are the complete abolition of the common enemy of the industry, the long-haired reformer, the bad and grafting lawmaker and the bad picture. But before this is accomplished the National League will have to be thoroughly reorganized.

The present league heads have done astonishingly remarkable work with the material on hand, and they are not to blame. The fault lies in an antiquated set of bylaws and a rotten constitution. These ought to be changed and brought up to date just as soon as possible. The very first change ought to provide for the establishment of a permanent headquarters in the film center of New York or Chicago, presided over by a paid executive secretary, a business man, not taken from the film industry, but an outsider, at a good salary, who should be responsible to the executive board of the league and be under orders from that body. He should attend to every detail in connection with the conduct of the league. His office should contain proper data in its files relative to the needs of the organization.

The name, address, location, proprietor and seating capacity of every theater, member or non-member, in the country should be kept on file, and those theaters immediately advised on legislation affecting the business, with the name of the lawmaker of that particular district and his stand. Such an office should be in possession of other material facts, and could be used to secure new membership and collect the per capita dues, besides issuing bulletins of interest to all concerned and disseminate publicity in the places where it would do most good.

Since the inception of the National League it is doubtful if the organization has been run as a business man runs his own business, and the answer is that it has always been considered a secondary proposition. The exhibitor elected as an officer always had his theater to look after, which is his bread and butter. After he was through with his theater and had any time left, he would devote it to the organization, with the result that the organization received scant attention. A man elected to the president's chair cannot be expected to attend to every detail, yet under the present bylaws he must address his own envelopes if he wishes to write exhibitors. It's all wrong, and cannot remain. With due respect, how many exhibitors in the country know who the present secretary is, and where to locate him?

Another section in the bylaws should be the granting to the president of the right to appoint his own executive board as his cabinet, taking a member from each zone of the country. It isn't fair to an executive to burden him with a board that may be opposed to him in policies. As a check the recall should be one of the provisions of the bylaws. If a president and his cabinet or executive board are found lacking, the recall could be exercised. It is done in many countries, and the league should adopt this provision.

Next year the legislatures convene again. We have been more lucky than proficient this year. We may not be so lucky next year, and it behooves us to take real interest in the forthcoming convention, to the end that things progressive shall be accomplished. One thing is certain, either we have an organization or we don't.

The time has come when we must quit bluffing ourselves.

Iowa Convention Marred by Disputes

Decided to Admit Other Than Exhibitors to Membership, Which Causes Talk of a Second Organization.

FROM most of the exhibitors' viewpoint the convention of Iowa Exhibitors held in Des Moines on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 12 and 13, was somewhat of a fizzle. On the other hand a few of the exhibitors and all the exchangemen and jobbers of the state feel the convention was a success.

Out of the 725 exhibitors in the state of Iowa something like 30 exhibitors assembled in Des Moines on Tuesday. There was not enough money in the treasury to send a circular letter over the state informing the film people of the convention, and no arrangements were made for a meeting place or time. Finally through the exchangemen the exhibitors were gotten together at the Chamberlain hotel and the meeting was called by Acting Secretary W. F. Ingledue.

C. C. Quinn, of the Iowa theater in Emmetsburg, was appointed acting secretary and the question of the reorganization of the league was brought up. A committee was appointed consisting of exchangemen and exhibitors. L. A. Sheridan, D. B. Lederman, R. C. LiBeau, N. C. Rice, W. H. Mart, George De Baggio, Ludy Boston, Abe Frankle, W. F. Ingledue, C. C. Quinn and a few other exhibitors composed this committee, which adopted the set of rules of the National Exhibitors' League, arranged for the adoption of some bylaws, discussed ways and means of raising money, and the all important question as to whether the exchangemen would be admitted to the association as full-fledged members or associate members. And on the last business the committee stuck—in fact the whole convention stuck.

On Wednesday morning the convention met again and the question of the disposal of the exchangemen came up again. The great opposition came from four of the more powerful exhibitors from the northern part of the state. They were stubborn in their wish that the exchangemen be barred from full-fledged membership and the convention was fast becoming a debate when Dan Lederman of the local Universal Exchange took the floor and by an impassioned appeal turned the sentiment, except in a few cases, for the full-fledged membership of the exchangemen. The association was named the Motion Picture Industry of Iowa, and exhibitors, exchangemen, supply men and in fact, representatives of every branch of the industry are eligible to membership.

Wilbur Ingledue of the Strand in Marshalltown, was appointed president, Abe Frankle, of the Majestic and Casino of Des Moines, vice president; F. R. Bandy, of the Princess of Britt, second vice president; Ludy Boston, of Muscatine, third vice president, and Forrest Secor, of the Forest theater, of Forest City, secretary and treasurer.

An executive board of ten was appointed with J. J. Clark, of Bedford, chairman. Delegates are to be appointed, one for each county in the state, who will represent the Industry. Several committees were formed, among them a committee on railroads and express, entertainment, convention and grievances.

In fact, the Motion Picture Industry of Iowa, if plans are carried out as they should be, ought to be of great aid to every branch. On the other hand the exhibitors on a whole do not feel satisfied. N. C. Rice, of Algona, is perhaps the most prominent of exhibitors, who feel that the convention failed in its object. In fact Mr. Rice and his followers, who by the way are not few, have written to Fred J. Herrington, national organizer, asking that he come to Des Moines and help them in forming an exhibitors' league.

Louis Rosenfield, of the Temple Grand in Creston, is another of the influential exhibitors who is sticking fast to the Exhibitors' League alone.

The collection of initiation fees collected at the convention was the largest in the history of the Iowa history. The industry is planning another convention the first week in October and for a publication to be published in the interest of the industry and sent to each exhibitor. However, since the exhibitors of Iowa have never been able to guide themselves in the formation of a league, it is perhaps better that for a time at least they have the benefit of the exchangemen's initiative.

The exhibitors present were: George De Baggio, Star, Colfax; C. W. Pence, Gem, Columbus Junction; F. A. Hughert, Eagle, Grand Junction; L. A. Miller, Opera House, Kamrar; F. R. Bandy, Princess, Britt; Forrest Secor, Forest, Forest City; Fred Lane, Orpheum, Centerville; Leo Moore, Majestic, Centerville; Mr. Kenworthy, Lyric, Fort Dodge; J. L. Dowell, Princess, Clearfield; Ludy Boston, Muscatine; W. F. Ingledue, Strand, Marshalltown; Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy, Villisca; Powd McLuen, McLuen, Guthrie Center; A. F. Eide, Lyric, Roland; E. T. Florien, Orient, Marengo; H. J. Lego, Majestic, Fort Dodge; N. H. Rice, Call Opera House, Algona; C. C. Quinn, Iowa, Emmetsburg; W. A. Arthur, Opera House, Bouton; J. J. Clarke, Opera House, Bedford; Fred Gerbracht, Eagle, Eagle Grove; Joe Gerbracht, Star, Ames; C. E. Forrest, Lyric, Farnhamville; W C. Treloar, Ogden; W. H. Mart, Strand, Grinnell; H. A. Beanblossom, Star, Newton; Pete Lemon, Lyric, Newton.

MOE STREIMER GOING TO CHICAGO.

Brooklyn Men Join Civic Bodies

Exhibitors Hook Up With Central Organization of Representative Local Associations.

THE regular appointed meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island was held Saturday, June 9, at the Triangle theater. As usual there was a large attendance of all its members. Several important matters were taken up. The chief one of these was the affiliation by the association with the central civic body of the city.

It was pointed out that one of the great reasons why the exhibitors always found themselves floundering in the mire of abuse and were never recognized as a component and necessary part of the city was because of their inactivity in civic affairs. That the joining of hands and becoming copartners with the various civic organizations of a big community like Brooklyn would be of invaluable help to the exhibitors as a whole was conceded by all.

The central civic organization is made up of representatives or delegates from all the local civic and taxpayer organizations throughout the city. The membership of these locals is made up of the most important business men of their respective localities. The affiliation in this civic body will tend to encourage co-operation between the people and the exhibitors.

The screens of the various theaters can be used to promote large civic movements that will be a benefit to all, and in return the exhibitors can demand proper recognition and can get the absolute help of the civic bodies against any pernicious and disastrous proposed legislation.

The organization appointed the following as its representatives on the directors' board of the civic body of the city: Mr. Grossman, Mr. Lane, Mr. Harring, Mr. Brandt and Mr. Levine.

The organization appointed the following delegates to the Chicago convention: William Brandt, Louis L. Levine, John Manheimer, Samuel Berman and Ben Title. The delegates are going uninstructed.

The executive secretary reported that with few exceptions practically every theater in Brooklyn was now a member. The treasurer reported a handsome balance in the bank and also displayed the receipt for the purchase of $500 Liberty Bonds. A great feature of the Brooklyn meetings is the interest displayed in them by the women exhibitors, who enter each debate with zest.

Maryland Holds Special Meeting

Warmly Discusses Several Questions but Comes to No Decision.

AT 7.30 p. m. on Sunday night, June 17, a special meeting was held by the Exhibitors' League of Maryland in its rooms at the New Theater building, 210 West Lexington street. It is understood this meeting was a little more enthusiastic than those which have been held recently. The topics taken up for discussion included "Shall we or shall we not use service placed in vaudeville theaters?" and "Shall we send delegates to the National Convention in Chicago?" The final report of the ball committee was submitted, as well as the report of committee on the Exhibitors'. Exchange depot.

According to all accounts, the meeting was exciting. Those who attended included W. C. Pacey, Julius Goodman, F. A. Hornig, W. Albers, E. C. Sandell, B. F. Seligman, B. Rosenbauer, J. Louis Rome, Louis Schlichter, F. C. Weber, J. Blechman, Thomas D. Goldberg, L. A. DeHoff, W. E. Stumpf, L. Rubenstein, Miss T. Marks, Frank A. Durkee, William Leicht, V. A. Valentini, Joseph Brodie, Guy L. Wonders, L. Benesch and E. B. McCurdy.

L. A. DeHoff, secretary of the league, states that warm discussions were held on the above mentioned subjects, but that no final decisions were rendered

Daylight Bill Held Up in Committee

Congressman Adamson Refuses to Report Bill—Exhibitors Urged to Write Objections to Representatives.

A CLEVER plan to put over in the House of Representatives a daylight saving bill and secure its enactment into law is seen in the measure recently introduced by Congressman William P. Borland, of Missouri. The plan is buried in "A bill to regulate the time for opening and closing for courts of the United States."

The original bill introduced by Congressman Borland was referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is known that the chairman of the committee, William C. Adamson, is unalterably opposed to any such proposition as therein contained. An effort was made to have the committee take action upon the Borland bill, but Mr. Adamson has not thus far seen fit to call his committee together for its consideration. In an interview with the Washington correspondent of this paper, Congressman Borland said that there are a good many members of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce who favor the bill but that he cannot get a meeting of the committee "because of the opposition of its chairman."

The members of the Senate and the House of Representatives who are advocating this measure do not realize what it will mean to the motion picture business. In the last issue of the Moving Picture World there was printed the warning of Harry M. Crandall, head of a large string of houses in the national capital, who is fully alive to the dangers of the pending legislation. He classes it as a menace which is not exceeded even by a heavy war tax—"daylight saving" would mean the cutting in half, he says, of the receipts from theaters and open-air parks.

All such legislation must be accepted in good faith. It is true that this measure will prove very dangerous to our business, yet, on the other hand, it may be that the saving (?) of an hour will help some other industry. With this in mind, it is for the motion picture exhibitor, aided by the exchange managers and the manufacturers, to educate the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives to the meaning of "daylight saving."

In an interview with the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, a prominent, nationally-known exhibitor said: "I hope that the exhibitors of the United States will awaken to the fact that 'daylight saving' is pending—that if the Calder bill is adopted by the Senate, or the original Borland bill, or its substitute amended, is passed by the House, and one or the other agreed upon by both, it will be found that the motion picture business will be hampered to an extent undreamed of. Everywhere that they have 'daylight saving' and moving pictures, everywhere will you find that the former is accomplishing little, while the latter is losing much.

"I wish you would print in the columns of the Moving Picture World another warning of the pending dangerous legislation, coupled with the suggestion that when the House Committee on the Judiciary holds its public hearing on the new Borland bill, a goodly delegation of 'movie' men put in an appearance and make known their opposition. It is also suggested that all in the industry wire and write their respective members in Congress, stating their views."

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, June 14, 15, 16, 1917.

Morrison Hotel Headquarters for Exhibitors

Exposition Manager Schindler Most Conclusively Answers Those Who Would Postpone Exposition on Account of War.

THE National Exposition and Convention is close at hand, as only two weeks more will pass until the doors are opened and the Seventh National Convention and Exposition are ushered in. From Ludwig Schindler, manager of the exposition, comes word that fourteen new states have been added to the league since the last convention, and that every one of these states has already promised to send its full quota of delegates.

The manager of the exposition desires to make answer to those questionable friends of the league who have advised that an exposition and convention should not be held this year, on account of the war. In answer to their statements Mr. Schindler would refer them to President Wilson's letter, dated June 17, sent to the New York Merchants' and Manufacturing Exchange in reply to E. P. Ritter, who asked if there should be any attempt to do away with business and commercial conventions at this time. This letter, in part, reads as follows:

"In reply to your letter of June 4, allow me to say that I not only see no reason why commercial conventions should be omitted during the war, but should regret to see any instrumentality neglected which has proved serviceable in stimulating business and facilitating its progress. This is not only not a time to allow any slowing up of business, but is a time when every sensible process of stimulation should be used."

"That's it in a nutshell, Mr. Knocker," replies Mr. Schindler, "and our prescription for your ailment is a jug of light wine, a shady spot in July, and an opportunity to read the reports of the big history-making convention and exposition, which will reflect credit on the league and the industry generally."

Arrangements have been made with the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, the latest and most modern hotel, and centrally located at Clark and Madison streets, as the official headquarters of the Seventh Annual Convention. All delegates are requested to write or wire for reservations, as the management desires to place them to the best advantage, so so that they may be well satisfied. The big banquet will be held in this hotel Thursday evening, July 19, and on the night of Friday, July 20, the Morrison will turn over the beautiful Terrace Gardens exclusively to the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, when they will be favored with a special entertainment given in their honor.

Since the last article was written, R. O. Proctor, general manager of the Art Drama Service, in this city, has announced that Jean Sothern and Alma Hanlon will be on hand for Art Dramas' day at the exposition.

B. W. Aaronsen, who has several stars under his personal directions authorizes the announcement that Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Harold Lockwood and Henry B. Walthall will be present at the exposition. Metro has arranged for an artistic booth, and Bushman-Bayne day promises to be one of the most popular of the big July show.

Mutual day will be one of the most prominent of the exposition, as Charlie Chaplin, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes and other Mutual stars will be present.

The exposition committee is working hard on the Red Cross booth, and the manager is eagerly awaiting the arrival of articles from leading and prominent stars in the country. It must be remembered that each of these articles will be auctioned off by some star at the convention, and that every penny received will be devoted to the Red Cross organization.

Moran Heads Michigan Exhibitors

State Convention Also Chooses Claude W. Cody as Secretary —Next Meeting in Detroit.

THE new officers of the Michigan Exhibitors' League, as a result of the election at the annual convention at Grand Rapids, June 12 and 13, are: S. A. Moran, Ann Arbor, president; W. S. McLaren, Jackson, first vice president; Frank Ongie, Hancock, second vice president; Frederick Jacobi, Ionia, third vice president; Claude E. Cady, Lansing, secretary; Paul J. Schlossman, Muskegon, treasurer.

Practically nothing of a definite nature in the way of plans or resolutions were accomplished at Grand Rapids owing to the small representation of exhibitors. When you stop to consider that Michigan has in the neighborhood of 800 theaters and that only about one-half of 1 per cent. showed up, you will realize the utter futility of accomplishing results. But the World correspondent wants to say a word of praise for every exhibitor and every exchange representative who attended the convention. They are to be commended for their interest in the organization.

The semi-annual convention of the Michigan Exhibitors' League, scheduled for some time in December, will take place at Detroit, where no doubt there will be a good attendance. Detroit, after all, is the logical place to meet, being the mecca for motion picture activities in Michigan.

Honor to Whom Honor Is Due

Men and Women Responsible for the Defeat of Guernsey Bill Should Be Remembered by Illinois Exhibitors.

NOW that the shouting and the fighting in the battle over the Guernsey bill have ceased and victory has crowned the efforts of the exhibitors and representatives of manufacturers who fought untiringly against its passage, it is only becoming and just that the legislators who supported them in the struggle should be held in memory by every exhibitor in Illinois. As W. W. Watts, treasurer of the Illinois branch of the M. P. E. L. of A., wrote me concerning these gentlemen, "An everlasting debt of gratitude is due Representatives Lee O'Neil Brown, Clarence A. Jones, Jacob Frisch, Rene Havill, William P. Holoday, James S. Burns and Frank Seif, as they did everything possible to aid the committee representing the exhibitors and manufacturers and showed their kindest consideration at all times."

Senator Manny also rendered great service by his work and able arguments against the bill, and with him are mentioned Mrs. Manny and Miss Powell, the ladies' work, the last named woman being of great assistance to the committee. Mrs. Harry A. Loper is also to be commended for her effective lobbying.

The members of the committee who worked night and day against the bill were William J. Sweeney and Fred Hartmann, of Chicago; W. W. Watts, E. Kuhns, H. T. Loper and H. A. Loper, of Springfield; G. M. Luttrell, of Jacksonville, president of Illinois State League, and J. Pegler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, the only representative of a film company on the committee.

At the last moment Guy Guernsey, father of the bill, informed the exhibitors' committee that the bill as amended in the Senate meant little to him, and that unless the conference committee would let him place the bill back in its original form he would not be very keen to accept it. In spite of this fact he made one of the strongest arguments ever made by him in the House for the bill—amendments and all.

Respecting the eleven exchange members of Chicago, whose names were signed separately to the many telegrams addressed to Mr. Guernsey and offering him their support for his bill, it would serve no constructive purpose to give their names here. The incident, however, is a pitiable commentary on the lack of united effort in the ranks of the men in the industry when a real menace confronts it. It is comforting at least to know that there were only eleven. The remainder were loyal and their names also are known.

The Chicago Examiner is also to be commended for a timely and pointed editorial on the Guernsey bill in its issue of June 11.

Fred J. Herrington Visits Chicago

National Organizer of League Well Pleased with His Recent Trip Through Middle West and Other States.

FRED J. HERRINGTON, national organizer of the M. P. E. L. of A., arrived in the city Thursday morning, June 21, from St. Louis, on his return from a middle western trip which lasted about three weeks. Mr. Herrington visited during that time Wichita, Kan.; Oklahoma, Little Rock, Memphis and St. Louis. In all these cities he was warmly welcomed, in his official capacity, by the leading exhibitors.

From Memphis Mr. Herrington brought back to the national secretary, William J. Sweeney, at Chicago, an application for a state charter for Tennessee, and also a check for the amount covering admission. He also brought a check from St. Louis for the balance due by the State of Missouri on its charter, and also a check in full for its per capita tax, for the year ending April, 1918.

Mr. Herrington states confidently that all the states visited by him on his trip will send full delegations to the Seventh National Convention. He adds that he found a most hearty interest in the proceedings at the coming convention, and that exhibitors are waking up, generally, to the fact that their interests will be best served by having a strong national organization that will include every state in the Union. They especially praised the action of the national organization for its recent strong campaign in the interests of exhibitors against the war tax on theaters. A lively interest was also evinced by exhibitors in all parts of the country visited, in the fitness and efficiency of those who aspire to official positions in the gift of the league.

During his stay in Chicago Mr. Herrington talked with a large number of exhibitors and also met a large gathering at the headquarters of the Chicago local, in the Masonic Temple. He left Thursday, proceeding to Cleveland, where he expects to find a large and enthusiastic gathering. From Cleveland he will proceed to Pittsburgh, where he will stop one night, and thence will attend the state convention of his home state, in Philadelphia, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 25, 26 and 27.

Selig's "Who Shall Take My Life?" Praised.

Maurice Bennett Kovnat, national secretary of the Anti-Capital Punishment Society of America, gave a private presentation of the Selig feature, "Who Shall Take My Life?" last week, to the Chicago members of that society, through the courtesy of William N. Selig. The presentation was given in the private projection rom of the Selig Polyscope Company, where over 100 members of the society were present. Miss Maibelle Heikes-Justice, author of the photoplay, was also present.

Before the run of the feature was begun, Mr. Kovnat delivered a short address complimenting Mr. Selig for the production of this educational picture. He pronounced "Who Shall Take My Life?" the one photodrama which carried the propaganda of the society convincingly, logically and entertainingly.

The showing was given entirely under Mr. Kovnat's direction, and only members and active workers of the Chicago branch were present. Special music was furnished by the society members, and following the presentation the poem, "I Want to Sit by the Side of the Road," was recited by one of those present.

All the members of the society present were profuse in their impressions and appreciation of the film drama and particularly of the lesson it conveys.

Prominent among the members of the Chicago branch of the society are former Governor Dunne, H. N. Higinbotham, Bishop Fallows, Raymond Robins, Attorney Clarence Darrow, Judge Robert McMurdy, ex-Senator Charles Billings and Dr. Sommers.

Many of those mentioned were present, as were also Director and Mrs. E. H. Calvert, of the Essanay Company, who were guests of Miss Heikes-Justice. Director Calvert expressed himself as being pleased with the picture and pronounced the photodrama an extraordinary production in every way.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, accompanied by Mrs. Laemmle and party, arrived in the city Saturday morning, June 16, and after a stay of several days departed for New York. Mr. Laemmle spent two months at Universal City, where he devoted himself to a close scrutiny of every production, not overlooking to pay special attention to the sub-titles.

D. W. Russell, eastern and foreign representative of David Horsley Productions, arrived in Chicago Tuesday, June 19, from Los Angeles, where he spent two weeks in consulta tion with Mr. Horsley. After spending a few days in the city on business connected with the company, he will proceed to New York. Mr. Russell said that Mr. Horsley has four companies working at present, at the Horsley studios and that Mary MacLaren has just finished her first picture for the company. Mr. Russell reported brisk business at all the Los Angeles studios.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, drew my attention to the fact that the other day the novelty carton release, "Seven Cutey Pups," now being distributed on the Universal program, was made by his company, by means of a special process which permits the animation of half-tone cartoons. These subjects are the famous Colby dogs, originally featured on postcards throughout the country by Mr. Colby, who sold more than twelve millions at the time. Mr. Rothacker pronounces "Seven Cutey Pups" a distinct novelty and especially worthy.

He also informed me that the members of the Rothacker company subscribed $4,000 to the first Liberty Loan, and he expects that the company and its employes will do equally well on the next subscription.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, of Chicago and Santa Barbara, and of the Signal Film Corporation, Los Angeles, left for New York last week on a month's business and pleasure trip. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hutchinson. On his return Mr. Hutchinson will leave at once for the Pacific Coast to attend to his film interests there.

The factory girls of the American Film Company's laboratories in Chicago showed their patriotism by subscribing $1,000 to the Liberty Loan.

At the American company's studios in Santa Barbara, Paul Weigel and Antrim Short have been engaged to support William Russell in "Pride and the Man," and Charles Marriot, Joe King, Harold Wilson, Gordon Russell and William Kyle have been engaged for the support of Juliette Day in "Betty and the Buccaneers." Mr. King is Miss Day's leading man.

The Selig company has in readiness a brand new musical score for "The Garden of Allah," which can be obtained for $25. The score includes parts for thirteen different musical instruments and also a combination cue sheet.

"Caleb Conover," in six reels, adapted from Albert Payson Terhune's novel of American political life, will soon be ready for release by Selig. Colin Campbell is the director. Those in the cast are George Fawcett, who appears in the title role; Eugenie Besserer, Frank Elliott, Charles West, Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Goldie Colwell, Frank Clark and William Robert Daly. Mr. Selig announces that he will give out his plans shortly for the handling of this feature.

The girl film inspectors employed in various Chicago exchanges aim at forming a union of their own. This organization, it appears, would be an auxiliary of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union, local 110, as the members of the latter have been backing the movement taken by the girls. About 320 girls are employed in the Chicago exchanges, in the capacity mentioned, and quite a number of them went on strike on Friday, June 15. The girls explain that they are quite satisfied with their hours and are not particularly antagonistic over the pay received by them; but they want recognition as a body of workers. It is not known just what the outcome will be, but exchanges report that they are in nowise seriously affected by the action of their employes.

A meeting of the entire license committee of the council opened in the City Hall, Thursday morning, June 21. The matter of the increase of licenses of Chicago moving picture theaters was taken up, and after a brief discussion it was again referred to a sub-committee for further investigation. As the council adjourns on June 29, until September, it appears that the question will not again be brought up until the fall. This indicates that no change in the license will be made until January 1, 1918.

President Joseph Hopp attended the meeting in the interests of the Chicago local.

The first three single-reel comedies of a series entitled, "Follies of the Week," produced by The Follies of the Week Company, Inc., of this city, for the American Military Relief Association were given a trade showing at the Pathe Exchange, Inc., Wednesday morning, June 20. The pictures are being distributed by the Titan Pictures Corporation, of which F. R. Clark is president, with offices at 202 South State street. The first three comedies shown were Raymond Hitchcock in "Knocking the L out of H. C. L.," Ernest Truex in "The Garden of Allie," and Charles Grapewin in "The Hawaiidiot." The pictures were shown to quite a large gathering.

Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, was a caller on William N. Selig, Wednesday, June 20, while on his way to San Francisco, and during a conversation said: "'The Garden of Allah' is one of three feature pictures that have ever been shown in Keith's Hippodrome, at Cleveland. We presented the film to 30,000 people. The production pleased so greatly that many after the presentations personally complimented us on the character and beauty of the play.

"We used fifty lobby display frames at the Hippodrome, a special music score and some unusual stage effects. Before the picture was screened the curtain arose on a desert scene at night showing an Arab prostrate by his camel. Then a caravan came into view. Immediately following, the Sand Diviner appeared forecasting the story."

Orchestra Hall during the past week has had a most attractive lobby display, one that caused many hundreds of pedestrians on Michigan boulevard to stop and investigate. The display had altogether to do with the showing of the "Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," which will open Sunday, June 24. This picture is released through Pathe Exchange, Inc., and is one of the Official Government Pictures, Inc., of which W. K. Vanderbilt is president. Tom North is special representative here for these pictures, for Pathe Exchange, Inc.

DANIEL LEIGHTON DEAD AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Daniel Leighton, playing in the Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," died suddenly of heart failure in his dressing room at Universal City on June 21 while making up for the stage. Leighton was thirty-seven years old. He leaves a wife and child.

Mr. Leighton was a son of Horace Leighton, a famous Irish actor, and had had a long and successful career on the stage and on the screen.

NORMAN MACDONALD'S ADDRESS WANTED.

Norman MacDonald submitted a script to the World Film Corporation, but neglected to give his address. The World Film, desiring to buy the story, is now seeking to locate the author.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. HARLEMAN

Carl Laemmle Returns East

President of Universal, Before Leaving, Gives a Merry Farewell Party.

ONE of the most notable events in the Los Angeles film colony was the "good-fellowship dance" given by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, at Universal City on Wednesday night, June 13.

Mr. Laemmle after a two months' stay on the Coast had arranged to return to New York on the following day and before he left he wanted to see his family of Universalites and his friends in all the other studios in a merry party. He decided to invite them all to a dance at the plant of the Big U Company. There was a very hearty response and fully three thousand persons were present at the cinema function.

The north stage, one of the largest at Universal City, was converted into a beautifully decorated ballroom, where the stars of the film colony scintillated among the other guests. In addition to the actors and actresses, studio managers and other executives, many of the leading citizens of Los Angeles and Hollywood were guests.

The grand march, which was led by President and Mrs Laemmle, was participated in by more than 750 couples. At midnight an elaborate supper was served, after which the dancing was resumed and continued until the early morning hours. Everybody present voted the affair, which was managed by Henry McRae and Beverly Griffith, a huge success and one of the most enjoyable the community has known.

Ince to Build Los Angeles Studio

E. H. Allen to Be General Manager—Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, William S. Hart and Charles Ray to Go With Ince.

THOMAS H. INCE, who severed his connection with the Triangle Film Corporation last week, will build a large studio of his own in Los Angeles. Mr. Ince is at the time of this writing on his way from New York, so details of his immediate plans are not as yet obtainable. We have learned, however, that the producer intends to build an even larger and more elaborate studio than the present plant of the Triangle in Culver City. The location of the new studio is not as yet decided, but representatives of Mr. Ince have been negotiating with Harry Culver for a large tract of land directly adjoining the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

It has also been stated that Ince may locate in Santa Monica and that the little bay city has offered great inducements to build a studio there.

E. H. Allen, for many years business manager of the Ince studios, has tendered his resignation to the New York Motion Picture Corporation and will be general manager of the new Ince studios. It is stated from authentic sources that William S. Hart, Dorthy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett will go with Ince.

H. P. Keeler, director of publicity of the Culver City studios, has resigned from the Triangle Corporation and will have charge of Mr. Ince's publicity department.

It is stated here that Mr. Ince will positively not tie up with any one organization, but will in all probability release and market his own pictures.

Bernstein to Produce Comedies

Will Add Two Companies—Stan Jefferson to Be Featured—Other Bernstein Activities.

ISADORE BERNSTEIN, energetic head of Bernstein Film Production, makes the announcement that his company will produce comedies. Mr. Bernstein says he feels the war will create a demand for comedy in this country as it has in England and he wishes to be in a position to supply that demand with clean, wholesome humor. Two companies will be put on in a very short time. The first will be headed by Stan Jefferson and the films will be released under the name of Stanley Comedies. Stan Jefferson is from the Fred Karno School of London, from which Charlie Chaplin was graduated. Jefferson was recently in vaudeville, where he was successful.

The second company will turn out films of a different type from those of the Stanley.

Mr. Bernstein is still in the East, but is expected to return about July 1.

Phil Lang Shows Back to Camera.

At Kalem's Glendale Studios Director Paul C. Hurst has completed the fifteenth and final episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree." In support of True Boardman in the title role are Marin Sais, Edyth Sterling, Paul C. Hurst, Ed Hearn, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee and Barne Furey.

The high cost of living is the topic of the latest Ham comedy, directed by Al Santell, entitled "The Onion Magnates' Revenge." John Steppling, as the magnate, succeeds in cornering all the onions in the country, but is relieved of his wealth by Ham and Bud, icemen, who thereupon become millionaires, while the magnate and his daughter become beggars.

Phil Lang, the Kalem production manager, religiously keeps out of the pictures produced at his studio. Phil, however, stepped in with his back to the camera and led the angry mob which clamored for the life of the onion magnate in this week's Ham comedy.

W. S. Hart Given Ovation on Return.

William S. Hart was given a rousing welcome when he returned to Los Angeles after a thirty-day trip around the United States. Big delegations from the Triangle studios at Culver City and Inceville were at the station when the train arrived. A cowboy band led the delegation and a parade was formed, which marched around the town, ending at Clune's Auditorium.

Mr. Hart, in cowboy costume, rode his pinto, Fritz, almost equally well known in filmdom. Rags, Mr. Hart's canine picture companion, was also in line. Old Crowfoot, leading Indian star of Inceville, rode with Mr. Hart. Several score of Inceville and Culver City artists followed in automobiles.

At the Auditorium, where "The Desert Man," Hart's latest picture was being shown an immense gathering greeted the player, both within the house and without, the theater being packed to capacity. .

Farrar Spends Night in Hills.

Geraldine Farrar has contracted a severe case of tonsilitis. Miss Farrar and her husband, Lou Tellegen, were out one evening automobiling. Through an accident the couple were left stranded high in the mountains. In spite of Miss Farrar's heavy wraps she contracted a severe cold before they were rescued early in the morning by a passing motorist.

Miss Marion at Lasky Studios.

Frances Marion, the scenario writer who prepared the version of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" in which Mary Pickford is to appear, has arrived at Lasky Studios. She is engaged in consulting with Miss Pickford and Director Marshall Neilan in regard to the story.

Los Angeles to Have Film Building.

Los Angeles will soon have a film building, according to reports in the daily papers. Promoters of the project plan to erect a five-story building on South Olive street to be used exclusively for the film industry. Many of the local studios will be approached to rent downtown offices in the new building, which will cater to exchanges, supply firms and other concerns catering to the motion picture trade.

Among the features contemplated is a moving picture theater for the exclusive use of the exchanges.

Judge Brown to Write for Universal.

Judge Willis Brown.

Judge Willis Brown, famous throughout the United States as a juvenile authority and educator and who probably has accomplished more for the uplift of the boys of this country than any other individual, has been lured to the motion pictures. That is, the founder and first judge of the Utah juvenile courts and the originator of the Boy City movement has written a number of stories for the screen which are to be produced by the Universal.

Judge Brown, after a long lecture tour, journeyed to the motion picture city at the invitation of President Laemmle, who had been a close observer of Judge Brown's national scheme of boy activities and the successful operation of his boy cities, and submitted to him the stories he had created. The Universal's president instructed Colonel J. E. Brady, manager of the manuscript department, to have them scenarioized.

The first of these stories is entitled "Nancy's Baby," upon which production was started last week. Violet MacMillan plays the leading role. A series of boy stories will follow.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Norman Manning, general manager of the David Horsley studios, has just returned from a business trip to Chicago.

Robert A. Turnbull, one of the Horsley cameramen, has received a commission from the Mexican Government through General Alvarado, Governor of Yucatan, to do some special work in connection with that state's great hemp industry and to also make some scenic films. These pictures are to be shown in the United States for the purpose of exploiting Yucatan's resources. This is the fourth trip Mr. Turnbull has made to Yucatan since 1913 for the same purpose. Mr. Horsley has made arrangement with Mr. Turnbull to do some special work for him also in connection with some feature pictures now in course of production.

Cecil B. deMille has returned from his vacation spent in the Yosemite Valley.

"Miss Captain Kiddo," the second Baby Marie Osborne picture made by the Lasadila Films, Inc., for the Pathe Exchange, is finished. The next production will be "Baby Pulls the Strings." The scenario was written by Marc Edmund Jones of the Pathe scenario staff and the production will be made under the direction of William Bertram, who made "The Neglected Wife."

Harrish Ingraham, formerly of the Pathe forces, will direct the third picture.

John Dored, a Russian army officer, member of General Skobeleff's committee on relief, an official Russian organization, arrived in Los Angeles on Sunday, this week, from Seattle, where he landed last week for the purpose of arranging with a number of motion picture companies for the production and presentation of a series of pictures taken on the front in Russia, showing the character of the Russian military establishment and depicting a number of scenes from desperate battles in which it has been engaged.

The object of this propaganda is to dispel the impression that has gained wide currency in this country, fostered for the most part by German influence, that Russia is out of the war as far as military strength is concerned. Mr. Dored will remain in the United States about a month.

Mr. Dored formerly lived in Los Angeles and was a cameraman with a local motion picture company.

Negotiations were concluded this week whereby J. A. Quinn secured the exclusive rights for Los Angeles of "The Whip," and will soon show this picture at his new Rialto theater. Commencing with the engagement of "The Whip," Quinn will inaugurate a policy of popular prices, with all the best seats at 20 and 30 cents, and will run six continuous shows daily from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m.

The Marine Company is afloat! General Manager M. Philip Hansen, Director Henry Otto, Tyrone Power, Frances Burnham, Jay Belasco, Gypsy Abbott, John Oaker and the rest of the trustworthy crew hauled their anchor and set forth this week from San Pedro for the Santa Barbara Islands with the scenario of "Lorelei of the Sea" in tow.

For the benefit of those who doubt that the acting ability of Al Christie, the director-general of Christie Film Company, we present the following picture which looks as though Mr. Christie was directing; as a matter of fact, he was showing Harry Ham and Betty Compson how he acted when he started out on his career as a juvenile man. Harry Ham is leaving the Christie company to go to Mineola, Long Island, for training in the aviation corps of the United States Army. James Harrison, formerly of the Fine Arts forces, has been engaged by Mr. Christie to take Ham's place with his company.

"A Kentucky Cinderella"

Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay Founded on a Story by F. Hopkinson Smith and Directed by Rupert Julian Is Full of Charm.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

THE title, "A Kentucky Cinderella," indicates that novelty of plot need not be expected from this five-reel Bluebird photoplay but does begin to suggest the amount of [illegible] attached to the story. That it was written by F. Hopkinson Smith is a piece of information that throws a great light upon the subject, however, and Rupert Julian has known how to use his material to the best advantage. The story opens in California at the time of the gold discovery, [illegible] to Kentucky, whither the heroine goes after the death of her father in the Golden State. The girl suffers the humiliation often served out to poor relations, but meets her Prince Charming and rides off with him at the finish in bridal array with two coal black attendants on the box and four milk white horses to draw the coach. It is all just like the story books but so sweet and wholesome and so admirably done that it is as welcome as a whiff of pure country air, and makes one forget that sex problems, eugenics and infants yet unborn have become prominent themes and characters of the stage and also of the screen.

Scene from "A Kentucky Cinderella" (Bluebird).

The array of big-hearted, simple-minded folk in this picture is imposing and includes the usual Kentucky gentleman of title, a colored mammy and her ole man, and a gold digger, the partner of the heroine's father, whose nature is twenty-four carat and a trifle over. The character is played by Director Julian with an appreciation of its finest qualities that uncovers all its rugged worth. The colored man and woman who have been cast for the two old servants are unexpectedly capable, the old Mammy being played with an ease and finish that could not be surpassed. The character of Windfield Gordon by Harry Carter and the performance of Zoe Rae of an impish little colored gal also stand out prominently.

The title role is taken by Ruth Clifford, who is quite as simple and uneffected and likewise as charming in appearance and manner as the imagination of the author created his heroine. The production never lacks the proper atmosphere.

"A Son of the Hills"

Five-Reel Photoplay on the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Program That Is Juvenile in Theme and a Strong Reminder of Many Old Boyhood Favorites.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IF THE screen is to have a special line of photoplays to compete with the juvenile fiction that commenced with Oliver Optic and Horatio Alger and is now found in publications devoted to the youth of the land, "A Son of the Hills" is qualified to take a leading place in the line. This six-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, founded on a story by Harriet T. Comstock, is not without the merits of its class. It relates the adventures of a poor but honest young chap, who leaves his home in the South and starts out to make his fortune. He is stricken with fever on the doorstep of a wealthy and kind-hearted gentleman, taken in and nursed back to health, given a chance to go to college and learn by practical experience that "Virtue is its own reward," and marries the sweetheart of his boyhood. The story is occasionally set forth with unconscious humor, but always without any undue mental strain.

Antonio Moreno plays Sandy Morley, the juvenile hero, and strives earnestly to comply with the requirements of the part. He finds it impossible, however, to suggest the juvenile outlook upon life that never departs from the character. Belle [illegible] of an unconventional type, acts the sweetheart with much naturalness. Harry Davenport directed the picture.

"Some Boy"

George Walsh and Doris Pawn Win Hands Down on Personality in the Newest Fox Comedy Melodrama—Hero's Call the Picture's Big Thing.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE audience at the Fox Academy of Music seemed well pleased with "Some Boy," the latest Fox comedy picture in five reels. The astonishing gall of the hero who as press agent makes a story for a hotel by stealing diamonds [illegible] story. His difficulty of getting them back to the fair owner after he gets fired continues the comedy, but no other incident in the picture is worth noting beside it.

The steady quality comes from "Joyous," the hero, and from the heroine. George Walsh has a smile and it is plainly pleasing to the girls and the men, too. Doris Pawn is a good deal more than acceptable in the role opposite to him. Dora Whitman as the strong-armed Dotty Donald is another character who attracts favorable attention as a part of the picture. The other characters furnish comedy and light-hearted melodrama and win a welcome.

The plot carries speedily and furnishes a state of mind in which the spectator enjoys the characters for their own sakes and is amused by the athletic stunts done by George Walsh which in several cases have no real part in the story.

Scene from "Some Boy" (Fox).

Fired from college for playing in a game of baseball when behind in his lessons, "Joyous" gets a job as press agent for a hotel and proceeds to make copy. By stealing diamonds from the heroine, a guest, and writing up the story he gets publicity and is straightway fired. The heroine has left in a huff. It is too late to return the diamonds. He has them still and the house detective knows it. He gives the house staff a jolt or two, gets away, stows on the ship in which the heroine has taken passage, and is made a waiter. Joyous' father is trying to steal the heroine's ranch. She makes Joyous manager, discharging the gunman who had the job. Joyous hands the gunman a surprise and cleverly outwits his father's gang. Then he finds that his dad is the villain and he and the girl make him come across.

"Whither Thou Goest"

Orrin Johnson and Rhea Mitchell Featured in Five-Reel Drama—For State Rights Sale by Klotz & Streimer, Inc.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

FROM the box-office angle the best thing about "Whither Thou Goest," a five-reel drama featuring Orrin Johnson and Rhea Mitchell, is its title. The picture, which is offered for state rights sale by Koltz & Streimer, Inc., Candler Building, New York, is suitable only for "the stakes." It will never get by in a first class house, but ought to please audiences that patronize houses that never show the more expensive pictures. The picture is thoroughly clean and can be shown to the family group. It probably can best be graded as a picture on a par with a very ordinary program release. The story is conventional and the acting and direction just barely passable. Photography is good, and some very good Arizona desert scenes have been filmed.

There are several weaknesses in the story, as filmed, that will be overlooked only by the less discriminating. Little directorial skill is evidenced in the picture, with the result that instead of drama we have calm and more or less colorless narration, with every once in a while an abrupt jump into a situation that could not be convincing unless more logically approached.

There are four central characters around which the plot revolves. The story tells of a society man who is told that he has but six months to live. He meets the musical comedy queen his younger brother is in love with, and marries her. They go to Arizona. They are very much in love. The man's mother believes the family disgraced because of the marriage. Intoxicated, the younger brother tells his mother that the older brother married the stage girl only to prevent a mesalliance. Meanwhile the older brother has regained his health. The mother visits Arizona. She reaches her son's cabin while he is away. She tells her daughter-in-law that if she really loves her husband she will leave him, so that he can take his rightful place in society. The girl makes the sacrifice and goes out into the desert. When the son returns he learns what his mother has done, spurns her, and rides out into the desert in search of his wife. He finds her.

Scene from "Whither Thou Goest" (Klotz & Streimer).

Besides the featured players there are in the cast Tom Chatterton, Ida Lewis, Henry Belmar, Phil Thompson, Peggy O'Connell, J. Frank Burke, Lavinia Gre and Ben Hopkins.

"Balloonatics"

First of Two-Reel Century Comedies Featuring Alice Howell Is Good—Distributed on State Rights Plan by Julius Stern.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

IF every Century Comedy offered state rights purchasers is as good as "Balloonatics," the first two-reel number shown for review, independent exchanges soon will be busy handling bookings for them. "Balloonatics" is a rapid-fire comedy containing a full quota of laughs. Alice Howell, who is to be featured in all of the Century Comedies, "pulls" stuff in this one that stamps her one of the leaders in her particular line. She is a hard and serious worker, and it is her seriousness under ludicrous circumstances that score many of the laughs.

"Balloonatics" follows the established lines of comedies of its type. The first reel shows the comedienne as the scullion in a kitchen and around the house. Here she gets over new stuff. Although loved by the fat cook and the iceman, she elopes with the son of the house. Action becomes faster and soon furious after the marriage. The cook gets into a balloon, whose anchor picks up folks and drops them without regard to their dignity or anatomy. Then the hook-anchor picks up the house containing the bride and groom. The house and its contents fly all over the countryside to a whirlwind finish.

Scene from "Balloonatics" (Century).

J. G. Blystone's direction shows thorough comedy capability. The comedies are being sold by Julius Stern, Century Comedies, 1600 Broadway, New York.

"The Price of Pride"

Carlyle Blackwell Has Dual Role in Interesting Five-Reel Peerless Photoplay Written by Milton Nobles—Released by World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE dual role in "The Price of Pride," the Peerless Photoplay written by Milton Nobles, consists of two half-brothers, each unacquainted with the other's existence until they meet in a courtroom presided over by their father and one of the brothers is about to be sentenced for a crime committed by the other. The remarkable resemblance between the two young men is the cause of the mistake. This situation takes place near the end of the picture and the incidents leading up to it, although frankly melodramatic and not able to stand a strict logical test, have the advantages of moving with fair speed and of possessing undeniable interest.

Scene from "The Price of Pride" (World).

The story starts where a misunderstanding over another woman results in a successful eastern lawyer leaving his wife and boy and going to the coast. This action throws the other woman into his way. They live together until after the birth of a son; then, finding out that the lawyer has no intention of ever making her his wife, the woman leaves the legal gentleman and is married to a gambler.

The paths of these characters do not cross again until twenty years afterward. The elder of the half-brothers is honest and upright; the other young chap is at the head of a band of train robbers. The sweetheart of the good brother is on a train robbed by the bad one. She sees the chief of the band without his mask and is convinced her lover is the robber. He is arrested, and his trial brings about his innocence being established and the reconciliation of his father and mother.

Milton Nobles has written a number of melodramatic stage successes and knows how to make his scenes full of acting possibilities. In most of the situations the directing of Harley Knoles is distinctly up to the mark. The cast is ably selected. Carlyle Blackwell doubles the two brothers with a good degree of art and is suited in build and appearance to both roles.

June Elvidge as the other woman wins sympathy for a difficult character to impersonate. This actress is moving ahead rapidly in an artistic way. Some of her bits of acting as Nan Westland have a restraint combined with a sureness of effect that is rarely surpassed. Frank Mills, Evelyn Greeley, George MacQuarrie, Charles Charles and Pinna Nesbit are the other familiar and well thought of names that belong on the program.

Five-Reel Version of Wilkie Collins' "The Woman in White," Featuring Florence La Badie, and the Ninth Installment of the Serial Starring Ruth Roland, "The Neglected Wife."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE author of "The Woman in White" understood the value of suspense. He also understood the dramatic worth of the dual role. Moreover, he always had a story to tell. The screen version fashioned by Lloyd Lonergan and produced by Thanhouser has the gripping qualities of the original, and it is not at all necessary to be familiar with the novel in order to enjoy the picture. Some of the material seems rather conventional and Sir Percival Glyde and Count Fosco are as fine a pair of theatrical villains as over graced an old-time melodrama, but the human interest of the story is always vital and all the characters lead anything but peaceful lives.

The plot deals with two women who bear a remarkable resemblance to each other. One is an heiress, the other is poor and feeble minded. Laura Fairlie, the heiress, becomes the wife of Sir Percival Glyde, who marries her for her money. and is ready to stop at nothing in order to get his wife's fortune into his hands. The first step is when he learns of the escape of Ann Catherick from the insane asylum. The woman dies and he secures the body. His wife is ill at the time. Sir Percival has her taken to the asylum as Ann Catherick and gives out the information that his wife has expired, the body of the insane woman being buried in her place. The story ends with the death of Sir Percival and the reunion of Laura with the man she always loved, a young artist, separated from her by poverty.

Scene from "The Woman in White" (Pathe).

Ernest C. Warde has directed the picture excellently, and the action of Florence La Badie as Laura and Ann does justice to both characters. Richard R. Neil as Sir Percival, Gertrude Dallas as Marian Halcombe, Arthur Bower as Count Fosco, and Wayne Arey as Walter Hartridge, are valuable aids to the favorable impression made by the picture.

The ninth installment of "The Neglected Wife" finds Mrs. Kennedy still fighting to keep her husband from deserting her for Margaret Warner. It also shows that Frank Norwood is still determined to win Margaret away from Horace Kennedy. Edgar Doyle continues his plotting against Kennedy, Norwood and Margaret, and lures the latter into a taxi by sending her a note that Kennedy is in great danger. Once inside of the cab Margaret finds that she has the veiled woman seated beside her. Ruth Roland, Roland Bottomly and their associates give no indication of losing interest in their impersonations.

"Arrayed With the Enemy"

Fourth Two-Reel Episode of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" Series Is Interesting.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

MUCH good horsemanship and other action is seen in "Arrayed With the Enemy," the fourth two-reel episode of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. There is more of the melodramatic in this number which accounts in a large measure for sustained interest and exciting episodes. Stingaree and Howie elude the Mounted Police and come across a weeping woman whose husband has been kidnapped by "Black Bill" and the latter's followers. The chivalrous Stingaree agrees to aid the woman. He is piqued, too, because "Black Bill" has signed a ransom, not "Stingaree."

Stingaree, Howie and the woman are overtaken by the police and the two men are made prisoners. They are bound to trees while several of the policemen go in search of "Black Bill." Stingaree's horse—a very well-trained animal—unties the bonds of his master. This is an appealing bit. Stingaree and Howie are about to make good their escape when one of the troopers comes with the message that the police are in the power of "Black Bill." Stingaree and his pal array themselves with the enemy and go to the lair of the bandits, route them, rescue the husband and disappear.

Scene from "Arrayed With the Enemy" (Kalem).

True Boardman is, as usual, the typical Stingaree. Paul C. Hurst who also directed is seen as Howie. Also in the cast are Edythe Sterling, Barney Furey and G. A. Williams. The backgrounds chosen by Mr. Hurst are ideal.

"Hate"

Fairmount Seven-Part State Right Subject Carries a Clearly-Told, Interesting Story.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

AN interesting picture is "Hate," the state right production of the Fairmount Film Corporation. It holds its interest throughout its more than six thousand feet, and that despite the tendency in the beginning and near the ending to preach. It is the marked human note in the story that submerges the influence of the homiletic titles, the simple presentation of conditions of every-day life. The basic theme is the hate engendered in human beings by the misconduct of their fellow-men, by the violation of sacred trusts. In the case in point its outward manifestation is the slaying by a youngster of the man he has just learned is his father. The fact that the slain man many years before not only had betrayed and deserted the mother of the boy, but that he was in the days of her hapiness and prosperity attempting to blackmail her, would seem to afford a reasonable ground for murderous inclination without ascribing the impelling motive to prenatally engendered hate. In other words, the situation of the moment preceding the slaying contained plenty of matter to account for the passions raging in the young man's breast.

Adelaide Holland is Ruth Shelton, the young woman betrayed, deserted, and, just before the birth of a son, befriended by the newspaper reporter. Miss Holland portrays her part well—she shows us a woman who through years of happiness that fall to her as the wife of the reporter carries in her face the marks of the unhappy experience of her youth. Morgan Jones is Jack Bradley, the reporter who becomes editor and consequently in position to put into effect the much needed reforms in local affairs. It is a good role, one that makes of Bradley very much of a man—one who with his eyes open and banking on his knowledge of human nature takes for a wife a woman branded with the scarlet letter; who becomes in affection as well as in name the father of the woman's son. And we see how his sympathy was not misplaced, how his intuition was proved to be a sound guide.

Others in the cast are Morgan Acker as Tom Leighton, the man from the past who comes back to blackmail the woman he had wronged two decades before; Jack McLean as Howard Bradley, the son; T. Henderson Murray as "Big Jim" Garvin, the politician, and Mae McAvoy as May Garvan.

J. Walter Meade is the author of the script. He has done a good job. He displays skill in his titles, barring a tendency, as before stated, to the melodramatic, to sermonizing. Director Walter R. Stahl has selected many picturesque backgrounds of the south, rich in moss-hung trees and placid streams. His handling of the mob scenes, of the election crowds, is realistic to an unusual degree.

Scene from "Hate" (Fairmount).

What stands out in the picture is the drama—a clearly told, interesting story.

"Come Through"

Seven-Reel Melodrama Written by George Bronson Howard and Produced by Universal a Good Entertainment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IF the most essential quality for a photoplay is to entertain, "Come Through," the seven-reel melodrama written by George Bronson Howard and produced by the Universal Company, will be a success. The adjectives "powerful," "mighty" and words of that class need not be borrowed from a press agent's scrap-book in order adequately to describe the merits of the picture. The story will prove attractive to the greater portion of photoplay patrons, however, a novel turn in the plot helping largely to chain the attention. The picture is divided into two parts, the first part not being any too brisk of movement. With the entrance of a housebreaker into the story and also into the home of the heroine, the new turn gets into motion.

Scene from "Come Through" (Universal).

Velma Gay is in love with Archie Craig, but is persuaded by her aunt to accept Buck Linsay, a Western millionaire. Linsay discovers the true state of affairs and determines that Velma shall marry for love, not for the purpose of securing his money. Knowing that Velma is expecting a visit from Craig that night, the Westerner procures a clergyman and awaits his rival.

A burglar breaks into the house at the proper moment and Buck mistakes him for Craig. He forces him to marry Alice at the point of a revolver, and then turns the newly-wedded pair of total strangers out into the world. The crook at once commences to show gentlemanly instincts of the finest quality and assures his wife that from then on he is going straight. The rest of the story tells of his difficulties in trying to keep his word. This necessitates the introduction of new characters and motives, and does not permit the plot to be classed as a perfect piece of construction; but the sympathetic appeal is always present and everyone will be glad to see the reformed crook triumph at the finish.

The production of "Come Through," under the direction of Jack Conway, gives the picture every opportunity to deliver its message. The cast, of course, is of first importance. Herbert Rawlinson is the crook, and his acting of the part makes it easy to believe in James Harrington Court's reformation. Alice Lake as Velma Gay also assists in implanting the same belief, and George Webb, Jean Hathaway, Roy Stewart, Margaret Whistler, William C. Dyer and Charles Hill Mailes preserve the requisite artistic balance.

"At First Sight" Five-Reel Famous Players Photoplay with Mae Murry, and "Forbidden Paths," Five-Reel Lasky Feature Starring Vivian Martin.

Review by Edward Weitzel.

"At First Sight."

ADD the word love to the title of the latest Famous Players photoplay and the full meaning of the name is made clear. "At First Sight" is a comedy in five reels, and Mae Murry is Justina, the heroine of the tale and an heiress. It seems that Justina, who is of a romantic turn of mind, is engaged to a very matter-of-fact young man named Ralph Gaylor who does not find the lady's money the least of her attractions. A rising young novelist, whose books are fairly devoured by Justina, comes to the town in which the heiress dwells and she falls in love with him at first sight. She manages to become an inmate of the house where the author has shut himself in, that he may work undisturbed on his latest story. The way the real love story and the plot of the new novel are made to blend furnishes much of the fun in the picture.

Scene from "At First Sight" (Paramount).

George Middleton, who wrote the scenario, has contrived to put together a clean, leisurely moving and rather amusing story which is given material help by the manner of its production. Mae Murry's personality is suited to the character of Justina, although she does not show the finish to her comedy acting that is apparent in her serious work. A tendency to dance through some of her scenes should be overcome as soon as possible. Sam T. Hardy, as the writer, is a credit to the craft, being without any of the pose of the usual novelist of fiction. Jules Rancourt, Julia Bruns, W. T. Carlton, Nellie Lindroth, William Butler, and Edward Sturgis are other useful members of the cast.

"Forbidden Paths."

The strongest and most impressive bit of acting in "Forbidden Paths," a five-reel Lasky release, is contributed by Sessue Hayakawa. He plays a native of his own land, who falls in love with a pretty American girl and sacrifices his life to secure her happiness. The story, by Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun, has its best moments at the finish. The heroine is in love with a young American who goes down to Mexico and is trapped into marrying the most notorious woman in the capital. When he learns the truth about her he deserts her and returns to the States. The wife follows him, however, and learns that he is now in love with the heroine. She will not let him divorce her, but the devoted Japanese finds a way to remove her quietly and effectively. He invites her to go out in a launch with him, takes her well out to sea, removes the plug from the bottom of the boat, and waits calmly for them both to drown.

In this situation Hayakawa's racial characteristics, the stoicism of the Oriental, enables him to make the scene ring true. Most of the story is not remarkable, from any point of view, and the young American suffers by comparison with the Japanese. But the finish is one not easily forgotten. Vivian Martin is natural and attractive as the heroine. The rest of the cast and the general production are what the Lasky name would lead one to expect.

"The Ghost of Old Morro"

Five-Part Edison Subject Features Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

TO alter a current phrase of a popular magazine writer I am strangely unmoved by such movies as "The Ghost of Old Morro." This is an Edison five-reeler, written by James Oppenheim and directed by Richard Ridgely, featuring Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness.

The locale is Morro Castle, in Cuba. The story is the tragedy of a cigar-smoking witch whose ghost haunts the castle on moonlight nights. The witch keeps a disreputable inn. A gang of smugglers offer her thirty per cent. for protection from the revenue guard. She secures the protection by procuring a girl for the captain of the guard to debauch. The smugglers do not use the witch as an intermediary next time. They abduct a convent girl for the captain to debauch. By mistake this girl is the witch's daughter. The captain, mind you, is the hero of the picture! The witch procures the captain's murder. His body is to be brought to her in a bag at midnight on the walls of Morro Castle to be thrown into the sea. Instead of his body her daughter's is in the bag she throws down.

Robert Conness plays the flirtatious American revenue captain, who is easily bought off, not with money but with girls. Mabel Trunnelle plays Mercedes, the Cuban convent girl. Their love scenes are entirely too speedy and lack conviction. Helen Strickland plays the witch. She does the only acting in the picture.

Other disagreeable features in Mr. Oppenheim's story are a cock fight, the cutting out of a man's tongue so that he will not betray a conspiracy he has overheard, and a detestable comic monk who dances when Mercedes plays. For a kiss he allows Mercedes to leave the convent at night to keep an appointment with the revenue captain. The picture ends with three deaths. The witch and the captain wrestle on top of the walls of Morro Castle and together fall into the sea.

While this picture would not be harmful on a program with ennobling pictures, it has not itself a single foot which moves the noble sentiments. If it were shown in a village where they see only one picture a week everyone would go home and have the nightmare. This picture should under no circumstances be shown to children.

Terry Human Interest Reel

A Kay Company Presents Split-Reel Educational—Reading Character Through Characteristics of Nose Shown.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

ENTERTAINING instruction is given by the Terry Human Interest Reel titled "The Nose." The reel combines interesting cartoon studies of the nose as an indication of character, and scenes showing the cotton industry. First is seen the Roman nose. Its characteristics are pointed out in the film and the sort of a character its owner possesses is explained. The points stated are made convincing by pen pictures of great men who possessed Roman noses. Similar treatment is given the Grecian nose, the "commercial" nose, the celestial nose, the snub nose and the broad and thick nose.

The cartoon finishes with a phrenological and physiognomical screen study of President Wilson.

The scenes of the cotton industry are comprehensive and interesting.

"The Soul Herder"

Harry Carey Has the Lead in an Excellent Western Universal Three-Reeler.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

AN excellent picture in every way is "The Soul Herder," a Universal three-reeler directed by Jack Ford and featuring Harry Carey as a reformed cowboy who becomes a Billy Sunday in a wicked ranch town and closes up the saloon. This is an excellent western. There is some fine riding through woods and ravines. Harry Carey rides down declivities with skill that puts to shame certain part reels of Italian cavalry riding stunts. This is an excellent picture for children of all ages. Elizabeth Janes plays the child's part with great power. Fritzi Ridgeway is a very attractive church organist.

Scene from "The Soul Herder" (Universal).

The superior grade of entertainment offered by this picture may best be indicated by outlining the story. Harry Carey, a bad man, adopts a little girl, a parson's daughter, whom he finds in the desert just after her father has been murdered by vagrant Indians. The child insists that if he is to be her father he must wear father's clerical vest. Together they set out for the wicked town where Jane, the child's aunt, is church organist. Jane has never seen her brother-in-law. She is puzzled by the combination of spurs and a clerical vest. She finds out that he is an imposter when he forgets himself and knocks out the ringleader of the saloon gang in a fist fight in a good cause. She dismisses him because he is an imposter. But the child falls ill and calls for her father. Harry is brought back. The child recovers. Then Jane realizes that there must be good in a man who has such power for good over a little child.

After Harry takes the pulpit a delicious humor enters the picture. First he invites the congregation but they do not respond. Then he rides his horse into the saloon and compels them all to go to church. After the service he tells them that the Lord loves a cheerful giver and that it is time they attracted his attention. He stands at the door with the collection basket in one hand and a gun in the other and forces them all to give up. He uses the money to send the disreputable women back to their families. The saloon has to close up. Of course Harry marries Jane.

This picture would be excellent for church entertainments. It would surely convert those who refuse to admit that western movies can have a strong moral tone.

"I Believe"

English Made Photodrama Written and Directed by George Loane Tucker an Ambitious but Loose-Jointed Plea For the Christian Faith.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT IS easily conceivable that the man who produced three of Hall Caine's works is the author of "I Believe." The influence of the writer of "The Christian" is apparent all through George Loane Tucker's photodrama, which is an ambitious but loose-jointed plea for the Christian faith. Following the example of his celebrated "guide, philosopher and friend," the author of "I Believe" takes his work very seriously and expounds his religious tenets with all the vigor of a Methodist exhorter, but not with all of Hall Caine's skill.

The scenes of the picture are laid in London just before the Great War, and the prevalence there of religious unbelief is the mainspring of the preachment. A struggle between a freethinker and a clergyman of the Established Church and his son to lead the people about them is the dramatic motive of the story, the material employed in working it out being a mixture of the old novel "Frankenstein" (which deals with a man without a soul) and a close study of English melodrama as it is known on the Surrey side of the Thames. A liberal sprinkling of quotations from the Bible and inserts of an evangelical nature assist in giving the story the proper atmosphere. Most of the characters are of the lower middle class and the opposing forces of good and evil, represented by the minister and his son and the atheist, come to blows more than once during the progress of things. While saving the atheist from a mob that has deserted his teaching the minister's son is hit on the head with a brick and goes to the home of the freethinker to have his wound dressed. A shock from a powerful electric current stretches the two men apparently lifeless on the floor. The atheist is revived and when the doctor pronounces the clergyman's son dead the free-thinker brings him back to life by the use of electricity. He then discovers that he has not been able to bring back the young man's soul. All moral sense being dead, the minister's son starts upon a saturnalia of degeneracy that includes an attempt to criminally assault his stepmother, and other equally revolting crimes.

Long after a person of refined instincts is ready to cry "Enough!" the author concludes it is time to call a halt to his list of horrible examples, so the two shocked men are disclosed on the floor still insensible—the monster created by the atheist was only the phantom of a dream. Once revived, the freethinker's conversion is quickly effected.

The question as to whether such a subject belongs in a moving picture theater need not be discussed here. Many persons will find it to their taste. It is well produced and splendidly acted. But as a piece of scenario writing it also is lower middle class. Had George Loane Tucker shown less interest in his efforts as a protagonist and more devotion to the laws of dramatic construction his work would be able to deliver its message with far greater weight. The story jumps about amazingly, is repeatedly overstressing its points and seems to have been built upon the theory that when you hand a man a bit of moral teaching knock him down with it first at least four or five times.

The character drawing is excellent, the English types being the real thing. The long cast is a histrionic roll of honor. Milton Rosmer is the clergyman's son. He acts the part to perfection during both phases of the character and makes him a specimen of manhood that compels respect from everyone. Charles Rock as the Rev. John Ferrier is strong and fine, and Edward O'Neill is convincing as the atheist. The American actress, Edna Flugrath, plays the little cockney heroine as if born under the union jack.

Triangle Program

"A Strange Transgressor" with Louise Glaum, "The Clodhopper" with Charles Ray, and a Keystone, "A Dog-Catcher's Love."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A DECIDED keynote of artistry straight through has "A Strange Transgressor," both in production and interpretation. The story itself is a "Camille" variation, but a successful one through exquisite presentation. The story is not, however, of a "notorious" woman, but of one compelled to make a sacrifice on the altar of maternal instinct, one of the few actual sacrifices made in modern life, but that same profound feeling causes the woman to long for the social respectability of marriage. Around this inner struggle, not given half enough development, the main incidents of a tense drama are grouped. There is an attempt to give new life to well-known situations by shifting relations among the leading characters, but the real charm of the story lies in its subtle beauties, those which appeal to the eye rather than to the heart.

There is picture beauty in every detail of the many fine interiors and exteriors, a veritable gallery of paintings, it would almost seem, so admirably chosen and arranged by those in charge of production. Then the actors! What a fine company! Not only the principals, but those playing minor roles, add materially to the whole impression by personality and by intelligent interpretation, and this without exception.

Of Miss Glaum, she was rightly measured in these criticisms when she was playing minor parts. Not only is she quickly responsive to every minute requirement of interpretation, but she is forever making a picture of herself, searching for self-expression in the smallest detail of costume and surroundings, just as a painter composes his creation. She has swiftly advanced herself beyond the mediocre, but she still has little faults to correct. Her submissive attitudes are highly effective, but she should straighten up and stiffen up once in a while, if only for contrast, and especially in defiant moods, but so much high praise is to be accorded her interpretations that such suggestions seem uncalled for. The whole effect is one of great picture beauty.

"The Clodhopper" is a very fair comedy vehicle for Charles Ray, which he uses to so great advantage that there will be many an honest laugh among people in the audiences, but the story drags terribly toward the conclusion, both because old material is used, the run on the bank, with nothing bright or attractive in its presentation, too much of it, and with a complete elimination of suspense. At this point the same people who were entertained by the realistic early scenes will begin to feel a "have-it-over-with" sensation. This is not entirely the author's fault. He is probably given insufficient time to prepare a swift, engrossing and effective continuance of the early part. Starting with the material for a live comedy, he has been compelled to fill it up from sheer lack of proper time to create original stuff for its full continuance.

Scene from "The Clodhopper" (Triangle).

Ray is at home in this sort of a role, so much so that he is being exploited in it without much variation—he is the country bumpkin in funny clothes over and over again. The production is one of decided intelligence and care, and this is a saving grace. The time is coming, we all hope, when the capable screen author will be given greater personal opportunity and more time to show what he can really do when afforded his opportunity—thus far he has been called upon to provide all opportunity for the actor. The story in a general way is good and it is highly creditable in many respects, showing what could be done with such able directors and company when plays of the highest order are purchased, or when the regular staff of writers is given greater latitude.

"The Dog-Catcher's Love" is of the rip-roaring old Keystone type which made the reputation of that company, a swift compression of five lively reels into two, with enough ingenuity to supply a half dozen of the ordinary kind, instead of, as in the more pretentious releases, two or three scant reels amplified to five, with only bright spots of relief now and then. Title, plot and all the rest are beyond designation and unimportant. We are lost, in fact, as to the general destination of what is going on and indifferent to results, simply bewildered by the rapid succession of the unexpected. "The Dog-Catcher's Love" is pure Keystone of the first water.

Sunset Features Coming

Extensive Group of Four-reel Dramas Promised as Added General Film Product, With Stars.

IN a few days General Film will be able to meet the demand of exhibitors for four-reel feature releases with a list of ten or more splendid subjects, General Manager Harold Bolster announces. The new four-reel subjects will be known to the trade as "Sunset Features." Each of these will be a drama, and each one will be intended to stand upon its merit as a story. Stories altogether of action, adventure and mystery have been chosen.

Well known and popular players will be seen in each of the Sunset Features. Among these may be named Ruth Roland, Margaret Landis, Ethel Ritchie, Vola Vale, Katherine Kirkham, Henry King, Neil Hardin, Philo MacCullough and R. Henry Grey. It is pointed out that with the Sunset Features available exhibitors can book their whole show from General Film.

Contrast in O. Henry Releases.

The current O. Henry releases from General Film provide the strongest contrast of any two successive releases in this popular series with "The Love Philtre of Ikey Schoenstein" and "A Departmental Case." The former is a straight-out comedy and is laid on the east side of New York with the convincing urban atmosphere that the author so well employed. "A Departmental Case," however, is a thorough drama and its scene is in Texas. The city story was directed by Thomas R. Mills and its principals are Mildred Manning, Dan Hayes and Bernard Siegel, the latter as "Ikey." The Texas story was handled by Martin Justice and includes in its cast Charles Kent, Carlton King, Harry Hammil, Mary Cunningham and Frank Chapman.

General Film Company.

SERVICE OF LOVE (Broadway Star).—An O. Henry story of a struggling painter who marries a struggling pianist. They have rosy imaginations, but are short of funds. She pretends to have a rich pupil. He pretends to be making sales while sketching in the park. One day the wife comes home with a burned arm and it transpires that she has been ironing in a laundry. He recognizes the oily cotton waste used to dress the burns because he has been stoking in the same laundry. The titles contribute largely to the entertainment. This picture will appeal to audiences fairly well acquainted with the English language.

NEARLY A HUSBAND (Kleine).—Bickel is an Italian who marries, then is supposed to be killed while trying to blow a safe. His wife marries his nephew and he enters their room at the hotel as a burglar. The story is very loosely hung together. It is only mildly amusing.

COUGHING HIGGINS (Ray).—Higgins is a screen Irishman of the type familiar to patrons of vaudeville and burlesque. The settings of the picture are rich. This comedy is not objectionable. It is fairly amusing.

ARRAYED WITH THE ENEMY (Kalem).—Fourth of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. This two-reel number is much better than the preceding episode. There is more melodrama and more action to hold the interest, and the story moves with a speed that makes for considerable suspense. It tells how Stingaree and his pal, Howie, help the police to round up the Black Band and then quietly disappear. Reviewed in this issue.

A SUIT AND A SUITOR (Kleine).—A Bickel comedy. Bickel plays straight, with a toupee, as Mr. Snyder who takes his family to the country so that his daughter will forget a certain suitor. The suitor follows. Then Bickel doubles as a comic tramp, with his natural bald dome. As a tramp Bickel is very funny. This is a good comedy.

A MIXED COLOR SCHEME (Kleine).—A Bickel comedy based on the mixing of two kidnapped babies; one white, one black. The kidnapping by an Italian is played too seriously. Bickel, as a gypsy, is not at all funny. Stupid and tedious.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA, June 25.—This is a very pleasing five-reel feature and is delightfully acted by Rupert Julian and the other members of the cast. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

SOME BOY, June 10.—A five-reel comedy with George Walsh and Doris Pawn in the leading roles. A very good offering. A suggestive title for it might have been "Some Nerve," for the hero shows enough of it to make a corking good central situation. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

A SON OF THE HILLS (Vitagraph), June 25.—Antonio Moreno and Belle Bruce head the cast of this five-reel feature. The story is a good example of juvenile fiction. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

King Bee Films Corporation.

CUPID'S RIVAL, July 1.—A two-part comedy of the cheaper sort with horse play and vulgarity as the chief baits. The plot with various complications centers about the plight of a poor artist, who sees his sweetheart enter the studio of his rival. The featured member of the cast, Billy West, does not seem to figure as largely in the plot proper as do his associates. In his actions and makeup he is a life-size painting of Charlie Chaplin. He must surely be commended for his successful imitation of the popular comedy star.

Kleine, Edison, Selig, Essanay

LAND OF LONG SHADOWS (Essanay), June 18.—A five-reeler featuring Jack Gardner admirably supported by Ruth King. The scene is a town of gold seekers in the Yukon. The depth of moral degradation protrayed in the opening reel makes it advisable to show this picture to adults only.

THE GHOST OF OLD MORRO (Edison), June 2.—A five-reeler written by James Oppenheim and directed by Richard Ridgely, featuring Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness. Most of the characters are thoroughly disreputable. This is not an enjoyable picture. It should, under no circumstances, be shown to children. Reviewed at length in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

REEL LIFE NO. 60 (Gaumont), June 21.—The interesting subjects contained in this number are "Knitting Hosiery," "Reclaiming the Everglades," "The Most Perfect Child," "A Tilting Match on Water" and "An Auto Driven Train."

JERRY'S RED HOT TRAIL (Cub), June 21.—A mediocre comedy in which Jerry, after being ordered out of town, is taken in tow by an automobile party. An attack by bandits brings Jerry into serious straits, the discomfort of which is added to by a bad dream, in which he is captured and shot by Indians.

RAILROAD RAIDERS NO. 12 (Signal), June 25.—"A Fight for a Franchise" is the title of this number of the serial. It holds the interest well and treats of how a name in a contract was changed by Helen and an associate, thus frustrating a villainous attempt to hinder a deal for the building of a railroad from going through.

THE GIRL IN THE FRAME (La Salle), July 3.—In this comedy the chief source of trouble in the home of a couple who have been married five years without a single moment of discord, is a picture of a woman in tights clipped from a newspaper by a clerk and placed in the belongings of the husband. The affair finds its way to the divorce courts before the innocent cause of the trouble realizes what he has done and puts matters to rights. Not of much account as a comedy.

ULTUS NO. 1 (Gaumont).—"The Townsend Mystery" is the title of the first episode of this new serial which promises to be one of the most attractive serials on the market. "Ultus" means "the man from the dead," and deals with the vengeance of one of two partners who was left for dead on the desert of Australia and robbed of his diamonds by his partner. The episode is thrilling.

ULTUS NO. 2 (Gaumont).—The title of the second episode of this new serial is "The Ambassador's Diamond." It is even more thrilling than the first, and has been reviewed in a previous issue. It deals with the impersonation of an ambassador by Ultus, the theft of a wonderful diamond, and a thrilling pursuit. Very excellent.

ULTUS NO. 3 (Gaumont).—The third number of this serial is entitled "The Grey Lady" and introduces another gang named the "League of Silence." The "grey" lady is employed by the gang in trying to decoy Ultus. The episode is thrilling and entertaining.

ULTUS NO. 4 (Gaumont).—"The Traitor's Fate" is the title of the fourth number of the serial. In it Lester is tracked out by Ultus and meets his death in the bottom of a flooded tin mine. This episode is intensely interesting and presents scenes of great beauty as well as of stirring quality.

THE SECRET OF THE NIGHT (Gaumont).—Fifth three-reel instalment of "Ultus." The number is an exceptionally good one, and its mystery and power to thrill rivals the writings of Poe. Ultus is again seen in an impersonation that brings him into adventure and clash with evil influences. He solves the mystery of a haunted house. The end shows him in the clutches of Bass, the Scotland Yard detective. This number is one of the best mystery pictures yet released in the series.

ULTUS NO. 6 (Gaumont).—This number of Ultus is an interesting one, and shows again the kidnapping of individuals. Thrilling incidents and plenty of action characterizes it, and at the close we find that the buttons from a coat which has been taken from a kidnapped minister are being sent out as decoys.

ULTUS NO. 7.—"The Three Button Mystery" is the title of this number of the serial in which we follow the characters of the play through an exciting chase. The minister is released and the girl is thrown into a subterranean room. Some stiff scuffles take place in the course of the number, which is unusually interesting.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

REBUILDING AMERICA'S MERCHANT MARINE (International), June 24.—Building wooden ships on the Pacific Coast is shown on a half reel of this release, an amusing Krazy Kat cartoon, "All Is Not Gold That Glitters," sharing the reel.

THE WOMAN IN WHITE (Thanhouser), July 1.—A five-reel screen version of Wilkie Collins' well-known novel has been made by Thanhouser with Frances La Badie in a dual role. The picture is an interesting one. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

THROUGH CENTRAL TEXAS (Pathe), July 8.—Number 15 of the Combitone series is devoted to Texas Views of Austin, Fort Worth and Waco are shown. The University at Austin, immense Bermuda onion beds and the stock yards at Fort Worth are the features of the reel.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

AT FIRST SIGHT (Famous Players), July 2.—Mae Murray is the star of this five-reel comedy, which tells a pleasant story of a famous novelist and the way he is captured by a designing young woman. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

FORBIDDEN PATHS (Lasky), July 12.—Vivian Martin is featured in this five-reel drama and Sessue Hayakawa has one of the leading roles. The story has a novel finish. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE CLODHOPPER (Ince-Kay Bee), June 17.—A comedy of the unexpectedly successful country bumpkin, his own awkardness bringing him fortune, with Charles Ray in his pet role.

THE DOG-CATCHER'S LOVE (Mack Sennett Keystone), June 24.—A roaring farce of the kind which made "Keystones" famous, replete with ingenious device and one constant laugh.

A STRANGE TRANSGRESSOR (Ince-Kay Bee), July 8.—A tense drama of woman's love and sacrifice most exquisitely pictured, with Louise Glaum very effective in the leading role.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

THE FLAME OF YOUTH (Butterfly), June 18.—An entertaining five-reel number, by Willis-Woods, produced by Elmer Clifton. Jack Mullhall is featured as a gilded youth, engaged to a society girl, who is sent by his father to inspect a fire opal mine. On the picturesque island he meets another girl, whom he really loves. He has exciting fights with a gang of crooks, saves the girl's life, and clears up the crooked work. The number is well-rounded in plot, breezily handled throughout and holds the interest well. Others in the cast are Ann Kronan, Donna Moon, Hayward Mack, Ed. Brady, Alfred Allen and Burton Law.

DARE DEVIL DAN (Victor), Week of July 2.—This number, by Ruth Stonehouse, features the author as a girl who reads dime novels and aspires to be a detective. She aids the police in rounding up a gang of crooks. There is nothing exceptional in this, either in conception or presentation. It makes a fairly entertaining subject.

THE WRONG MAN (Victor), Week of July 2.—A two-reel offering, by W. P. Oakes, featuring Harry Carey, George Berrill, Vester Pegg and Fritzi Ridgway. The citizens of a desert mining town elect an old fellow sheriff in order to evade military discipline. The old man, by the aid of his former partner, brings the rowdies to justice. The stage holdup, planned as a joke, is put on with a real punch. The yarn is quite strong in many respects.

THE TWITCHING HOUR (Joker), Week of July 2.—An eccentric comedy number, by Thomas Gibson, featuring Gale Henry, Milton Sims and Charles Hoefli. The first two are maid and porter in a small hotel. They blow open the safe, in burlesque fashion, and depart with the proceeds. Ridiculous and full of laughable small business. Good of its type.

THE GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE (Imp), Week of July 2.—A brisk story, by Mae Havey, featuring Lee Hill and Molly Malone. The hero hears a girl's cry from a taxicab. He follows and finds he has been lured by a gang of crooks. The girl falls in love with him and he gets her out of the hands of the gang. This is not particularly new, but moves with assurance and holds the interest.

NOT TOO THIN TO FIGHT (Victor), Week of July 2.—A story of the prize ring, by W. Warren Schoene, featuring Milton Sims, Ralph McComas and Eileen Sedgwick. The girl's lover takes her weak and timid young brother in hand and develops him into a lightweight boxer. The prize fight itself is quite a little sparring match and will particularly please fight fans. The story itself is slight, but entertaining. There are no objectionable features.

A YOUNG PATRIOT (Gold Seal), Week of July 2.—A three-reel subject, by M. and W. Pigott, with the scenes laid at a real army post. Elwood Bredell plays the part of Tommy, son of an army captain. He and his grandfather, portrayed by Edward Brown, are the leading characters, and the manner in which they keep spies from obtaining the valuable formula is exciting and entertaining. The plot is a little obvious, but holds the attention closely throughout. The war scenes are brief and spirited. Others in the cast are Charles Hill Mailles, Jack Connolly, Mignon Anderson, Wadsworth Harris and Roy Stewart.

POOR PETER PIOUS (Nestor), Week of July 2.—An amusing comedy number, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Fred Gamble and Edith Roberts. The girl loves Eddie, but her father wants her to marry Peter Pious. Eddie steals Peter's clothes while he is bathing and pretends he is insane. The action is farcical and gets up a number of laughs, the subject as a whole being a good one of its type.

WHAT HAPPENED AT THE BANK (Universal Special), July 2.—No. 2 of "The Gray Ghost" series. This installment deals largely with the events immediately following the bank robbery in which young Olmstead was spirited away. The Gray Ghost sets his gang on the trail of Wade Hildreth, an American returning from England who is negotiating for a valuable necklace. He unconsciously outwits the gang by changing rooms at the hotel. Morn Light is revealed as an unwilling tool of the master villain. The installment is rather short, but serves to further develop an interesting series of criminal operations.

COME THROUGH (Universal State Rights), June.—This is a decidedly entertaining picture, written by George Bronson Howard. The hero is a crook and is played by Herbert Rawlinson. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

World Pictures.

THE PRICE OF PRIDE (July 2).—Milton Noble is the author of this five-reel photoplay in which Carlyle Blackwell plays a dual role. The picture is full of drama and is well acted and produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

WHITHER THOU GOEST (Klotz & Streimer, Inc.).—An ordinary five-reel drama featuring Orrin Johnson and Rhea Mitchell. The picture is clean, and will meet success only in houses whose audiences are not used to the more expensive and more pretentious features. The acting and direction are not at all times of the best. A longer review is printed in the review columns of this issue.

I BELIEVE (Cosmophotoplay), June.—This is a well-produced feature, the scenes laid in London. It shows the struggle between religious faith and unbelief. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

"The Masked Heart" Leads Mutual

For Week of July 2 "The Road Wreckers," Thirteenth of Holmes Series, Also a Feature.

WILLIAM RUSSELL is the featured player on the Mutual schedule for July 2. Mr. Russell will appear in "The Masked Heart," a story of love and intrigue in which he is a blase society man who is bored by his easy victories over women and goes in quest of an elusive woman. The other principals in the cast are Frencelia Billington, Kathleen Kirkham, William Conklin and Ashton Dearholt.

"The Road Wreckers" is the title of the thirteenth chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," featuring Helen Holmes, which is also scheduled for July 2. A spectacular smashup between a passenger train and a freight makes the big thrill of the chapter.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," ready July 3, shows Bizerta, Tunis, a French naval port, and Sydney, the capital of New South Wales, Australia. On this date also comes the La Salle comedy, "The Girl in the Frame," in which Jean Otto is the principal funmaker. Mutual Weekly with its many news topics and patriotic features will go to the public on July 4.

The Cub Comedy of the week, with George Ovey in the lead, is "Jerry's Gentle Nursing," released July 5, in which Jerry takes care of a gouty invalid, and what he does not do to the invalid and his wheeled chair is not worth reporting.

"Reel Life," released July 5, is made up of six subjects—"Making Jewelry At Home," "Berry Pickers of the South" "Toys of Wartime," "Making Real Men," "The Army System" and "Animated Drawings From Life—"A Saving Grace" and "Hands Up.

The sixteenth and last chapter of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" series comes to the screen on July 6. This is entitled "The Victory." E. K. Lincoln is the lead.

O. Henry Series Increased

First Ten Weeks of Two-Reel Classics So Brilliant, Entire Series Is Made Twenty instead of Sixteen.

OWING to the tremendous success of the O. Henry two-reel pictures, General Film announces, the series of sixteen has been increased to twenty. The news was hailed with joy at all General exchanges.

The first ten of the series of two-reel O. Henry stories has been distributed, and the General Film has begun on the second ten. This second ten will include these titles: "No Story," "The Love Philtre of Ikey Schoenstein," "A Departmental Case," "Strictly Business," "Specks of Garnered Fruit," "Discounters of Money," "The Coming Out of Maggie," "The Venturers," "The Best Seller" and "The Lonesome Road."

"If the second ten meet anything like the reception given the first ten of the series," says Harold Bolster of General Films, "this series will prove the most popular unit of twenty short length motion pictures ever issued in the history of the camera. And I believe the second ten will match the first ten in value, artistic excellence and popularity. These O. Henry pictures have done more to establish a new standard in screen entertainment than any short length pictures have ever done.

The outstanding thing they have done is to make them acknowledged rivals of five-reel 'features.' And when I say rivals, I am leaving out the score of cases where they absolutely overshadowed the 'feature' in the exhibitor's advertisement and in the reviews of the critics, and in the applause of the audience, so that, when I call them rivals, I am understating their triumphs."

TOM MOORE WITH CONSTANCE TALMADGE.

Tom Moore, the most eminent member of the popular quartet of brothers, all of whom are familiar to picture fans, will next appear as leading man for the new Lewis J. Selznick star, Constance Talmadge. Miss Talmadge's first Selznick-Picture is "The Lesson," under the direction of Charles Giblyn

In the course of the picture Mr. Moore is called upon to operate a soda fountain, and serve Miss Talmadge and others with palatable beverages.

Besides Mr. Moore, in the supporting cast are Herbert Heyes, Walter Hiers, Joseph Smiley, Lillian Rambeau, Dorothy Green, Christy Walker, and the customary "others."

The release of the colossal film version of the gripping drama, entitled "The Rock of Gibraltar," has been temporarily postponed owing to a slight mishap. The Wind Jammer's Soliloquy.

I am the pest. I am the guy who sits in the seat behind and explains the picture to a friend who I believe is too thickheaded to understand what the play is all about. It also behooves me to read the titles aloud, because the poor boob may be deaf, and it saves others around me from straining their eyes on the subtitles. It is amazing how ignorant most of the spectators are, and it is highly proper that one with so keen an intellect as mine, should seek to enlighten those about me. If I have previously seen the picture, it is my duty to explain the plot to others, so that they may anticipate the big scenes. This saves them from suspense and lingering doubt as to the result. Every night I can be found in some theater. I shall go on forever and ever. I am the Wind Jammer.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

NOW that it is proposed to place a war tax on cabarets those who will be affected by the successful outcome of the proposition are reviving the agitation to have a similar tax placed upon moving pictures. The claim is made that cabarets and moving pictures are identical as amusements and to tax the former and not the latter would be unjust discrimination. There is absolutely no foundation in reason for any such claim. There is nothing in the cabaret that makes it essential to the comfort or welfare of the people; the cabaret does not appeal to the people as a whole; it is the favorite of the select few—the one and two-steppers who like to dine and wine, and have a good time generally. There is no possible loophole by which the cabaret can be shoved into the classification of necessity. It is unqualifiedly a luxury, and not such a luxury that cannot easily be dispensed with by those patronizing it.

On the other hand, the moving pictures have become, and have been almost from the time they were first exploited, a public necessity and benefactor. They appeal to all classes and conditions of people—the adults and the children—and to put additional burden upon them in the form of taxation would be advancing a step toward killing one of the greatest comforts the masses have been able to acquire at small price.

To speak correctly of moving pictures they should not be classified with amusements. They are entitled to a far more dignified classification. When they were in the nickelodeon stage and used as "the chaser" in the vaudeville shows they came within the category of amusements, but for several years their sphere has been that of one of the greatest in the educational and reform lines. During a recent debate before the moving picture censors in London, Eng., one of the most influential and highly respected members of the clergy of that city made a passionate appeal in behalf of the pictures. He asked that the censors be liberal in their views regarding them to almost the point of infringing on their own consciences. The reason he gave for taking this stand against other proponents was that moving pictures have been of inestimable value in the temperance cause and in the promotion of moral undertakings, and nothing should be done that may curtail such usefulness.

Of course, the eminent clergyman was not original in his defense of the moving pictures. All he said has been voiced in all quarters of the globe for several years; but when such sentiments are re-voiced by other distinguished people it is policy for the moving picture people to give them publicity; and since an attempt has been made to place the cabaret on a level with moving pictures the present is the most opportune moment to give publicity to the London sentiment.

By the way, the first man to discover the powerful influence moving pictures were exerting in behalf of temperance work was a clergyman located in Summit Hill, a small mining town located near Mauch Chunk, Pa. He told his congregation from the pulpit one Sunday that he had observed a well defined falling off in the saloon patronage of the town since the establishment of a moving picture house and urged his people to give the latter all the patronage possible. His views soon received widespread attention and upon them has been based the most formidable of arguments when movements had been launched against the pictures by censorship and other bodies who have very frequently been more zealous than just.

In taking the part of the moving picture against the cabaret it is not intended to inaugurate a reform movement against the latter. Such movements come within the jurisdiction of other quarters, but when there appear to be attempts to again drag the pictures into the war tax matter after the same proposition was but recently defeated after a hard and expensive contest there is license for going the limit to show that the cabaret and moving pictures are not identical

There is still another reason for protesting against the proposition that the moving pictures go hand in hand with the cabaret on the war tax bill. It is proposed that the cabarets shall pay a tax of one cent for each ten cents or fraction paid for admission. Why, there are few cabarets that charge admissions, and those that do would relieve themselves of the tax by putting it on the refreshments they serve. The moving picture houses have no alternative of this kind and the result would be that the tax intended to be collected from cabarets would fall on the picture houses.

A well known producer of moving pictures has declared that there is but one way to relieve the strain the producing end of the business is now under, and that is to have the exhibitors increase their price of admission. His claim is that increased costs are being keenly felt by the studio managements and the selling and rental prices of the films must be raised to offset. This presents a very serious problem. One that can be solved at the present time only by combined and mutual efforts on the part of producers, exchanges and exhibitors. At no time in the history of the moving picture business has there been a less opportune time for the increase of admission prices than the present. It is not now so much a question as to what it costs to produce a picture, or what the cost is to the exchange handling it, as it is the pulse of the people. For the time being it is a certainty that admission prices cannot be raised by the small houses. The majority of them are located in districts populated by people who at best are in only moderate circumstances and they feel the war and other conditions even more keenly than the better classes It is quite true that such houses are not figured upon when features are put on the market, but they are of no small value to exchanges who have on their hands features that have seen their best days in houses that pay the big money. The "small fry," as some have termed them, cannot be forced out of the business by increased prices without injury to some extent to both the producers and exchange men. The old tin cans, bottles, rags and papers that find themselves cast into the garbage receptacles and dumped on the refuse banks are regularly redeemed and made a source of revenue in some way or another. So it is with the older films. Were they to lie upon the shelves for good after having made a circuit of the higher priced houses the exchanges would frequently find themselves with but a small margin of profit. Many exchange people have told me, and I believe them, that very often they have cleaned up the cost of a picture to the exchange by rentals to the so-called junk house; and it is a fact that almost every movement made to wipe out the junk houses has been defeated or withdrawn by exchange people, demonstrating that the places were valuable clearing houses for films that could not be otherwise disposed of.

And there is nothing at present to warrant the belief that the people who are patronizing the better class of theaters at higher prices would continue doing so at increased rates. If war preparations are to be carried out as now intended, even this class of people will be obliged to economize. While the pictures have really become a necessity they have a limit in that respect. The people feast their eyes upon them, but not their stomachs and the pictures will suffer if the cost to see them is to be increased with the steadily increasing cost of the absolute necessities of life.

If some arrangement could be made whereby the producer, exchange and exhibitor could assume the increased cost of production proportionately the problem would be solved, but such a consummation is not at all likely as there is not one of the three who will admit he is making money; and, aside from the very large houses in favorable localities showing at good prices, this is evidently true so far as the exhibitor is concerned. As one exhibitor put it the other day: "I cannot get any more people into my house today than I did before the high cost of living started, nor have I been able to raise my admission. My expenses grow because my help have to get more money on account of the high cost, and who do you suppose is the loser?"

MEIGHAN IN "THE LAND OF PROMISE."

Thomas Meighan has again been selected to play opposite Billie Burke in her second Paramount picture, "The Land of Promise," an adaptation of W. Somerset Maugham's play. Mr. Meighan was Miss Burke's leading man in her first Paramount picture, "The Mysterious Miss Terry," being transferred to the role, which he assumed after playing opposite Pauline Frederick in a number of her pictures.

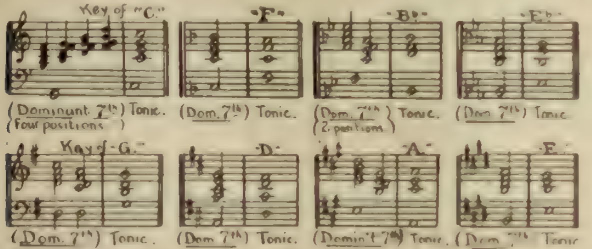
IMPROVISING (Part II).

By Clarence E. Sinn.

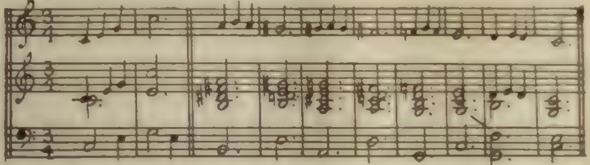
OUR last few letters have been taken up with the chord of the dominant 7th and its resolution to its own tonic chord. To such of you who are not entirely familiar with these chords it will be profitable to figure them out with pencil and paper. I am aware that the greater part of my readers are well posted in harmony and chord building, but some few are not; and to these the next table is submitted.



Some chords of the dominant 7th, each resolving to its own tonic chord.

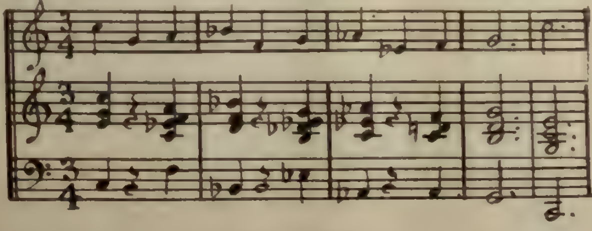
Ex. 25.

Example 25 shows eight different keys, each containing a dominant 7th chord resolving to its tonic. The dominant 7th contains four notes and thus can be written (and played) in four different positions. These positions are the original position and three inversions, viz., 1st, 2d and 3d inversion. The first measure in Example 25 shows the dominant 7th of C. (The chord is made up of G, B, D and F.) This chord is shown in its four positions (original and three inversions) and it resolves to the chord of C (the tonic). The other keys shown in this example (F, B flat, E flat, G, D, A and E) show the dominant 7th chord in the original position. Some of them show one inversion. All can be written in the four positions. Work them out for yourself and familiarize yourself with them. It is essential to know exactly what they are when you play them, and where they are when you want to play them.



Ex. 26.

Something was said in the last letter about melodies being built upon the tables of modulating chords given. Example 26 shows how a melody (or phrase) may be built upon a sequence of dominant 7ths. Of course this little melody is purposely made simple. One may elaborate upon it as he wishes, or make another. The principal thing is the sequence of dominant 7ths. As each one resolves to its tonic chord, that chord is made into a dominant 7th of the next key and so on. Players familiar with Verdi will recognize the theme in 26 as a simplified form of a phrase in "Traviata."



Ex. 27.

While on this subject let us introduce another little phrase built upon Example 20 (given in the letter before this one). The example shows how to modulate from any key to the one a whole tone below. Example 27 gives a sequence to these modulations (C to B flat, B flat to A flat and—through G, 7th—back to C again). A little melody is placed above these chords as a hint of what may be done.

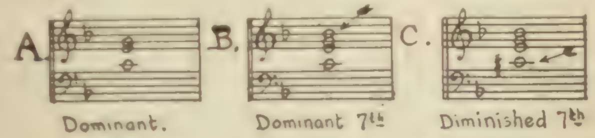
The Diminished 7th.

A very useful chord for modulating is the diminished 7th. You know what the chord of the dominant 7th is. We have talked of little else in the last two or three letters. Take a chord of the dominant 7th in its original position and raise the lowest note a half tone. The chord is now diminished—that is, made smaller. Look at Example 28.

In the first measure (which is marked A) is found the dominant chord of the key of F (C, E and G).

In the second measure (marked B) is found the dominant 7th of the key of F. (Arrow points to the B flat—a 7th above the fundamental C.) This is the original position of the chord.

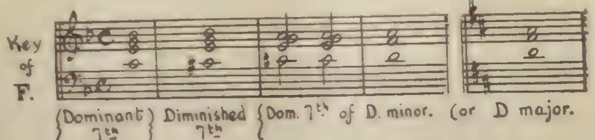
The third measure (marked C) shows the lower note raised one-half tone, making the note C sharp instead of C natural. The chord is now called a chord of the diminished 7th.



Ex. 28.

A peculiarity you will notice in this chord, which is found in no other—it divides the chromatic scale in four equal parts; the interval from any note to the one above or below is exactly three half-tones. So if any one of these notes is lowered a half tone, we will get a dominant 7th of some key. That is, our chord in the third measure of Example 28 (marked C) can be changed back to the dominant 7th again by lowering the bass note, and also can be changed to three other dominant 7th chords by lowering one of the other three notes.

Examples 29 and 29½ (which latter will appear next week) will make this plainer.



Ex. 29.

Example 29 shows the key of F giving the chord of the dominant 7th, then the same chord diminished (a diminished 7th); then the top note—B flat—is lowered a half tone, which produces a dominant 7th of the key of D (or D minor).

Australian Notes

THE New South Wales Renters' Association is preparing a report on the conditions existing under the double Federal and State Censorships. The information was asked for by the acting premier, Mr. Fuller, who has been pressed to take steps to relieve the industry of the unfair burden. It is commented upon that Mr. Fuller was the prime mover in the establishment of the Federal Board, and that now he is its only critic. The only censorship that can be made really effective is the Federal Board, which is not limited in its jurisdiction to the confines of any one State, as Mr. Fuller's board is. Once the State resigns the control to the Federal Board it should be an easy matter to improve the latter's system. Film exchanges are complaining that the Federal Board has a much stricter system than the State Board. But both are showing absurd results due to their want of knowledge of the conditions in the industry, and a decidedly erratic attitude upon different subjects. But, as was remarked by a prominent exhibitor, the present point is not what are the defects of the two systems, but which could be best made effective, and therefore should be retained.

W. Franklyn Barrett's patriotic subject, "Australia's Peril," is now completed, and is to be presented at the Sydney Theater Royal on May 19. This picture will undoubtedly be one of the most pretentious photoplays yet produced in Australia. Mr. Barrett is well known in the moving picture trade in America, having represented Fraser Films, Ltd., in New York for several years.

Beaumont Smith, a prominent figure in the theatrical world here, produced a four-reel comedy, entitled "The Hayseeds," some time ago. This was a burlesque on Australian farm life, and followed closely a certain kind of Australian stage comedies which have been very successful. "The Hayseeds" has also met with a large measure of success, and the producer has now a similar subject in course of production, to be called "The Hayseeds in Sydney."

John F. Gavin is to produce a two-part comedy featuring Fred Bluett, a popular vaudeville star at present appearing in Sydney. There are rumors that this producer is contemplating making a series of productions for the American market. At the time of writing, no detailed information is available.

Raymond Longford, producer of "The Mutiny of the Bounty," has started on the making of a feature subject, to be entitled "Church and the Woman."

Charles Woods, who has directed many Australian successes, is also busy on a multiple reeler.

It will be seen that the production end of the business here is in a particularly flourishing state.

A South African film, "Winning a Continent," was screened privately in Sydney the other week. This production, which is 9,000 feet in length, has as its theme the wonderful history of South Africa, into which has been woven a fine story. Harold Shaw deserves much praise for his masterly direction. The film is beautifully photographed, and contains stirring scenes of the great trek that preceded the foundation of the Dutch republic. In the picture every detail, no matter how small, has been attended to. The Zulu war dances, the weird ceremonial costumes and deadly looking assegais make scenes that are new to the screen.

The Sydney Town Hall is being crowded out each Saturday night at present, the Paramount program proving a good attraction. Two five-reel features, one Famous Players and one Lasky, comprise the evening's entertainment, while vocal items by prominent artists are also an additional feature.

The Co-operative Film Exchange has secured the Australian rights for all Art Drama productions, and the first of these was released last week. This exchange will also shortly release the big Frohman subject, "The Witching Hour," a special trade showing of which was given this week.

Australasian Films, Ltd., announce that they have secured the rights for "The Seven Deadly Sins" (McClure-Triangle), and also the features, "A Morman Maid," "The Whip" and "Mickey."

The Progressive Film Service, which controls the Mutual productions in this country, has proved true to name by exceptionally rapid advancement. Their head office in Bathurst street, Sydney, now occupies the whole of the first floor of Photoplay House, which space is to be considerably added to this month, by the addition of the major portion of another floor, where a showroom and projection parlor will be installed. Chief Sudholz is quite satisfied with the way in which Mutual films have been received by the exhibitors here. This exchange has recently opened up a fine collection of Krauss art pictures of players, a side line that should prove very successful.

I hear on good authority that the South American Trust contemplate extending their business to Australia, by starting a new exchange to distribute high-class American and English films. There are many brands of American features that have not been exploited in this country as yet, and there is much likelihood of this report being true.

Another newspaper for exhibitors has made its appearance in the shape of the Progressive News, published by the Progressive Film Service, and edited by Claude Phillips, publicity manager of that concern.

The Glaciarium, Sydney, which has been closed for several months, reopened this week as a first-run house for Bluebird and Red Feather photoplays. The winter season has just commenced, and attendances at all picture houses are very large. In fact, on Saturday nights, it is very hard to find a seat in any house at eight o'clock, and it is a common occurrence at that hour to see long lines of people standing outside the theaters waiting for the session to end.

MAURICE F. TOBIAS.

FROM bookeeper to president in twelve years, every step achieved by his own efforts, is the record of Maurice F. Tobias, executive head of Superlative Pictures Corporation. Mr. Tobias entered the film business as a bookkeeper for the Greater New York and Empire film Exchanges, then on Fourteenth street, in 1905. He was one of William Fox's first associates when that showman made his advent in the film business, and while with him originated a system of booking that is still in vogue. This system, termed by Mr. Tobias the "lock system," locked a complete show for a period of consecutive days, thereby eliminating any loss of time from one exhibitor to another, and avoiding any mistakes in the course of shipments.

M. F. Tobias.

Joining Paramount, Mr. Tobias traveled through New York State selling Paramount. As manager of the Mutual New York Western exchange Mr. Tobias proved his worth, when, having taken over the office of that organization when it was in a state of chaos, he promptly righted matters, and when after four years he resigned Mutual New York was the pet of the company's circuit of exchanges.

Superlative Pictures Corporation feels that with Maurice F. Tobias as its head the success of the firm is assured.

"Tangier, Morocco" (Mutual-Gaumont).

THE VIEWS of Tangier, a seaport of Morocco, presented in "'Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 31," give a good idea of life as it progresses in this part of Africa. We learn that its roadstead is the largest in Morocco, and that while it exports cattle, wool and dates to a considerable extent, its chief dealings are with imports. At the docks we witness the rather cruel method used by the Moroccans in loading cattle. This is done by placing a rope about the animal's horns and suspending its body therefrom while being lifted onto the ship. Interesting types among the natives are shown, and scenes in the streets, some of which are very narrow.

"St. Kitts, W. I." (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 31," we learn that the Island of St. Kitts, one of the Leeward Islands in the British West Indies, has a population of 30,000 inhabitants, mostly negroes, and was discovered by Columbus in 1493. In the picture a number of views in and about Basseterre, the capital of the island, are shown, including the Bay Road Market, Cayon street, St. George's street, Square street, and the dock. In addition to this there are views of mountains and fields, with women at work in the latter.

"Here and There in Texas" (Pathe-Combitone).

"Here and There in Texas," for release July 1, is a most comprehensive and interesting number. The film embraces scenes in San Antonio, including the famous Alamo, San Jose Mission and other points of interest in the surrounding country. Pictures of Medina Dam, Nueva Laredo and Corpus Christi are also shown, and also of the native wild animals of Texas.

"The Monastery of Piedra, Saragossa, Spain" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The Monastery of Piedra, according to "Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 31." In its grounds are the lovely cascades, which have been photographed for our benefit. The cascades and falls are of a variety of styles which have fashioned themselves through the centuries. Among the most beautiful of these are Trinity Falls, Caprice Falls, and Iris Falls. The latter gets its name from the beautiful effect produced by the sunlight playing on it.

"Winter in Galicia" (Mutual-Gaumont).

"Winter in Galicia" is a short bit found in "Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 31." It is interesting pprincipally because we have been given in film very little about Galicia, a country which lies on a slope of the Carpathian mountains. Scenes in the mountains showing the Galicians at their favorite winter sport, skiing, a dance of the mountaineers, and snow-covered fir trees in the Carpathians are all interesting sights.

"China and the Chinese" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

The first of a series of films being released by the Educational Films Corporation of America, entitled, "China and the Chinese," deals principally with farm life in China, and is of unusual interest. We learn that 80 per cent. of the Chinese live on rice, and we see a rice field being plowed with the crudest sort of wooden plow, drawn by a single ox, and see the laborers dredging the river for mud with which to fertilize the ground. A primitive wind mill represents one method by which irrigation is accomplished. Another method is the water buffalo, a wheel operated by ox power, and still another and more usual method, in which the water wheel is operated by human power. The threshing of the rice, the hulling of it, and the sifting and grinding into flour by means of stone rollers, are interesting sights. The rice and flour is then bagged and taken by boat to the market. A wandering restaurant, where rice is dealt out at so much per dish, and scenes showing fine flocks of geese and crated fowl ready for the market are seen.

"Cattle Raising" (Pathe-Combitone).

The Combitone number for June 27 gives an accurate and vivid description of dairy ranches as they are being conducted today in Texas. Modern methods are employed in every instance, and in viewing the film we become thoroughly alive to the fact that the influence of progress has penetrated even to the cattle country. Some splendid specimens of prize-winning Jersey cattle are shown; and it is indeed interesting to see these animals being put through a tank containing a certain solution to rid them of disease-carrying ticks. Scenes from Corpus Christi Bay complete the reel

"Scientific Stock Breeding" (Paramount-Bray).

The scenes shown in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, No. 72, covering scientific stock breeding were photographed in the cattle-growing districts of the West, where the Federal and State governments have established stations for the purpose of experimenting with various breeds of animals in order to evolve certain kinds which will produce a greater amount of food at the least possible cost of maintenance. The subject is well illustrated, showing at the same time a splendid type of animal and its inferior progenitor. Some of the finest food-producing animals in the world are shown in this picture.

"On Duty With the Coast Guard" (Paramount-Bray).

An intensely interesting subject showing how the Coast Guard protects and rescues the seafarers of our coasts. We see the guards, arrayed in oilskins and hip-boots, launching a boat when the surf is running high, and righting a boat that has been overturned. The most interesting feature of the picture is the launching of the breeches buoy, which is done with the aid of a small cannon, from which is fired a bar attached to a light rope. The shot is aimed to go over one of the ship's spars. The rope is made fast by a sailor, who then hauls in on it and draws out a heavier cable, to which the breeches buoy is fastened. When this is attached to the ship's mast the sailors one by one get into the buoy and are hauled ashore over the improvised aerial trolly. In this way the crews of wrecked ships are saved from possible death.

"Uncle Sam's Gun Shops" (Universal).

Scenes showing how the barrels for big guns are made in an arsenal "somewhere in the United States" will be found in the Universal Screen Magazine, No. 22. We learn that the gun barrel has several coverings, all of which are sweated and shrunk, and that no bolts are used in assembling. We are shown the sweating pit, 150 feet in depth, and a gun barrel being lowered into its outside jacket, after which it is sprayed with cool water, which shrinks the metal to a perfect fit. We see also the polishing of the barrel in the huge lathe, the winding of the wire sheath, and the adjusting of the breech mechanism. In looking through the barrel of a 14-inch gun we are told that the life of it is about 100 shots. The dreadnought Pennsylvania's formidable equipment is also shown.

"Unmasking the Mediums" (Paramount-Bray).

The second installment of "Unmasking the Mediums" will be found in Pictograph 72, and covers the question and answer proposition, which has always been so shrouded in mystery. Many of us have been at mediumistic meetings and have seen the slips of paper passed around, on which curious ones write a question and place the paper, unfolded, in an envelope provided for the purpose. The closed envelopes are gathered up and taken to the medium, who by means of a double skirt and an electric bulb, reads and replies unseen to the questions, with the lights in the room switched off. This is an interesting expose.

Scene from "Unmasking the Mediums" (Paramount).

"Are You Physically Fit?" (Universal).

In the Universal Screen Magazine, No. 22, will be found an illustration of how physical examinations are conducted at the Life Extension Institute of New York. It suggests that at least once a year a person should undergo this thorough examination and act accordingly. At the human service station in connection with this institution the patient is asked to state history, living habits, etc. Here it is contended that the average weight is not always the best weight; prosperous persons are usually over weight. The films tell us that faulty vision is found in 30 per cent., and nose and throat affections in nearly 59 per cent. of the applicants, and infected mouth and ears trouble more than 22 per cent. In testing the reflex action of the knee it is found that alcohol in excess diminishes the knee jerk. The chest of each patient is gone over thoroughly for the purpose of detecting possible tuberculosis; temperature, pulse action and blood pressure are also taken. Finally we are told that sixty per cent. of persons past middle age are dying from preventable disease.

"American Deer" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

One of the most interesting of the Ditmars series of animal pictures makes us acquainted with the different species of American deer. A monster bull elk, with a beautiful set of antlers, is seen feeding from the keeper's hands; he is docile, we are told, while the fawns are still in their babyhood. The pretty baby fawns toddling about after their mothers, or sleeping while mother eats, are delightful. The northwestern deer have white tails, which they use in warning their mates or the fawns of danger. At the approach of danger they run with their tails erect like flowing plumes. We are shown a herd of them in flight and leaping over a ditch, also running with difficulty across smooth ice. Another species shown is the mule deer of the west.

Film Shows Care of Automobile

"The Automobile Owner Gets Acquainted with His Car" Fascinating One-Reel Picture Presented by Cameragraph Film Manufacturing Company, Inc.

THE CAMERAGRAPH Film Manufacturing Company, Inc., of which F. R. Abrams is the president and general manager, is issuing a thousand-foot film which shows the automobile owner just exactly how to get the best results from his car by taking proper care of it. The film is entitled "The Automobile Owner Gets Acquainted with His Car" and was made under the direction of the head instructor of the West Side Y. M. C. A. Automobile School.

As the picture opens we see a party starting out on a pleasure trip and witness the various annoyances to which they are subjected because of inexperience and lack of technical knowledge of the workings of the automobile. Among the things that happen are the puncturing of a tire without having a reserve shoe on hand, and the overheating of the engine, which we are told is due to lack of water in the radiator, lack of oil or a retarded spark.

After discovering that we know little or nothing about the machine we drive, we proceed to take a lesson on its care. This lesson is carefully filmed in detail. The mysteries of the motor are unmasked for our benefit in closeups, which enable us to follow each minute detail, even to the cleaning of the carburetor and the filling of grease cups. Closeups of brake, clutch and reverse in action, also transmission gears and differential are shown.

The film is intensely interesting and will be handled on a state right basis.

Films Aid Popularity of Books

Declaration Made by Edwin Thanhouser Backed Up by Prominent Librarians.

A RECENT printed refutation of the statement of a certain woman editor, by Edwin Thanhouser, has attracted considerable attention and has been commented on by various prominent librarians throughout the country. The editor referred to is at the head of a publication for public librarians, and claimed that moving pictures were a detriment to public libraries. Excerpts from letters received by Mr. Thanhouser from various librarians throughout the country will no doubt prove interesting to readers. They are as follows:

George F. Bowerman, librarian of the Public Library of the District of Columbia, says: "Our Chief of Circulation reports that the exhibition in the moving picture theaters of the film of any story such as Ramona, Pickwick Papers, David Copperfield and Vicar of Wakefield always increases the demand for the books."

"Unquestionably the presentation on the motion screen of a well-known book creates an instant demand on public libraries for the book itself," says P. B. Wright, librarian of the Kansas City Public Library, Kansas City, Mo., "and so long as only worthy books are shown libraries benefit thereby."

Librarian Arthur E. Bostwick, of the St. Louis Public Library, St. Louis, Mo., is even more emphatic in his support of Mr. Thanhouser's views. He states: "I beg to say that you are quite right in your view that films based on the plots of books stimulate the circulation of those books in the Public Library. This is the case whether the books represented are good or bad. We occasionally have a demand stimulated by motion pictures for books that we do not place on our shelves, but the demand is the same when the book happens to be 'David Copperfield,' or 'Les Miserables.' I am fully in accord with the statement of Mr. Edwin Thanhouser, as enclosed in your letter. It is my own opinion that these films are very much more interesting and effective when they are taken amid the actual scenes depicted in the book, as was the case in the recent English film of 'David Copperfield.' I should suggest, therefore, that producers should use more American standards and select these with a view of making the picture at the actual place in which the scene of the book is laid."

Mrs. Mary C. Spencer, State Librarian, Michigan State Library, Lansing, Michigan, is not so positive in her opinion, but seems open to conviction if the films placed are of "the right kind." She says: "The placing on the stage of the legitimate drama does stimulate the request for books on the play. The truth of the matter is, so few films by great artists are shown here that the audiences are not composed of the representative people; I have no doubt if we could have the right kind of plays shown we would have more demand for the books."

The statement of E. W. Miller, librarian of the Free Public Library of Jersey City, N. J., reveals that his library has compiled a special card index of books that have been adapted to films. "The experience of the Jersey City Public Library," he writes, "has been that the presentation of motion pictures made from books usually results in a marked increase in the use of such books, particularly when they are presented in the better class of theaters. The increased interest in the books so presented varies greatly, but on the whole it is of considerable importance. In this connection it may interest you to know that we have compiled a card index of novels and stories that have been produced in motion pictures. This now covers 350 titles, and is being added to all the time. Two installments of this list have been printed and are enclosed herewith."

Herbert S. Hirshberg, librarian of the Toledo Public Library, Toledo, Ohio, agrees with the Thanhouser view, but makes a plea for care in film adaptations.

"We do feel the effect of the presentation of the films," he states. "It is always interesting to see how a classic has been adapted. Some adaptations are excellent and portray the spirit of the original, others give an entirely false idea and destroy the value of the book. Film producers should, I believe, use especial care not to permit poor productions or adaptations of great works of literature. In their desire to produce popular films they often lose sight of their obvious duty in this respect. When good books are well filmed the producer is performing a real service in advertising and stimulating demand for the book. We also find that when poor books, not included in our library collection, are pictured, we frequently have requests for them and have difficulty in satisfying the applicant for the lurid tale with one of better quality and one truer to life."

Items of Interest

BETTER motion pictures for young people was one of the subjects discussed by delegates to the great National Conference of Charities and Correction at Pittsburgh, June 6 to 13. No conference of similar character approaches this one in magnitude. There were 4,500 registered delegates interested in all phases of social work and drawn from every state in the Union. A program demonstrating the kind of pictures which are most attractive to young people was presented at the convention by the National Board of Review and the National Committee for Better Films in co-operation with the Children's Service Bureau of Pittsburgh. This program included "The Primrose Ring" and a Paramount-Bray Pictograph. Those opening the discussion which revealed the fact that the delegates were unanimously of the opinion that a constructive plan for young people's entertainments would receive general commendation, were Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review and Miss Mariam Schoenfield of the Children's Service Bureau of Pittsburgh.

One of the most successful industrial publicity films which has yet appeared is that produced by the Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., showing the processes of manufacturng plumbing fixtures and their use as agents for health, entitled, "The Tale of a Tub." The picture is in five reels, and was produced under the direction of Charles B. Nash, who is publicity manager for the company, and who recently showed one of the nine prints under the supervision of the Dayton Master Plumbers' Association.

Debut of Third Drew Generation

When the Metro-Drew comedy, "The Deadly Calm" is released another generation of the famous Drew family will be seen in public for the first time. Joseph Lee McVey, a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, makes his debut in that comedy. The child is two and one-half years old. Thus the public will be introduced to another generation of one of the most famous families in the history of the American stage. The Barrymore-Drew family has been among the leading theatrical families for the past fifty years.

The romance of Maurice Barrymore and Georgie Drew united the Barrymores and Drews. Maurice Barrymore and Georgie Drew were as popular in their day as are Ethel Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, John Barrymore and the famous Drew brothers, John and Sidney, today. And there is S. Rankin Drew, too.

The public appearance of little Joseph Lee McVey, who bears the same relationship to Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew that John and Lionel Barrymore bear, now brings before the public the fourth generation of this talented family.

GRIFFITH SPECTACLE RETURNS TO BRIGHTON.

Arrangements have been consummated with the Brighton Beach Music Hall for the presentation again this season of D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," at that theater for a limited summer engagement, beginning Friday night, June 29. A symphony orchestra of forty will accompany. The Brighton Beach Music Hall has been completely redecorated and renovated in anticipation of the engagement.

Herman Katz, Paralta Treasurer

HERMAN KATZ, treasurer of Paralta Plays, Inc., though but little known in the moving picture trade, is a man of wide reputation in commercial circles for business ability and extensive financial interests. When but 36 years of age he retired from active business. This was less than ten years ago. Since then he has not directly participated in the management of any of the manufacturing and retail sales enterprises in which he is a large stockholder. Last March, when they were organized, he became treasurer of the Paralta interests.

Speaking of his entry into the picture industry Mr. Katz said: "The trouble with this business in the past, as I see it, is that operations were begun and have since been continued on lines far removed from sound business methods. The whole thing took root in an unsubstantial foundation. What the moving picture industry needs is financial common sense and intensive business methods from top to bottom. With such sterling innovations introduced there can be no doubt of its stability and value as an industry. Its lasting qualities cannot be doubted. The moving picture has come to stay and will continue to be distinctively the poor man's amusement as well as entertainment for all class of people.

Herman Katz.

"If one individual can make over a million dollars on an investment of less than $5,000 in four years, under the conditions which have prevailed, with sound business development and honesty behind it all, it would be very difficult to convince me, after what I have learned, that the moving picture industry is not a good field for capital to enter. It certainly offers great possibilities.

"The production of moving picture film is manufacture, its distribution to exhibitors is jobbing and its exhibition in theaters is retailing. Some may dispute this and say that the picture business is just show business in another form—that the laws of merchandising cannot be made to fit any field of amusement enterprise.

"If a man will stop to think a moment, and think on the right lines, he will see the fallacy of any such argument. The high efficiency business methods of today are really only common sense and experienced developed to their greatest power. Notwithstanding argument to the contrary, common sense and business experience are just as applicable to handling moving pictures as to anything else that is bought and sold.

"I have identified myself with this work with every confidence that business brains and integrity will eventually make the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures safe investments when conducted on legitimate and conservative lines."

G. P. HAMILTON, JR., ACTOR.

To few men in the motion picture business is there given the opportunity to study every angle of the industry, and one of the most exceptional cases is that of G. P. Hamilton, Jr., who appears as the Sergeant in the Metro's forthcoming "The Slacker." This young man, who is now 36 years old, has been a cameraman, a director, an actor, a laboratory man, and he has also worked in the sales department of various picture concerns. Mr. Hamilton is the son of one of the pioneer cameramen and producers in the industry. His father, together with Cameraman Bitzer, photographed the famous Fitzsimmons-Jeffries fight at Coney Island eighteen years ago. Mr. Hamilton served in the regular army for three years. He is an expert horseman and a sharpshooter.

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

HARLAN, Kenneth. Born in Boston, Mass. American parentage. A flat six feet tall and weighs 178 pounds. Brown hair and blue eyes. He made his stage debut about 1913 and has played in stock, with Gertrude Hoffman in her production of Summerun and in January, 1917, he made his picture debut in Betsy's Burglar, with Constance Talmadge, a Fine Arts production. His present studio connection is with the Ince Companies, which took over the Fine Arts. For the rest Mr. Harlan, overlooking the fact that we have to make these paragraphs twenty-four lines long, confidingly says, please fill in this yourself. With that license we could, if we were of a mean disposition, give him the luridest sort of a past, but not having a mean disposition, even when a player gets writer's cramp when he gets half way through his questionaire, we feel entirely safe in announcing that he likes all outdoor sports.

Kenneth D. Harlan

SEDGWICK, Eileen. Born in Galveston, Texas. American parentage. Is five feet, three and one-halt inches tall and weighs 125 pounds. Very blonde hair, grey-blue eyes. Miss Sedgwick made her stage debut at the age of four and has run the gamut of vaudeville, stock, drama and musical comedy. She is well known in the "United" time as one of the Five Sedgwicks. She made her debut in August, 1914, with the Lubin Company as Rose Melford in The Eagle's Nest, and played with them for a year before changing over to Universal, her present connection. She did Gretel in In African Wilds and Mary in Dropped from the Clouds. She has, at the time of writing, played the leads in 37 one and two-reel comedies, 12 dramas and 16 western and animal stories—55 roles in less than three years. She likes riding, driving, skating (ice or roller not specified), dancing, autoing, and other al fresco sports.

Eileen Sedgwick

MAILES, Charles Hill. Born in Halifax, Nova Scotia. His father was English and his mother a Newfoundlander. Being honest, he admits he is half an inch shy of six feet, and he weighs 185 pounds. Dark complexion, gray hair and brown eyes. Mr. Mailes made his initial bow on the stage in 1894 and has played under the managements of Liebler and Co., Broadhurst Brothers, the Shuberts and Henry B. Harris. Mr. Mailes made his screen debut in 1910. He doesn't remember the title of the play. They were just plays in those days and you made one a week or there was trouble, but he was one of the foundation stones of the old Biograph and as long as there was any Biograph he was a Biographer. He played in the support of Mary Pickford and Florence Lawrence in the days when it was worth your Biograph job to have a name to be called by in the papers.

Charles Hill Mailes

COOKE, Ethyle. Born in Lynn, Mass. Is five feet, two inches tall and weighs 115 pounds after lunch. She forgot to tell the color of her hair and eyes, so perhaps the world will never know. Miss Cook believes in taking time by the forelock and leading it around. When she was only six she began her stage career as a toe dancer and by the time she was fourteen she was not only a professional dancer, but a teacher of dancing and an organizer of amateur entertainments in and around Boston. When she graduated from school she went on the regular stage as a member of the Henry W. Savage forces. Later she was given parts in Peggy from Paris, Woodland, The Sultan of Sulu, Marrying Mary, and Mme. Sherry. About six years ago she joined the William Fox forces and has spent the time since then in Fort Lee. She writes that her peculiar hobby is hurrying home but she, of course, likes "outdoor sports."

Ethyle Cooke

STOWELL, William. Born in Boston, Mass. Irish-American parentage. Just six feet tall and weighs 185 pounds. Dark complexion, dark brown hair and gray eyes. Has had experience on the stage in drama and musical comedy and his screen debut was made in 1909 in Fafitte, the Pirate, a Selig version of the kind-hearted old gentleman who used to infest the Louisiana swamps. He later played with American and is now getting his mail at Universal City. Among his productions are The Overcoat, Hell Morgan's Girl, The Gentleman Burglar, The Water Rat, The End of the Road, The Other Side of the Door, Overalls, The Man from Manhattan, The Piper's Price, The Doll's House, The Flash Light, The Triumph. Mr. Stowell does not like "all outdoor sports," no indeed. He has found a new one. He writes it down that he likes "general sports,"

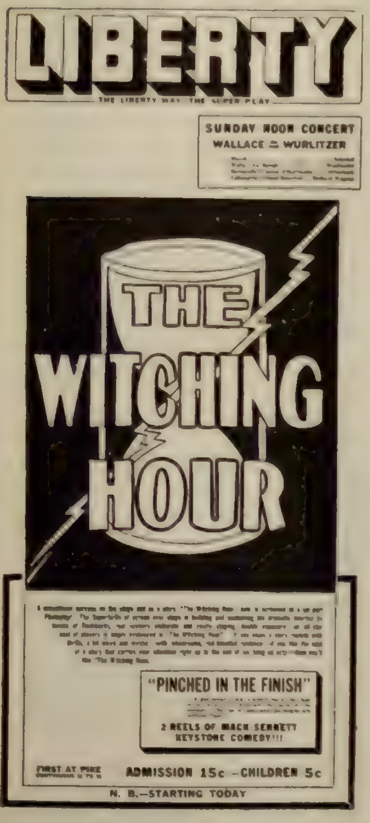
Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Returning Cuts.

GEORGE Editor Carpenter, in a recent issue of Real Reels, remarks that about 2,000 Paramount cuts have not been returned to the Notable Feature Film Co., of Salt Lake, by exhibitors to whom they have been loaned. This is viciously bad. Paramount used to charge for this cut material, but decided to loan advertising cuts to the Exhibitors in return for the profit the brand derived from the advertising; but the profit is not so great that all cuts can be given each Exhibitor. There is a large annual saving to Exhibitors through the loan of this material, and the least the Exhibitors can do to prove their appreciation is to return the cut material as promptly as possible after use, that brother Exhibitors may also profit by the Paramount generosity. It is unfair to other Exhibitors and unjust to Paramount, and it is one of the reasons why there is not larger number of companies offering this free material. If you would receive courteous treatment, you must offer courteous treatment in return. This is not written merely to Exhibitors in Mr. Carpenter's territory. It goes for the entire business. When Exhibitors show themselves more grateful for favors received they will receive more favors from manufacturers generally.

Front Page Stuff.



Gordon F. (100%) Fullerton, of the Liberty, Seattle, sends in a four column advertisement that dropped down the front page of the amusement section of the Sunday Times. The layout is novel, but we think a light benday on the hour glass would have helped to bring out the white title a little better. Possibly the title does not need to be brought out, because the block is so striking, but the use of some background tint would have made for plainness; perhaps a heavy benday for the sands and a lighter stipple for the glass, with a little shading for the high lights. The use of special cuts seems to be increasing, partly because they yield better results and partly because they work up better than the material furnished by the companies, most of which is designed to work in a smaller space. It costs money to make original designs, but the cost is small in proportion to the greater number of persons reached and the arithmetic is very simple. You pay a certain amount per line or inch for your advertising space. The paper sells you this space and you can do as you will with it. If the additional investment in specially drawn design and a cut from the drawing will bring you in a greater return in persons who have read the advertisement, and who may not notice an all-type display, then your investment in the design shows a profit, to say nothing of those who might see the advertisement anyhow, but who are more favorably inclined toward the play through the greater appeal of the drawing. That these special designs must pay is evident when such alert advertisers as Mr. Fullerton and Ralph Ruffner persist in their use. Here are two trained men who know how to watch for results from special stunts, and they discontinue ideas that do not prove of value.

The Why of It.

Ralph Ruffner seems pleased with Jimquin's letter about his Liberty theater. It will be remembered that Jimquin (who seems to be suffering from writer's cramp) visited the Liberty anonymously and wrote bit of Chaplin film had gotten into a Bill Hart picture and wanted to know why. Ruffner explains thusly:

> The Liberty acknowledges a rare compliment at your hands in making public the letter from "Jimquin" of Los Angeles. When a gentleman is pleased and will take the time to write his impressions in such a complimentary tone, I am sure there are hundreds who feel the same way, but who do not take the time to say so. Certainly it is the keenest and most appreciated mention the Liberty has met with. You will better understand when I tell you Mr. Quinn did not make his presence known to me while in Spokane, and the first intimation I had that we had been "stayed with" was when I saw the article on page 611, April 28th issue. I now recall that some gentleman called the office on the phone and asked the reason for a section of a Charley Chaplin subject appearing in the Triangle release, "The Gunfighter." The reason was this: It is the first time the public has (presumably) seen Big Bill Hart take a shot at Charley. Like other pictures we have seen, the action takes place in two parts: they saw Bill fire the shot (and they knew it was a shot because they heard one), and they saw Charley rush onto the screen at a mile-a-minute clip, do a one foot skid and then beat it again. That's all there was to it. Just one of those bits of foolery that does no harm but sure stirs up some talk, and when we can make 'em talk it beats newspaper space at a dollar per inch. Some Triangle exhibitor may read about this and want to know particulars. Go! The opening scene in "The Gunfighter" is one of the most beautiful effects and bits of genuine novelty we have had in the history of the game. Many will remember the morning star and the light in the cabin window 'way up on Rim Crag Rock; the gradual dawn of the new day, followed by sub-title introducing Hart, then the pinhole dissolve opening on the muzzle of "The Gunfighter's" gat —the ends of the bullets being very conspicuous—then the shot fired square in your face, seemingly—opening up quickly to a full close-up of Big Bill laughing, then showing him shooting at a flock of bottles on a limb. * * * Just at the instant of the shot in the picture, our electric shot effect (my own invention) was used, and then three feet of film of Charlie followed. By drawing on your imagination you can, perhaps, picture the effect. Naturally, on the beautiful opening scene I have just mentioned, every light in the theatre was out, and the surrounding darkness served to bring out all the beauty of the scene Mr. Hart and his assistants intended an audience should behold. One never knows what is going to happen at the Liberty during the pictures, the slides, the intermission marches or overtures; everything is directed at originality and surprises with the uppermost thought of "entertainment" always in mind. In other words, "nothing tried, nothing gained." Given four walls, a box office, a screen, an organ and a projection room and offering straight pictures is one way of doing business, but with all these things and a dozen bright, active young men to help out and who strive to make today better than yesterday, * * * well, something is bound to happen. Most of the Liberty's young men have since enlisted, and now all we have left is "four walls, a box office, a screen, an organ and a projection room." I once read in the Saturday Evening Post this sentence: "The attitude of any employee is but the reflection of the master spirit." Jimquin tickled all of us when he remarked about the "good humor that oozed out all about." Happy employees sure do put 'em over the left field fence every time up. I'd like to tell you a whole lot more, Doc, but I'm afraid you'll shoot it in the department and we're not flattering ourselves at your expense. Think this will answer Mr. Quinn's curiosity as to why Chaplin appeared in a Bill Hart subject.

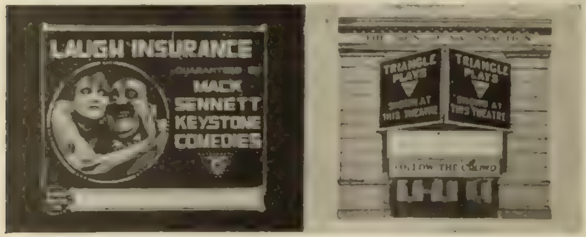
That's the explanation, but we think Ruff has a nerve mussing up an atmosphere opening with a comedy bit. It's rather risky, but Ruff knows what he can do to his patrons and evidently they enjoy his unexpectedness.

Changing the Cry.

The Boston branch of Peerless Productions, managed by Sam Grant, has worked a new idea. It has taken The Battle Cry of Peace and retitled it, now calling it The Battle Cry of War. New subtitles have been made to fit the new chief title and the obsolete statistics have been thrown out or replaced by new and up to date facts and figures more in accord with the moment. Mr. Grant has gotten out a lot of striking printing for the renamed production, all red and blue on white, that will make for better business on a rebook. And his own advertising matter to the Exhibitor is right in line with that prepared for the Exhibitor's use.

Coming Slides.

John W. Hanson, of Triangle, has prepared a set of stock slides for Exhibitors to use in advertising coming Triangles. Two of them are shown in the reproduction herewith. It was only the other day that a woman asked us why the portrait slides used for coming attractions were always so unattractive. Patrons notice such things. They have their unconscious effect.



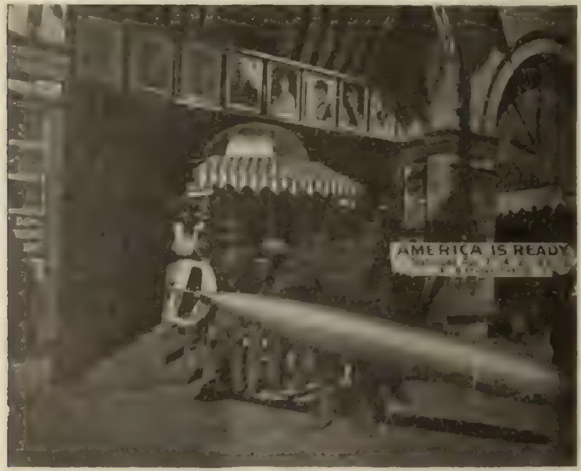
These cuts are attractive and well colored and give the Exhibitor something that does not disgrace his screen. The blank spaces at the bottom of the dark slide and below the sign in the other are for the insertion of the days of showing.

Worked the Summons.

W. C. Pierce, of the Royal, Princeton, W. Va., sends in a summons he used lately and says that it gave him standing room against unusual opposition. He adds that he used the police as much as possible to distribute these summons, and as court was in session there was a further advantage. Most cities and even towns would not stand for the use of their police as bill peddlers, but where it can be worked, nothing could be more effective. The summons was printed without blanks for filling in, and were distributed broadcast. It did not follow the legal form very closely, and yet it got the attention, as the summons almost always does. He uses a syndicate program. It has been some time since a summons was sent in—almost a year, but they are always worth a try and seem to work even when in the simplest form.

Torpedoed.

Charles Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, sends in this print without comment. He doesn't say whether he paraded the torpedo through the streets with the boys carrying the sign or whether he sent the diver through the streets and used the torpedo for lobby display, but we presume that the torpedo was for lobby work, since the spectacle of a single man, hampered by diver's dress carrying a torpedo unaided, would suggest a farce. Mr. Decker is using a real diver's dress and not a fake. We are sorry he did not send details. Usually he does.



Bill Is Wright.

William Lord Wright, whose humor column in Selig's Paste Pot and Shears is about the most widely clipped stuff sent out by the press agents, hits a solid blow now and then in spite of the humor. A recent issue remarks:

> So many advertising slides were shown last evening that it was 11:30 p. m. before "The Pep of Pocahontas," in five reels, was finished.

This is not as much of a joke as it sounds. In an eagerness to make a few dollars out of the advertisements, a house will drive away business many times in excess of the slight gain; for no one goes to the theatre to look at advertising slides, more particularly the sort the average Exhibitor who does that sort of thing gets on his screen. There is no objection and considerable merit in foreign advertising in the house programs, but do not force a lot of advertising slides on your patrons just because you know they are helpless. There is no profit in making a couple of dollars and losing six times as much. Bill also drops into verse. Bill never worried Tennyson and Longfellow about their laurels, but there is sense in what he says

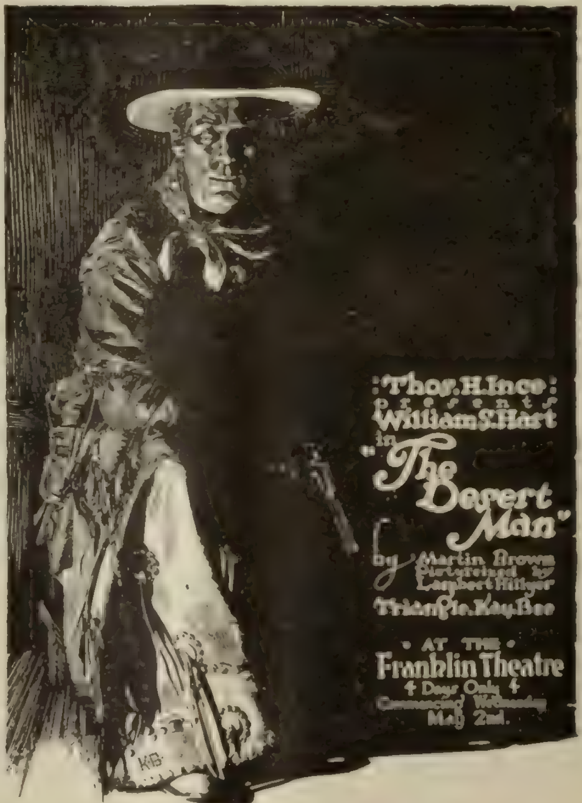
Yes indeed, I like to go
Once we waited overlong
For the illustrated song!

But today in movie show—
Everybody's there you know!
Hours pass in pictures gleam
Advertisements on the screen!

There's a slide for Johnson's soap.
New perfumes and toothache dope.
Wake me when the play's begun
And the advertising's done!

Keeping Down Expenses.

This cut was used by A. B. Krueger, of the Franklin, Oakland, Cal., for his newspaper work. He sends in an engraver's proof instead of a newspaper reproduction, and we do not know how the lines came out in rapid printing, but the idea is worth noting. This is taken from a full page trade advertisement. Evidently the lower part of the black mass was painted over black and newly lettered in white. It gives an original effect merely at the cost of the cut and a little art work instead of representing a considerable expense for an inferior original design. If you have anyone who can do plain lettering, the weekly issue of this paper will be your art gallery. All you have to do is to paint over the parts you do not want, either with chinese white or black drawing ink, letter in the new text and send it over to the engraver. Not every cut will work, of course, and the half tones will bother, but there are many cuts you can work over in this way and get "special" designs merely for the cost of the cut and a little lettering. It worked for Mr. Krueger and it will work for you.



Now It's the Family.

The Jewel, Valentine, Neb., has a new one. In place of the kid matinee it is offering a "family program" on Saturdays, when the whole family can come in. This lifts the curse off the "children's" matinee, but there is perhaps a slight danger that some may argue that the program on other days is not suited to the entire family. This is a small matter, though, and the idea generally is a good one. It might be possible to build this up. With a ten and fifteen-cent price for general admissions, make a special price for mother and the kiddies at the matinees and another price if father comes to the night show, too. Make it a quarter for mother and two children, or thirty-five cents for mother and daddy and two kiddies, with a nickel extra for additional children. But make it other than a Saturday for special prices. The Saturday kid matinee is practicable at a special price only because it is given before the regular times of performance. The house has a good line in "'Are you going to say 'I am sorry I missed it;'" We used the same idea not long ago on a lodge notice with "It's better to say 'I'm glad I went, than I'm sorry I missed it.' Be a wenter."

A Campaign.

L. W. Carroll, of Carroll and Donnell, Lyric theater, Lancaster, N. H., sends in his campaign for The Great Secret. He writes:

> "My first move, about four weeks before the serial started, was to secure an old trunk and display it in the lobby with this sign over it: "A great secret is contained in this trunk. To be opened Mar. 31st." Along the week before the opening of the trunk we ran slides asking what the great secret in the trunk was, etc., and had all our patrons anxiously awaiting the opening. The same day the trunk was opened (by the way it contained a card reading: "The Great Secret," Tuesday Apr. 10). We started our screen slides and poster campaign followed by liberal display ads and readers in the local paper. Then we mailed the enclosed folder to a select list and opened up the first episode to the biggest business that we have ever had on the first night of a serial. The following week we repeated the first episode together with the second and those who had stayed away the first night went the next week because they had heard about it from their friends and were anxious to see it.
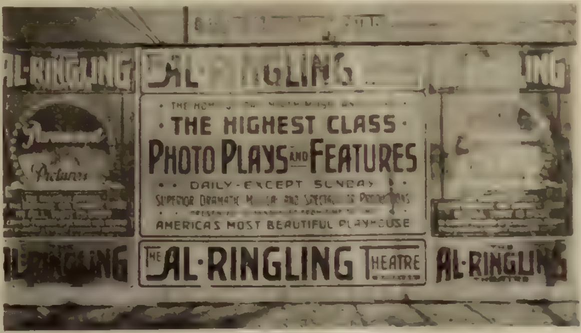
> I have quite a campaign mapped out for the Seven Sins that I may outline at some future time if this is worth anything.

The enclosure referred to it a slip of white paper seventeen inches long by two wide. It is enclosed in a tiny envelope. When it is taken out it is about two by two inches, sealed with a red seal. On the front is the legend: "Don't open this until you have broken the seal." As you start to unfold each turn gives two new phrases; one in the front of the sheet and the other on the back. If you open it straight down at one motion it does not make good sense, for it must be slowly opened and the back read, then the front. The folder is no novelty, but this is a new idea to us and must have taken some little time to work out so that the sentences would come in their proper places. The first opening, for example, shows "Some folks knew it sometime ago." This is printed at the top of the face. On the back is the continuation "But it is still the great secret." Now another fold is opened. Below "Some folks &c." appears "The secret concerns William Strong." Below that, on the back "and a girl named Beverley Clark." It will be seen that each fold takes [illegible] phrase from the front, but if the reader does not get the idea the first time, he will go back and work it out and so then the idea will be doubly effective. Mr. Carroll sends in some well written advertising copy and gets a fair display from the printer. Two good points he makes are: "Think of seeing your favorite stars each week for fourteen weeks," and a list of the most recent Bushman-Bayne productions made at the Lyric. Mr. Carroll says that no letters are sent out with typed addresses. All are hand written to give the suggestion of personal correspondence.

Permanent Stands.

If anyone should know the value of posted paper, it should be Al Ringling, of the Ringling brothers. Evidently he believes in it as the reproduction shows. This is a pair of Paramount eight sheets and with a painted sign in between. The house is in Baraboo, Wis., the home town of the Ringlings and winter quarters for the circus bearing their own name, the B. & B. show wintering in Bridgeport. Look it over and see how a real expert words his stands.



By Letter.

The American Feature Film Co., of San Francisco, originated a novel advertising stunt for "The Ne'er Do Well" that might be adapted for local use. It is mailed out in an envelope bearing the card of Darwin K. Anthony, at the address of the company. Within is a letter with a similarly printed head. In imitation typewriting it starts off "My dear Kirk," and under pretense of refusing an application for money, it recites the story of the book. Only in the last two paragraphs is there anything to suggest the advertising end. The first of these refers to the fact that Rex Beach took the career of Kirk as the subject of a novel and the second tells how it has been done into motion pictures. And here this is made a part of the reproach and not a definite advertisement. Even though the manner in which the letter is gotten up shows it to be an advertisement, it atttracts attention through its novelty. Observance of a few small points would have made it completely deceiving. In the first place the circular is mailed out under one cent postage. Then the envelope card is too large for the executive offices of a man of business. About half that size would have been about right. Inside the heading is too close to the top. No business office jams the heading right against the top of the sheet. The signature is in script type. A cut signature should have been used, and a date line should have been carried. Being a personal letter, the date would merely have been the day of the week to avoid a date that would too soon grow old, and the letter should have been set in ribbon-faced type or have been printed through silk. It serves its purpose as an advertisement, but it could have been even more than that. The letter might also have been shortened a little to advantage. It tries to recite too much of the story. The greeting starts off "Your wire for money received, and I will not send a cent." It might better have been: "It is nothing to me that you are in jail charged with the murder of the husband of the woman with whom you are in love. You have proven yourself a ne'er do well, and have forfeited all claim upon my bounty." Then could have followed the summing up with the attention more firmly gripped. The advertisement as it stands is both good and out of the ordinary. We think most of the letters were read in their entirety—and this was the point the company was after. The suggestions are merely refinements of the scheme.

Helped Along.

Mrs. Belle B. Gardner, of the Arc, Delphi, Ind., sends in a program "just to let you know we get many good ideas from the department." The program is a one sheet nine by twelve, and is probably less expensive than small folded programs, which have to be run on a better grade of paper. The feature was The Eagle's Wings on Patriotic Night, which was the anniversary of Paul Revere's ride. It was a timely thought hitching the patriotic night to an appropriate date.

A Neat "Out."

Announcing the success of a recently released film, a house tells about the hit it has made and then adds: "Owing to the many big productions we have booked, we will be unable to present this for several weeks." This works nicely to explain why the film is not used first run and even works to the credit of the company in that it makes capital of the other services booked.

Continuous.

For more than a year now the Mystic, Petaluma, Calif., has been getting out a four-page program. It comes right along, week after week, with never a miss. It is not pretentious, when compared with some, but it is workmanlike, informative and very evidently does what is expected of it or it would not have lasted so long. It pays to make your program an institution.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

RECENT developments have disturbed the efforts that were being made to obtain for the author an official registration of this work. Since it will not be possible for some time to secure this protection, it is believed that the next best protection offered is the service supplied by the Authors' League of America, Inc., which offers to both members and non-members the use of its script registration bureau for a moderate fee.

First understand the law. The Copyright Law for 1909 in the second section declared that until a literary effort is copyrighted or dedicated to the public through publication without copyright, the script remains the property of its originator and redress may be obtained under common law. In other words, unpublished matter does not come within the scope of the copyright law, and publication of a film story is either its presentation on the screen or in print in book form when it is entered as a book and not as a film play.

This latter device is apparently unsound unless there is a genuine and not a technical publication. The play must not only be printed, but it must be distributed to the public, to be entitled to protection. Until then it is still unpublished in the strict sense, though enough has been done in the matter to affect the author's position at common law.

The better plan is to hold the story in script until it can be published in film. The only trouble will be to prove priority of invention. In other words, you must satisfy the court that your version of the story was in existence prior to the version which you claim to be an infringement. Your unsupported word is not sufficient and the testimony of your friends is not always definite and conclusive.

To remedy this condition, the Author's League has put into practice a registration scheme very like that suggested in this department some five years ago, though it is not probable that the League has seen this suggestion. It is more likely that this is an adaptation of some one of the several registration schemes in use abroad.

The scheme, which has passed the legal scrutiny of the League's attorneys, is simply this: You are supplied with number ten legal envelopes in which you are to enclose copies of your stories, using a different envelope for each story or synopsis. This is provided on the face with blanks for the title and author's name, the signature and address of the person requesting registration, the date, the signature of the witness and blanks for the League's use in numbering and dating the registration. This envelope is sealed with wax and is sent the League with a fee of fifty cents for each envelope. The League will return a receipt card bearing the essential facts and will, upon demand, supply five certificates of registration, which may be affixed to copies of the script. More may be had upon a slight additional payment, but five should be more than ample.

Upon dispute the envelope containing your idea will be produced from the archives of the League upon a court order, and be presented in evidence, becoming one of the exhibits in the case and so marked for permanent identification.

The League does not and cannot guarantee non-infringement, nor does it prosecute infringements. It does give the author a perfect and unassailable proof that a story by him was in existence in that precise form at a certain time, and for this service the charge made is so small that it will not tax the purse of the most modest writer.

Until the matter comes into court, of course, the presentation of a duplicate carbon with the assurance that the like is registered with the League will be sufficient evidence upon which to base any argument.

It is the belief of this writer that this is, for the present at least, the most efficient and indeed the only adequate protection offered the author, and readers of the department are urged to make use of this service for their own protection.

Membership in the League is not required, but there are many features offered by the League in return for the $10 yearly fee that in time of need will bring a far greater return than the dues. The address of the League is 33 West Forty-second Street, and the secretary is Eric Schuler. Most, if not all, of the leading authors are members of the League, and many of them form the League Council.

We believe that the general use of the League certificates will very matrially serve to improve present conditions, for the League is not at all like the late P. A. L. This organization means business.

Looking Ahead.

One fault of present day production is that much material is used not fitted for screening. Poor stories are the inevitable result, and the medium and not the producer is blamed. This is an error time alone will correct. Lacking trained judgment, most editors of today trust to the judgment of others. Instead of looking for new thoughts and new treatments, they seek safety in that upon which judgment has already been pronounced. They recommend for use the play or book already in favor, regardless of the suitability of that play for screen purposes. This is a matter that only time can correct. Manufacturers must learn, through expensive experience, that not always will the successful play or book work into a good photoplay. Better results will be had from plays specially written for the screen, plays in which the author has kept in mind both the possibilities and limitations of the screen. He must offer only stories capable of being told in direct and clearly undestandable action with the use of as few leaders or other interruptions as possible. He must be competent to make his story so strong and appealing that the director is not required to use all sorts of tricks and effects to cover up a paucity of plot. He must know what will and will not photograph, just as the camera man must know light and actinic values. Then, and only then, will original stories be written with the assurance that a reasonable percentage of them will please.

Once More.

Jesse L. Lasky has announced that he has abolished a central script bureau as being ineffective. Instead he has given each director a staff writer. A considerable time ago we assured Mr. Lasky with some emphasis that Mr. Turnbull would not bring him the results he desired. He knows that now. Getting in line for the next "I told you so," the staff writer idea is not going to work well, either, since it will give the directors too free a hand. Men like William De Mille can be trusted to be artistic always, but there are few De Milles, and many of the other directors will develop a depressing sameness that will hurt the product as surely as varied but badly chosen stories. What really is needed is an editor big enough, broad enough and with sufficient intelligence to recognize good in the work of others. Such a man could build up a staff of writers who would give both excellence and variety and whose work would be so plainly and clearly written that any producer could get a good release from the script.

A Brain Polisher.

Here's a new idea for a brain polisher. See what you can do toward making the story of "Othello" into a farce comedy. Write the synopsis only, keep it as brief as possible, but make your idea clear. The right is reserved to print the best idea. Positively no attention will be paid to letters postmarked later than August 31st. Other developments will be criticized briefly if a return envelope fully addressed and properly stamped accompanies the synopsis. Not more than one reply may be sent in, and to insure this, clip this paragraph and send it with your synopsis. There may be some delay in replying to solutions, as we hope to be out of town and mail must follow us. Be careful to address your letter to this department and not merely to the paper.

Carbons.

Don't merely make carbons of your stories. Keep them in good order, that you may find them quickly. Either file them alphbaetically or use some indexing scheme. You never can tell when you will need the carbon for reference, and this does not end with the sale of the story. You may be asked to duplicate the story because the original has become lost, and you surely will want to have a copy to look over from time to time to compare with your later work. Your old scripts should be as much a part of your working library as your text or reference books. Keep them; keep them all. It will be worth the trouble. If nothing better offers, a twenty-five-cent box file will suffice, or one for sales and one for unsold scripts.

Not Good Enough.

"I write a prety fair story," was the modest way in which one novice sought to express his qualifications. "Pretty fair" is not good enough by far. Pretty fair never was good enough even in the palmy days, when almost anything would sell. Today only better than best will sell, so wait until you can better the average before you try to sell. And you won't have to wonder if your work is better than average. When it really is, you'll know it without being told.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Transparent Screen.

The Central American Film Service, Inc,. New York City, makes the following request:

> We have a request from Mr Darcy, presumably a subscriber or reader of the Cine Mundial, for the following information, which we would ask you to kindly send us as soon as convenient:
> A. Information as to who manufactures a screen through which a clear picture may be shown from the rear, and what is the least possible distance same can be used with good results.
> B. What is the greatest distance a good clear picture can be projected on a screen from the front, with the use of alternating current and a transformer?
> C. By using a special lens (describe) what is the least distance a machine can be placed from the front of a screen to show a 16 x 16-foot picture with good results?
> We would also appreciate any recommendation covering machines, screens, lenses, etc., also as to whether or not a stereopticon of same focal length can be used in conjunction with each of the above mentioned.

In the first place, gentlemen, there is no such thing as a 16 x 16-foot picture. A moving picture is always ¾ as high as wide, unless the proportions are distorted by the projection being at an angle caused by the lens not being level with the screen.

Referring to your inquiries by letter: (A) I am now in Cincinnati, Ohio, and have not my files available, and from memory I can only name the Mirror Screen Co., Shelbyville, Ind., as manufacturers of a transparent screen. They make a glass screen which, aside from limitations in size and first cost is ideal for the projection of pictures from the rear. Unless I am mistaken, they also make another cheaper type of transparent screen.

(B) I do not know but that a good clear picture can be projected with either A. C. or D. C. up to at least 250 feet, though it is a rather costly thing to do, because with the present extremely inefficient condensing system there would be a large waste of light, and in order to accomplish this, you would have to use a very high amperage if A. C. were used at the arc. You can secure practically as brilliant a light (though not so satisfactory a one) with A. C. as with D. C., but it requires approximately double the amperage to do so. If you propose to make the attempt I would suggest that you use a motor generator set, a mercury arc rectifier, or at least an economizer (transformer). You can use a rheostat to secure any amperage you desire, but it is wasteful of power.

(C) To get a 12 x 16-foot picture I would not advise less than 50 feet. You will hardly obtain a satisfactory 16-foot picture at less than that, though you might get a fair one at 40 feet. Below 40 feet though I would not consider a 16-foot picture as being at all practical, and even at 40 feet you would have a very bad condition, and will find that an inside shutter machine will serve much better than the outside shutter type, as with the latter the light ray will have diverged so much by the time it reaches the nearest point that you can get the revolving shutter to the lens that you will have a very poorly balanced shutter.

As to making recommendation with regard to projecting machines, screens, lenses, etc., it is impossible to do that in this department.

Again an Exhibitor.

The Editor was agreeably surprised to receive the following communication from George C. Warner, president, S. C. Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

> Mr. Dear Mr. Richardson: It gives me great pleasure, both personally and officially, to advise you that at the organization meeting held in this city on March 9, 1917, you were elected an Honorary Member of the South Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. We sincerely trust that we will have the pleasure of your company at the first annual meeting of the league, which will be held in Columbia on the second Wednesday in May, 1917, this being the 16th of that month.
> With kind personal regards.

This is the second time the Editor has been honored with this sort of thing, and now feels himself to be almost a regular honest-to-gosh exhibitor. The North Carolina League was the other one responsible for swelling out our chest line. F. H. Richardson, Honorary Member N. C. Exhibitors' League, Honorary Member S. C. Exhibitors' League. Quite classy, my boy, quite classy; seriously, however, I appreciate the spirit which prompted the action of the S. C. Exhibitors' League, and I wish our organization all possible good things for the future. Remember, however, Rome was not erected in a day. You cannot expect to form a league today and lift Pike's Peak off its base tomorrow. Organizations which have accomplished things have, as a rule, accomplished them by the slow process of "a little at a time," but always moving forward toward better things.

Pretty Raw.

In March 31 issue of the "Projection Department" of a Chicago trade paper occurs the following answer to a correspondent, who wants to know why his Power's machine makes a noise when the film is in and none when it is not in. Here is the Editor's reply:

> Take the apron off the machine and carefully bend the ears at the lower end of the apron which the rollers ahead slightly, being careful to bend each one the same amount. If this remedies the trouble, well and good. If it helps, but does not remedy it, then try bending it a little more. If it makes it worse, bend the rollers back slightly. You can do no damage > by bending these apron ears, provided you keep the rollers square with the sprocket; that is to say, equi-distant from the sprocket. To test this, measure from the face of the hub of the roller to opposite teeth on the lower sprocket.

Now turn to page 497 of the "Handbook" and read instruction No. 19. It says:

> Should the film make a chattering sound in going through the machine, carefully bend the ears at the lower end of the apron, which (carry) the rollers (the Editor seems to have overlooked the word "carried") ahead slightly, being careful to bend each one the same amount. If this remedies the trouble, well and good; if it helps, but does not remedy it, then try bending them a little more. If it makes it worse, bend the rollers back slightly. You can do no damage by bending these apron ears, provided you keep the rollers square with the sprocket. To test this, measure from the face of the hub of the roller to opposite teeth on the lower sprocket.

Verily, conducting a "Projection Department" is becoming a comparatively simple matter, with Richardson's "Handbook" to copy from.

The House Lights and Screen Results.

What impresses me as I view different theaters is the great importance of scientifically correct auditorium lighting. More and more it is made plain to me that optically correct auditorium lighting is almost equal in importance to good projection, in that it is impossible to secure satisfactory results from the point of view of the audience without correct lighting of the auditorium. To see a "good picture" it is necessary that the projection itself be high class; that the picture be rock-steady, of correct size, evenly lighted, with just sufficient brilliancy of pure-tone light to bring out the full value of the shades of photography; that the speed of the projection be such that the scene will be shown as it was originally acted, and that the field be flat and the definition of the picture perfectly sharp. So much for the operating room end of it. At the auditorium end we must have the picture of the minimum size which will produce good results in the individual auditorium, in no case exceeding eighteen feet in width. We must have the picture bordered with dead (non-gloss) black, not less than one and preferably three or four feet wide, with surrounding decorations preferably of at least reasonably dark colors; say nothing lighter than a medium tan. But whatever else is done, no ray of light other than the picture light should be permitted to reach the eyes of the audience if it can possibly be avoided. There is perhaps more carelessness displayed in this item than in any other one connected with the projection of pictures. Clocks stuck right up against the screen, with white light covering the entire clock and several square feet of surrounding wall; unnecessarily bright exit lights near the screen; announcement boards beside the screen, their white letters glaring balefully into the eyes of the audience, as if to say: "Come again, if I don't succeed in ruining your eyes this time." And added to all or a portion of this evil close to the screen we find needless sidelights "doing things" to the eyes of the audience, and ceiling fixtures used injudiciously, particularly under the balcony.

And the manager who commits these sins seldom understands that they not only produce unnecessary annoyance, if not actual strain to the eye, but, even though no direct ray may reach the screen, they operate to injure the value of the picture by reason of their effect upon the eye.

But the foregoing does not set forth the full measure of evil done, for then Miss or Mrs. or Mr. Musician, who simply must have enough light to see the music and to enable the audience to see him or her, also he, or she must have the light arranged precisely as may suit his or her personal whim. Dear me, yes! Speak to him (or her) about the bad effect upon the picture and eyes of the audience and he (or she) assumes a surprised and indignant air, as though to say: "Picture! Why who would bother to notice a mere picture when I am playing." And the musician usually gets away with it, too. The rendition of many a $50,000 photoplay has been seriously injured by a third, fourth or fifth rate musician or orchestra with a flood of white light directly under the screen, the same literally committing murder, arson and burglary on the picture, to say nothing of its evil effect upon the eyes of those who paid real money at the box office to view the picture, and not the orchestra or its lights. Of course, the orchestra or piano player must have light to read the music, but it is not necessary to read the whole front of the piano or the music rack or the front of the stage.

Theater managers should study the lighting of their auditoriums and study it well. They can't get good results on the screen unless they do—or, at least, they cannot get the best possible results.

Life of Film.

The Bureau of Engineering and Education, State Board of Health of North Carolina, through Warren H. Booker, C. E., Chief of Bureau, asks the following:

> As a matter of information, I should like to know what you consider the approximate life of a film. The particular question in hand is in connection with our traveling health outfit.
> Considering that we start out with new films, have our own operators and lecturers in charge, who are directly responsible to us, and having them give two presentations a day, approximately how long should such a film last? In giving two presentations, or two shows a day, we may assume that a given film would be run through the machine approximately 600 times a year. On the basis of these figures, approximately how long should new film last us before it is ready to be thrown on the scrap heap?

Well, gentlemen, you are putting up a rather stiff proposition when you ask such a question as this. As far as film itself is concerned, you will find that dealt with on pages 208-209 in the "Handbook," a copy of which I believe you have. This, however, is not the information you seek, and the actual economic life of the film, from the projection point of view, will depend entirely upon the tension at the machine gate, which will, as I pointed out to Mr. Booker personally, and to the operators and managers of Raleigh, depend upon the speed at which the machine is intended to be run, the condition of repair in which the projection machine is kept, particularly with regard to its intermittent sprocket, and the amount of tension carried on the takeup. All these things have directly to do with the life of the edges of the sprocket holes, without mechanical accuracy of which you cannot have perfect results on the screen. Conditions of cleanliness (meaning by this whether the films are allowed to become smeared with oil and accumulations of dirt). Conditions of humidity. In other words, the amount of moisture in the films, which keep them pliable or tough, or, lacking same, brittle and easily damaged. With all those conditions at 100 per cent, giving 600 shows a year, I should say the films ought to be in reasonably good condition after two years of use, but it is never practical to have all these at 100 per cent; moreover, it must be remembered that where the films are in the hands of men traveling around over the country by automobile, giving shows under varying conditions of weather, it is more than likely that the conditions will not average very high. My judgment would be, however, that with even reasonably good care, the films ought to be in very presentable condition at the end of 1,200 runs, provided the machines are kept in good repair, not run at excessive speed and run with proper, carefully adjusted tension. It is quite possible that at the end of 1,200 runs a film would not be ready for the "scrap pile," though I think if you get two years out of a film the Sovereign State of North Carolina ought to be at least reasonably well satisfied. It is, of course, presumed that there be no "pulling down" or other abuses in rewinding the films.

Much Flattered.

Mr. Booker, in addition, says:

> This is in acknowledgment of your courtesy in coming to Raleigh to lecture to the moving picture folks, and particularly for going to Greensboro with me to look over our motion picture outfit and make suggestions for its improvements, some of which I can tell you have already borne valuable fruit. Attached hereto find copy of an act, just recently passed by the Legislature of this state, which appropriates $25,000 for motion picture work in rural districts. We would greatly appreciate suggestions from you with regard to just how this work could be best carried on on this scale. What sort of outfits would you suggest using? Would you suggest a one-man outfit or a two-man outfit? Would you use a gas light or would you use an electric light outfit? If electric lighted would you suggest an arc lamp or an incandescent? Would you suggest an engine generator set similar to the one we now have, or a generator connected to the engine of the car; and, finally, would you be personally interested in installing these outfits?

Answering the last question first, my dear Mr. Booker, I would be "interested" all right, but I have all on my hands that one poor little pair of hands can do, and as for what few brains I have, they work so fast that every time I glance in a mirror I expect to find steam coming out of my ears. Under these conditions there is nothing doing in that line.

Now, Mr. Booker, I have met you personally, and feel that it would be presumption on my part to offer you very much advice, because, without handing out any undeserved compliments, I can say, purely as a matter of fact, that I thoroughly believe you will yourselves solve the problem better than I could, because you are right there on the ground and know all the conditions. I will say, however, that I would not tackle incandescent lamps—yet, or at least I would only experiment with it very carefully. I would suggest that you communicate with Mr. John Skerrett, general manager Nicholas Power Co., 90 Gold street, New York City, setting forth the exact nature of the work, asking him to provide you with one incandescent outfit, if he thinks it will meet your requirements. I think you could justly spend this amount of money on that particular experiment.

As to the separate engine, why, as I pointed out to you personally, by belting to the engine of the car, you would, while not obtaining so steady a power, get plenty of it, eliminate a lot of weight and secure, I believe, at least fairly good results, if you went about the matter intelligently, as I am sure you would. It is purely a question of engine regulation, and several plans for doing that have been published in the Department during the past few years, but I cannot tell you on just what dates.

However, I am away off down here in Louisiana and I guess I had better cease from troubling. My files and my data are a long, long ways from me, and—you understand the situation. I will be more than glad to help you in any possible way, but don't want to give you information unless absolutely certain as to correctness of same. This is not very satisfactory, I know, but consider the situation.

Bad Splices.

F. E. Skinner, Galveston, Texas, sends in a very classy splice and arises to make the following remarks concerning same:

> Having noticed that many operators send in bad splices, I take the liberty of enclosing sample I cut out of an S. & A. Black Cat Feature, Reel No. 21592, received from the Dallas office of the General Film Company. The title of the picture was "The Girl God Made for Jones." This reel came direct from the Exchange, and this is the reason I am sending in the splice. What kind of film inspection is it that passes such a thing as this? It does seem that whoever made this splice was either lazy or did not know much about the handling of films.

Banquet Tendered by Ogden Managers and Operatores to F. H. Richardson.

The splice in question is about 1½ in. long and is made without either scraping the emulsion or trimming the torn ends. The film had been torn diagonally across two pictures, and simply lapped over and stuck together with cement. I join with Brother Skinner in asking the manager of the Dallas General Film Exchange what kind of inspection it is that passes out such a thing as this. The answer is obvious—none at all. And the probable excuse offered will or would be that the film came in too late for inspection, which really is no excuse at all when we consider that there is no slip inclosed requesting the operator to inspect the film and send in his bill for services, or even warning him that the film had not been inspected. The splice in question was in all human probability made after the last run by Jimmie the Usher. I cannot believe that even the most solid ivory top bonehead type of imitation operator would do such a thing as this.

Lens Trouble.

An Illinois operator and reader of the Department, who requests that his name be withheld, has the following troubles, for deliverance from which he sends in an S. O. S.

> Am running a 1916 1A Motiograph using 220 volt current through a compensarc. Have set my carbons as you advised in the Handbooks. Use a 5¾ lens on a 68 ft. trough. Have two 7½ condensers in now, but have tried a set of meniscus bi-convex 6½ and 9½. In both cases I have a ghost in the lower half of my picture, which won't come out. Can you help me? Am using two ⅝ cored carbons, and they pencil badly on 60 amperes. How far should the shutter be set from the lens with the above outfit? I have put a peep hole in the back of the lamp house, which helps me in adjusting the carbons sidewise.

Well, son, you say you have the Handbook, but it doesn't do any good to have a Handbook unless you study it. You should line up your lens system in accordance with the chart published on page 1768, March 17, 1917, issue of the Moving Picture World, or, if you can't find that, then in accordance with the table on page 141 of the Third Edition of the Handbook. The chart, however, is much the better. I would also suggest that you carefully line up your optical system as per page 112 of the Handbook. Having done this, I venture the assertion that you will have laid Mr. Ghost

If you have ⅝ carbons needling on 60 amperes A. C., it is pretty good evidence of either one of two things, viz.: the carbons are themselves faulty, or they are making poor electrical contact with the carbon arms. The word "compensarc" is not, however, conclusive, because, while there is a A. C. compensarc, there is also a compensarc which rectifies alternating current into D. C., and if you are using ⅝ carbons on D. C. you are wrong. They ought to be ¾ above, with a solid carbon below, the diameter of which will depend upon the kind of carbon it is. The revolving shutter should be set at the dissolving point of the light ray, which is at the aerial image of the condenser. To find this point, proceed as follows: Project the white light to the screen, and, using a piece of cardboard or metal, cut the light ray at different distances from the lens, until you find the place where one of two things happens, viz.: either the whole screen just simply dissolves into darkness all over at the same time, or two shadows come together from opposite direction like the blades of a pair of shears. The point at which the whole screen dissolves into darkness at once is the proper place for your shutter, or the point where the two shadows meet in the center of the screen. The mere setting of the shutter at this point will not do you any good. Its value lies in the fact that at this point you can use a narrower shutter blade than at any other point, thus securing maximum light with minimum flicker. I would suggest that you study—not merely read, but STUDY—these things, which are fully and exhaustively dealt with in the third edition of the Handbook, the light ray photographs being printed therewith.

Eliminating Ghost.

New York City is laboring with a ghost. He arises to remark:

> Please let me know the proper focal length condensers to use in order to eliminate a ghost and slight coloring. Ghost appears when I use about 35 amperes. When using 50 amperes the light is perfect. Have tried to match up the lenses according to the Handbook, but the size differs. Am using Simplex lenses 5.90 E. F., working at 3⅞ inches b. f. The diameter is 2¼ inches. Am using two 7½ condensers about 16 inches from the aperture. The throw is about 96 feet, to an atmospheric screen. I will appreciate the favor of receiving a reply by mail, and take the liberty of requesting you to withhold my name, should you care to print this in the department.

With regard to the combination of lenses you need, we found that the table contained in the Handbook was, in a measure, deficient. It therefore became necessary to go further, and Brother Griffith evolved a chart which was published on page 1768, March 17 issue of the Moving Picture World. This chart is based upon the number of amperes used, and the required condition, with 35 amperes and 50 amperes, is quite different. With 35 amperes D. C., using plano convex lenses, you should have two 6½ condensers, with about 21 inches from aperture to center of condenser combination. With 35 amperes, using meniscus bi-convex condensers, you should have two lenses 7½ with 23 inches from center of condenser combination to the aperture. On the other hand, with 50 amperes and plano convex lenses, you should have one [illegible] and one 7½ with 18 inches between the center of the condenser combination and the film, and, using meniscus bi-convex, you should have one 7½ and one 8½ with 20 inches. You therefore see that the amperage has everything to do with the required combination because that, as the amperage increases, we are obliged to increase the distance of the arc from the condenser, in order to [illegible]

I presume you are tremendously disappointed in not receiving a prompt reply. Your letter was written May 3, but I am dictating the reply in the office of the Spokane Hotel, Spokane, Wash., on this, the 30th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1917—Decoration Day—with a blond haired stenographer threatening to bite chunks out of me because I am interfering with her holiday. You therefore see what an awful fate I am daring in order to give you a reply as soon as possible.

Afternoon.

The next important factor is the actinic power of the light. It depends normally on the height of the sun for the latitude of the place at the time when the photograph is taken, and exposures in bright sunlight are found to vary approximately as the consecant of the sun's altitude above the horizon. The light of the sun itself is practically the same at any given time and place year after year, but is liable to more or less local and temporary diminuation by the amount of cloud, haze, dust, etc., present in the atmosphere at the time. It is also affected by the time of day, increasing from sunrise to noon, and then decreasing to sunset. The remaining factor is the effective diaphgram aperture of the lens in relation to its focal length. In most cases of ordinary outdoor exposures this can be taken at its normal value, but becomes smaller and increases exposure if the focal length is much increased for photographing near objects. Besides these principal factors, the nature and color of the objects, their distance and the amount of light received and reflected by them under various atmospheric conditions, have a great influence on the exposure required. W. B. Coventry has shown (op. cit. p. 75) how the "light coefficient L," for full sunlight, can be found, has given a table of values of L for the latitude of London for every hour of the day in periods of ten days throughout the year, also the relative coefficients for "diffused light," "cloudy," "dull" and "very dull." Tables of exposures for different subjects under varying conditions of light have been published by W. K. Burton, A. S. Platts, F. W. Mills, Sir D. Salomons and others, and in preparing them Dr. J. A. Scott's tables, showing monthly and daily variations of light for countries about N. lat. 53 degrees, are generally used. The more modern tables, such as are published in the printed "exposure notebooks," also take into account the plate speeds, but unfortunately there is no uniform standard of plate speeds, owing to the difficulty of fixing a definite standard of light. The subject is fully treated in the British Journal Almanac (1901), p. 675, the Watkins Manual, H. Boursault's Calcul du temps de pose en photographie, and similar works by A. de la Baume Pluvinel, G. de C. d'Espinassoux and others.

The American Photography Exposure-Tables are the most convenient and practical help in determining the correct exposure for any subject, in any part of the world. The new edition has been carefully revised to include all the films and plates on the American market. In every instance the speed has been determined by scientific tests by a renowned expert. The tables assign to each factor concerned in exposure—subject, stop, light, hour and plate—a number. These are found in the tables and added. No multiplication is necessary. The sum is then looked out on a final table, and opposite this number is found the exposure in fractions of a second, minutes or hours. These tables may be purchased for a quarter from American Photography, 221 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

Based on the same principle as these exposure tables, various portable exposure meters have been brought out, in which scales representing the coefficients for plate-speed, light and diaphragm are arranged as in a slide rule, so that, when properly set, the normal exposure required can be found by inspection, and increased or diminished according to circumstances.

The Harvey meter and the Burroughs & Wellcome meter and handbook are for sale by every photographic supply house.

In the Hurter and Driffield's "Actinograph" the light coefficient is given by a printed card showing the curves for every day in the year and for every hour of the day, the unit being the $^1/_{100}$th part of the brightest possible diffused daylight when the altitude of the sun is 90 degrees. The "lens" scale shows the ratios of aperture to focal length in general use, and is calculated for single, double and triple systems of lenses. The "speed" scale is based on the exposure in seconds which, with one actinograph degree of light, will produce a perfect negative of an ordinary landscape. An additional scale is given for five different degrees of illumination—"very bright," "bright," "mean," "dull," "very dull." A table of factors for "views," "portraiture," "interiors," "copying," is also given, and these regulate the figure to be taken for the exposure. The scales are engraved on boxwood, and there are two sliding pieces. It is especially adapted for use with plates of speed numbers agreeing with the H. & D. scale, but can be used with any plate of which the relative speed number is known.

The Actinograph is an English instrument and is probably not to be readily obtained in this country.

Convenient exposure meters have been made since 1890 by A. Watkins, of Hereford, in different forms based upon as actinometrical test of the light at the time of exposure. In the complete "Standard Meter" scales corresponding to "speed of plate," "diaphgram of numbers," "light," "subject" and "enlarging," marked P. D. A. S. and E., are arranged on rings and adjustable round a cylinder. The plate-speeds are taken from a table and the "light coefficient," or "actinometer number," is ascertained at the time by exposing a piece of sensitive paper in the actinometer at the end of the instrument for the number of seconds required to match a fixed tint as shown by an attached pendulum. Many improvements have been made in it, and the latest pattern is made in magnalium. The "Dial" meter is a simpler form in a circular metal case, with four apertures marked "plate," "stop," "act" and "exp." above the corresponding scales, and an actinometer for testing the light. The numbers showing the speed of the plate in use, the f value of the diaphgram, and the actinometer exposure in seconds are brought into the respective apertures and the exposure required is read off in the "exposure" aperture. An "indoor meter" is also made, and a "hand camera calculator" for use with the "Standard" or "Bee" meters. The "Queen Bee" and "Bee" meters are later, smaller and more convenient patterns which have superseded the "Dial" meter and have the plate number and exposures marked round the case, and the scales of "f numbers" and "light" on a revolving glass plate. This is revolved till the f number on the right is opposite the speed number of the plate; opposite the "actinometer number" on the left, found as above, will be found the exposure in seconds. The "Queen Bee" meter is similar to the "B," but of better construction and fitted with a pendulum.

The Watkin's Kinematograph meter is also fitted with a pendulum for counting half seconds and crank turns. It is made especially for motion picture operators and is about the size of a small watch. It gives a direct reading showing either the shutter opening or diaphgram number required under the given conditions. The price is three dollars and is sold by Burke & James, Chicago, as are the Wynne meters described below.

Labels for Glass Bottles.

The following simple and effective means of labelling glass bottles may be of use to some readers: Take a piece of thin paper, and on this, in fairly bold reversed type, write the name required in waterproof Indian ink, then cut to the size of the label. This is then stuck on the bottle with the written side to the glass. When this has adhered, coat it with two or three coats of film cement, which will make the paper translucent and the lettering show clearly through. The label will then be easily decipherable, even in the ruby light, by holding the bottle up to the lamp and looking through it, while also having the advantage of not staining easily, nor coming off when wet.

Protects Adaptations of Old Stories

Court Decides Author Is Entitled to Benefit of Copyright Laws if New Matter Is Added.

WHEN an author adopts an old story as the theme of a drama or the plot of a photoplay he is entitled to the protection of the copyright laws, Judge Learned Hand, in the United States District Court has decided, although the story utilized is not protected by copyright.

The decision was rendered in an action filed against the Mutual Film Company by Robert Stodart, who alleged that the photoplay entitled "The Strength of Donald MacKenzie," produced by the film company, was a replica on the screen of his story entitled "The Woodsman."

"A man may take an old story and work it over, and if another copies not only what is old but what the author has added to it when he worked it over, the copyright is infringed," declared Judge Hand. Stodart's story was based on an ancient tale, but he embellished the story, modernizing the theme.

Judge Hand decided the photoplay was an infringement of Stodart's rights and awarded him $900 damages and $300 for counsel fees and directed the film company to render him an accounting.

Irwin Wins Suit for Services

Litigation Was by Agreement in Order to Adjust Compensation by General Film for Legal Work.

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager and general counsel of the Vitagraph Company, is entitled to $30,000 for services in bringing about an adjustment of the differences which existed between the motion picture combination that was formed to distribute films of "licensed manufacturers," and William Fox.

This is the decision by a jury which June 21, in Justice Platzek's part of the Supreme Court, listened to testimony in Irwin's suit against the Kalem Company and Frank J. Marion as its president, for $3,000. The Kalem Company was one of the ten in the combination which was sued by Fox for $1,800,000, the suit being ended, through Irwin's efforts, upon payment of $350,000.

Each of the five concerns interested in the General Film Company and Kalem, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, Inc., were sued for $3,000. The Kalem suit was brought by agreement. Five of the concerns in the combine paid the amount called for.

UNICORN FILES BANKRUPTCY SCHEDULES.

Schedules in bankruptcy filed by the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, which failed recently, in the United States District court show liabilities aggregating $188,031 and assets of $17,472, consisting of films valued at $12,436; money deposited with the Biograph Company under a contract, $5,000, and cash in bank amounting to $35.

Among the creditors listed are the Otis Lithographing Company, $34,369; Billy West Comedies, Inc., $3,184; Mount Vernon Moving Picture Company, $2,645; Simons, Peck & Ball, Jr., $15,000; Fred B. Murphy, $6,000; Alwyn Ball, Jr., $38,400; Leslie J. Palmer, $26,500; O. J. Buck, $20,176, and the Century Financing Company, $5,000.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS JOHNSTON.

Justice Erlanger, in Special Term, Part 4, of the Supreme Court, New York County, handed down a decision on Friday, June 15, in the case of William A. Johnston against the Exhibitors' Trade Review, holding that articles published and attacking Mr. Johnston were a cause of action, "as involving a personal attack upon the plaintiff beyond the scope of fair criticism directed to his work as an editor."

STRONGE SUCCEEDS MASTERS AT V-L-S-E.

Nat S. Stronge, who has been manager of the news service department for Greater Vitagraph-V-L-S-E for several months, has been made publicity director and is in direct charge of all publicity of the organization. Paul N. Lazarus, who for more than a year has been assistant advertising manager, has been made advertising director of the organization and is in charge of all advertising, including trade paper, newspaper, "fan" publications, billboard and exhibitors' helps.

The changes in the publicity and advertising department were made necessary by the departure of E. Lanning Masters, whose connection with Greater Vitagraph-V-L-S-E ended on Saturday, June 16.

Myrtle C. Bauer

Myrtle C. Bauer.

MYRTLE C. BAUER is among the recent arrivals from the California motion picture studios. She has been appearing in Balboa productions. Miss Bauer is well remembered for her work in "The Saleslady" with Hazel Dawn and "Out of the Depths" with Marguerite Clark, which were two of her most prominent productions while she played with the Famous Players.

Miss Bauer is a bewitching ingenue, of dark complexion and chestnut hair, weighing 110 pounds and as vivacious and alert a girl as ever faced a camera. Prior to joining the Famous Players she was in several Winter Garden productions, as well as having appeared in two Ziegfeld Follies. Six months ago she joined the Balboa company, for whom she appeared in a Baby Marie Osborne picture, and in the first three episodes of "Twisted Thread."

Owing to her mother's illness, Miss Bauer returned East a few weeks ago, and although she has several offers from eastern producers she is undecided with whom she will cast her lot. She is at present at the seashore with her mother and expects to return to the screen in a few weeks.

Nell Shipman Returns from West Indies

NELL SHIPMAN, prominent authoress and star of a score of screen dramas, has just returned from the West Indies, where she has been preparing the manuscript of what will undoubtedly be one of the biggest screen sensations of 1918, as well as several manuscripts which have been disposed of to independent producers.

She is now sojourning in California, but expects to return to New York shortly personally to direct and supervise her story. Perhaps no other woman in the industry has achieved the marked success in such widely divergent fields that she has.

Nell Shipman.

Nell Shipman, herself, very frankly confesses that she is not at all sure whether she prefers building up plots for stories or interpreting them upon the screen.

Following her successful work with Greater Vitagraph, Fox and Lasky productions, she was besieged with offers to continue her good work before the camera, but the lure of the writing field drew her to the West Indies, which proved to be a most fertile field for material for book, stage and screen.

As activities do not start upon her big picture until September, there will be time for Miss Shipman to consider offers for one or two productions in the meantime, therefore we may see her name in some new screen successes, before she sails once more for the West Indies.

JOHN FISK RESIGNS FROM MUTUAL.

John Fisk, formerly employed in the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation at its Chicago offices, resigned from the service of the Mutual on May 16.

Durant in Receipt of Many Scripts

But Head of Empire All Star's Scenario Department Says His Company Is Not in Market.

H. R. DURANT, who has for several months past held the position of managing editor of scenarios for the Empire All Star Corporation, the company which is screening the dramatic successes of the late Charles Frohman for release on the Mutual program, continues to receive large consignments of manuscripts daily from ambitious authors, despite the fact that his organization is not in the market for original material.

In this instance Durant is paying a penalty in extra labor for possessing what is said to be one of the widest personal acquaintances with authors of any scenario chief in the business.

Durant was the first of the well-known magazine editors in the country to desert the field of periodical literature to devote his talents to the screen. He served in turn as editorial chief of the Biograph Company, the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and the Famous Players Corporation, before assuming his present connection with the Empire All Star Corporation.

H. R. Durant.

For the benefit of those authors who have been unable to understand why their offerings have not met the same cordial reception at Durant's hands that were accorded them in seasons past it should be stated that his present duties demand his attention to a list of some four hundred plays, all of which were produced by the late Charles Frohman. From this remarkable list the picture material is being chosen.

Already plays for the entire year have been selected, and scenarios are being prepared by Joseph F. Poland, Hamilton Smith, Anthony P. Kelly, Charles A. Logue, John B. Clymer, Marc E. Jones, C. Doty Hobart, Harry Hoyt and Rufus Dewey. The stage successes which these talented writers are now making ready for the screen include the best of Pinero, Henry Arthur Jones, Oscar Wilde, Zangwill, Clyde Fitch, Augustus Thomas, Sardou, William Gillette, W. Somerset Maugham, James M. Barrie, Haddon Chambers, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, David Belasco, Anthony Hope, Richard Harding Davis, Booth Tarkington, Edith Wharton and many others.

Noble to Produce Independently

Begins Work at Mount Vernon Studio With a Cast Headed By Zena Keefe and Niles Welch.

JOHN W. NOBLE has started his initial production, as yet unnamed, at the Plimpton studio in Mount Vernon Zena Keefe and Niles Welch as heading his cast, which promises to be a most evenly balanced and powerful company. The prologue is now being filmed.

Mr. Noble's production is being made with his own money and exclusively on his own judgment.

"I have made enough feature pictures in enough studios under enough different conditions to feel that I know what I am talking about," said Mr. Noble. "It is the very fact that I have repeatedly found the same limitations existing in practically every studio that has caused me to branch out for myself. I cannot make pictures as I feel they should be made if there are numberless men of power who can inject their opinions into my production. If their ideas were beneficial all would be well, but generally, their views are controlled by something entirely foreign to the production. And for the life of me, I cannot see how a man, any man, can become a competent judge of pictures and their making in a few weeks. How can such a man be competent to assist a producer who has devoted years to the study of his profession?

"For a long time I have been wanting to make a picture in which my own individuality will be allowed to remain. I may be all wrong; my individuality notions may be a great error, still I have never had an opportunity to definitely settle the matter for my own satisfaction. It has always been a case of someone else twisting a pet feature of any of my productions, until even I could hardly recognize it, and I am tired of the whole scheme. I am going to discover whether Jack Noble is wrong or the finest theatrical producers are right."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Douglas Fairbanks at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks, in "Wild and Woolly," was the feature at the Rialto. The picture is based on a story by H. B. Carpenter and was put in screen form by Anita Loos. It is a western comedy-thriller, full of cowboys, Indians, bucking bronchos and six-shooters. Eileen Percy is the new leading woman for Mr. Fairbanks. The Hawaiian Islands and the Panama-Pacific Exposition were the subjects of the educational features.

"The Public Be Damned" at the Strand.

A novel photoplay entitled, "The Public Be Damned," was the attraction at the Strand theater for the week of June 24. Charles Richman and Mary Fuller enact the principal roles. The story reveals a sensational expose of the present food situation, its causes and remedy. Charles Richman portrays the character of Bob Black, wealthy head of the food trust, practically controlling the food production of the entire country, masquerading as a charity organizer, alleviating the suffering caused by the high cost of living. Mary Fuller is seen as the young wife of a farmer. This photoplay is endorsed by Herbert C. Hoover, food administrator of the United States of America and chairman of the Belgian Relief Committee. An extra added attraction was O. Henry's famous story, "The Love Philtre of Ikey Schoenstein." The educational studies consisted of views of a Hawaiian eruption and "Surf Riding." John Hendricks, Arthur Depew and Ralph H. Brigham were the soloists.

"Come Through" at the Broadway.

The George Bronson Howard photoplay, "Come Through," has made a favorable impression at the Broadway theater and has been retained for a second week.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater Olive Thomas in "Madcap Madge," and Gladys Parker, in "Dad's Downfall," were the attractions for the first half of the week. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Louise Glaum, in "Love or Justice," and Polly Moran, in "Cactus Nell," were the features.

W. E. GREEN WITH SPEER COMPANY.

During the past week W. E. Green, formerly manager of the Kleine Optical Company of Chicago, became associated with the Speer Carbon Company in the position of special sales representative. Mr. Green is already active in calling on dealers and motion picture supply houses, and his past associations with the motion picture trade will make him valuable to the Speer Carbon Company in further promoting its extensive projector carbon business.

The Speer Carbon Company has recently effected a change in its sales policy and it is now the intention to place live dealers in all of the larger cities and towns throughout the United States. Dealers who are interested in the new plans of the company are advised to communicate with the head office in order to learn the details of their recently adopted sales policy.

BALSDON, JR., BACK IN NEW YORK.

George Balsdon, Jr., who was assistant distributing manager of the New York office of the Vitagraph Company, and from there was transferred to St. Louis as branch manager, will return to the home office to resume his old position. He was very popular while in New York and returns at the request of the exhibitors to the general manager and they will be glad to learn that he will begin his duties about July 1.

LASKY STUDIO INCREASES EMPLOYES' PAY.

Owing to the fact that the cost of living has increased to such a great extent, the Lasky studio voluntarily raised the salary of all employees receiving $25 a week and less

Westphal Impersonates the President

It's Done on the Screen, However, in Essanay's "The Man Who Was Afraid."

PRESIDENT WILSON of Filmland makes his debut in Bryant Washburn's forthcoming Essanay feature, "The Man Who Was Afraid." This person is said to present the most remarkable impersonation of the nation's chief executive ever shown upon the screen.

The photodrama is a screen version of Mary Brecht Pulver's patriotic story of that title, published in the Saturday Evening Post. It hinges on the President's call to arms. A man to resemble Mr. Wilson signing the proclamation was absolutely necessary for the production.

P. H. Westphal.

Essanay scouts searched the country over, inspecting hundreds of men who claimed to meet the requirements. At last P. H. Westphal, a hotel clerk in Lafayette, Ind., was found. Mr. Westphal was hurried to the Chicago studios and put before the camera. His camera tests proved even better than his actual appearance. Although he had never before been in a motion picture studio, the hotel man proved a good actor for the part.

Trade showings of the picture are going on now at all branch offices of the K-E-S-E. The release date is July 2.

Bryant Washburn appears in the role of a national guardsman who is afraid to answer the President's call, owing to the influence of an overzealous mother love. His friends call him "slacker" and the girl he loves spurns him. Lacerated by these taunts, he casts off his mother's protestations, and hurries to the front. He distinguishes himself in battle, even more so than do the erstwhile friends who had branded him a coward.

Doris Kenyon in "Great White Trail"

THE outstanding feature of "The Great White Trail," the Whartons' eight-reel production given its first showing at the Broadway theater recently, was the work of Miss Doris Kenyon as the star. She had ample opportunity to show her powers, and her excellent work, particularly in the Alaskan scenes, made a profound impression on everyone who saw the picture, so much so that she was surrounded by an enthusiastic crowd after the showing to bestow their congratulations.

Doris Kenyon.

Miss Kenyon drove a team of eight Alaskan huskies in some of the scenes, and the dash, verve, sparkle and life she put into her work made every situation go over with a bang. She handled a revolver like an old-time plainsman and fought courageously when called upon. Her evident youth and sparkling beauty, combined with her dramatic ability and rare courage, all combined to put her over as the big hit of the picture. In one scene she climbed down the side of an almost perpendicular cliff on a rope.

Ekward Jose, Producer of "The Moth"

EDWARD JOSE in a few years has moved into the front ranks of motion picture directors. The production of "Poppy," the screen drama in which Norma Talmadge is starred, has forever clinched Jose's place in his profession, if, indeed, it had not already been assured through his work for several other big producers of pictures, notably Fox and Pathe.

Edward Jose.

Mr. Jose has the happy combination of being both actor and director. No one who has ever seen "A Fool There Was" will be likely to forget his wonderful acting in the principal role, acting that was even surpassed, many persons believe, in "Resurrection," in which he not only played the big part but which he adapted for the screen, wrote the scenario and directed. No man with these manifold talents could remain long unknown, and when Jose decided to abandon acting, Pathe chose him for their leading director and under his hand some of the more celebrated of the Pathe pictures of two years past saw the light. His first for that firm, "The Beloved Vagabond," was colored abroad. Jose was the only man who filmed Kipling, through the medium of "The Light That Failed." As a rule he writes his own scenarios and does the continuity work on them.

So it was that when Joseph Schenck was casting about for a director his choice fell upon Jose. He was actor, director, writer and executive, and above all else, he had the talent to impart to others understandingly that with which he was himself endowed. So "Poppy" was chosen and Jose went to work on the scenario. On its first production in the New York theater Marcus Loew is authority for the statement that it broke every record of the house and he personally congratulated Mr. Jose on his work and Mr. Schenck on his selection of a director. Jose has just finished a second picture with Miss Talmadge, "The Moth," which is to be released late in the summer; and is hard at work on still another.

MOTIOGRAPHS FOR ARMY CAMPS.

O. F. Spahr, manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, recently spent several days in New York City visiting the Army Y. M. C. A., where he went over matters with P. F. Jerome, purchasing agent, in regard to shipping motiographs to all the United States army camps and received instructions to ship immediately one hundred machines to different parts of the United States.

The factory is compelled to work overtime in order to deliver these extra equipments in addition to the regular motiograph orders, which Mr. Spahr states are unusually heavy for this time of the year.

WALTER STAHL TO WED MISS LORRAINE.

Walter R. Stahl, director of the Fairmount Film Corporation's big feature, "Hate," and Miss Pauline Lorraine, a well-known concert singer, have been engaged to be married. It is learned that the ceremony will be performed on Thursday night, June 28, at the home of the bride in New York. Mr. Stahl is a well-known director. His bride-to-be is prominently known in musical circles. Members of the Fairmount stock company will be present at the ceremony. Mr. Stahl will have for his best man James Walter Meade. Miss Violet Gollnick will be bridesmaid.

FANNIE WARD RESIGNS FROM LASKY COMPANY.

A telegram from Los Angeles to the Moving Picture World announces that Fannie Ward has resigned from the Famous Players-Lasky company. The message is confirmed by the officials of the company in New York.

Superpictures to State Right Films

Will Also Release Pictures Through Triangle—Production to Be Done by Triangle.

SUPERPICTURES, INC., the holding company for McClure Pictures, producers of "Seven Deadly Sins," and until week before last one of the controlling factors in the Triangle Distributing Corporation, will sell its new features through two channels. It will produce for the state rights market and also release through Triangle, thus thoroughly covering the field for photodramas of merit.

Superpictures has withdrawn from the Triangle Distributing Corporation, selling its holding to S. A. Lynch at a substantial profit. Frederick L. Collins, president of Superpictures, Inc., has such confidence in the Triangle organization that he has arranged for Triangle to produce six features to be sold by the state rights method, and for the distribution of twelve additional pictures a year through the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Superpictures is prepared to buy any feature of unusual quality. A campaign of nation-wide publicity in newspapers and magazines will be launched behind every photoplay released by this company. McClure publicity, as was demonstrated in the advertising that made "Seven Deadly Sins" a box office attraction, is a stout and sturdy worker for every exhibitor that shows a McClure production, and McClure publicity will be right on the heels of every Superpicture throughout its run.

State rights buyers will not merely purchase from Superpictures prints and permission to show them. They will also purchase the good will demonstrated in the McClure publicity campaigns, that will aim to crowd patrons into every theater showing a Superpicture.

BUSINESS BOOM BEGINNING, SAYS HALL.

That the state rights market is reflecting the beginning of a tremendous business boom, is the opinion of Frank Hall, who is rapidly closing contracts with buyers of territorial rights for the Edgar Lewis production, "The Bar Sinister," and the A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., Jane Grey feature, "Her Fighting Chance."

"When the country decided upon conscription," says Mr. Hall, "a sudden check was noticed in the closing of contracts for territory. A spirit of indecision seemed to be prevalent for a few days, but it was really remarkable how quickly business settled back into its usual channels and buyers became even more active than before the slump. Judging from the live interest now being shown in the disposition of territory for "The Bar Sinister" and "'Her Fighting Chance," the independent exchanges of the country are equipped to take care of a large number of new state rights pictures and are preparing for a strenuous mid-summer drive for business. While pictures with a special advertising angle seem to appeal to buyers most strongly, producers making all high class features should have little trouble selling them at a fair profit.

"I share the belief of many of our leading financial experts that this country is entering upon an era of unprecedented prosperity and, since the show business is one of the first to profit by good times, it is natural that motion picture men should be preparing for a rich harvest about to be reaped.

"With everybody working and tremendous sums of money in circulation it is a foregone conclusion that the capacity of our theaters will be inadequate to hold the crowds seeking relaxation and amusement. Exchanges will profit quickly by the prosperity of the theaters and the large demand for good pictures will keep the state rights buyers continually on the alert for new ones.

"With this condition in mind many successful exchange men are preparing for a marked increase in business, and are therefore showing an interest in state rights offerings which is exceptional for this time of the year."

BUY "MAKING OF A SCOUT" FOR CANADA.

The British Canadian Motion Picture Corporation, Limited, of Vancouver, B. C., has purchased the Canadian rights to "The Making of A Scout." The picture at present is being shown in British Columbia under the auspices of the Canadian Boy Scouts and other patriotic organizations, and is meeting with considerable success.

"THE PUBLIC BE DAMNED" FOR STATE RIGHTS.

Realizing the extreme timeliness of the subject of food control, the Public Rights Film Corporation has produced a five-part production called "The Public Be Damned," starring Charles Richman and Mary Fuller. It shows both the insidious methods used by the Food Trust in squeezing both the consumer and the producer, and also shows the solution of the problem of defeating these vultures who are feeding upon the fat of the land. It is showing this week at the Strand theater, New York.

The first person to see "The Public Be Damned" after its completion was Herbert Hoover, former head of the Belgian Relief Commission and newly appointed Food Administrator of the United States. Mr. Hoover heartily indorsed the production and declared that it was especially timely and that it would arouse the public to a realization that something must and can be done to stop the depredations of the food barons.

The picture is already being booked with great rapidity all over the country on the state rights basis, it is reported. The story was written and the production directed by S. E. V. Taylor, and a powerful cast, including Chester Barnett, Joe Smiley and Russell Bassett, appear in support of Charles Richman and Mary Fuller.

"WOMAN AND THE BEAST" LATEST SALES.

Graphic Features announces the closing of the following territories on "The Woman and the Beast" during the past week: Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, to Southwestern Art Dramas, Dallas; California, Nevada and Arizona, to Peerless Feature Film Company, with offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, to the Hudson Feature Film Company, Pittsburgh, and Eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia, to Philadelphia Ideal Film Exchange, of Philadelphia.

Sales Manager W. Ray Johnston says: "This leaves very little territory unsold. We have closed about everything now, or are awaiting the final signed contracts, and I think next week we can give a buyers' list that will show every district in the country distributing 'The Woman and the Beast.' This achievement would not make it appear that there is a summer-time lull in the state rights market. As a matter of fact, I think the state right exchanges are doing a bigger business than ever."

WOLFBERG GETS "DEEMSTER" FOR THREE STATES.

Several big deals involving foreign and domestic rights to Hall Caine's "The Deemster," starring Derwent Hall Caine, were closed during the past week by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation.

Harris P. Wolfberg, representing a coterie of Mid-West capitalists, has purchased Hall Caine's "The Deemster" for Ohio, West Virginia and Western Pennslvania from the Arrow Film Corporation. Mr. Wolfberg is well-known throughout his territory, having at one time or another represented some of the biggest and most important distributing companies. Recently he branched out as a state rights promoter by securing "The Crisis" from Harry Sherman and has achieved considerable success. Mr. Wolfberg purposes establishing offices in Cincinnati and Cleveland. His present headquarters is in Pittsburgh.

The Apex Films, Ltd., of London, through its New York representative, J. Simmonds, has purchased the South African rights.

KLATZ & STREIMER OBTAIN "THE SECRET TRAP."

Klotz & Streimer, Inc., announce the acquisition of the selling rights of the five-reel feature, "The Secret Trap," starring Baby Em Gorman, the clever child artist who has been trained under the direction of many of the industry's foremost producers.

Miss Gorman will not celebrate her eighth birthday until next September, yet she has played leading roles in many successes, among which are "The Little Orphan," "The Soul of a Child" and "The Little Mother."

In "The Secret Trap" Baby Em has accomplished a feat seldom attempted by a child actress. She plays a dual role and the work has been pronounced as really remarkable by several directors who have viewed the picture. Klotz & Streimer will offer the feature to state rights buyers early in July.

Lyda Borelli Star in "Robespierre"

Famous European Tragedienne Heads Cast of Export & Import Company's Seven-Reel Spectacle.

HAILED throughout Europe as one of the foremost tragediennes, and preceded to these shores by a reputation made by sheer force of her artistry, Lyda Borelli is once more before the American public. In the big seven-reel state rights spectacle, "Robespierre," the charming actress plays the leading role and gives a performance which is altogether up to the standard of her already well-known genius.

The Export & Import Film Company states it at first intended to issue "Robespierre" with no special stress on the cast, preferring to leave it to the public to recognize the famous actress, but the reviewers who say the picture let the news out, and the inquiries are coming in thick and fast, all asking whether it is the same Borelli whom they know from the great Cines productions.

As the Marchioness de Fontenay in "Robespierre," it is Miss Borelli whose love affair with the mysterious "Unseizable" eventually brings about the overthrow of the dictator Robespierre. In a series of exquisite scenes she first plays the noblewoman who leads the idle society folk on their careless way to destruction at the hands of the mob, and then comes a change in her life that transforms her into an intriguing factor in the momentous affairs of the French national crisis. To save her lover she plays her woman's wit against the brains of the keenest man in the Government.

Lyda Borelli.

In "Robespierre" Lyda Borelli is the chief luminary in a company of stars of international repute, the list including the eminent Novelli and Raoul Fabiani.

Ben Blumenthal, head of the Export & Import Film Company, has some plans in work with regard to Lyda Borelli's future before the American public which will place her on the same footing with the picture-lovers here that she has already won throughout Europe.

RUTHLESS CUTTING BURSTEIN'S METHOD.

Exhibitors who complain that many of the features that are offered to them contain a great deal of padding and comparatively little action exempt the King Bee Comedies, which are achieving considerable popularity just now. If even these Billy West comedies did not excite hilarity they would "hold" simply because they are packed with action—action which springs, as it were, from the thread of the story.

"The reason for this is simple," said Louis Burstein, president and general manager of the King Bee Films Corporation. "Our two reelers are cut down from several thousand feet of developed negative. We are not needlessly extravagant; but we don't stint raw stock.

"And then you will notice that King Bee Comedies have very few sub-titles, and those that are employed are short and to the point. It is my aim in supervising these pictures to assure that every foot of the action will be understood in every part of the world, no matter where the pictures are shown."

INTEREST AROUSED IN BRENON'S RUSSIAN FILM.

Visitors at the Herbert Brenon studio at Hudson Heights, N. J., give added proof of the interest that has been aroused in the announcement of his new feature now in the making, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," with Iliodor, "The Mad Monk of Russia," as the star. The subject and the cast of players has aroused a keen and ever-growing interest, and not a day goes by that there is not a steady stream of visitors eager to see the moving picture portrayals of the characters which have been occupying the center of the stage in Europe for some time.

Nance O'Neil as the Czarina and Alfred Hickman as the Czar have scored an immense hit with all who have seen them, while the Kaiser, who is being impersonated by a Frenchman, is said to be a true replica of Kaiser Bill's true self. Mr Brenon has the constant advice of expert Russian authorities and no pains or expense are being spared to make the production correct in every detail.

Edward Connelly, who plays Rasputin the Monk, is declared by Mr. Brenon to be creating one of the finest screen characterizations in the history of motion photography. Mlle. Galanta, Mlle. Marcelle, Conway Tearle and William E. Shay are other players who will be seen in the picture.

REPORT HEAVY DEMAND FOR "HATE."

According to reports from the Fairmount Film Corporation offices the initial showing of "Hate," the big seven-reel feature, has exceeded all expectations. The picture was shown to newspaper critics and a number of territorial buyers representing various sections of the United States. Gus Mohme, of the Biograph studios, who has been selected as special representative of the Fairmount Film Corporation in the sale and distribution of the picture, is preparing an extensive campaign throughout the East and New England territory with a view to putting the picture in every theater from New Orleans to San Francisco.

It is said that a heavy demand has come from the New England and Middle West sections for "Hate." Boston in particular is reported to be anxious to get the feature, as is evidenced by the large number of demands for showings in New York. While Robert Bolling, vice-president of the Fairmount Film Corporation, and other executives are in Philadelphia making preparations for the staging of a new feature within a few weeks, the campaign for the distribution of "Hate" will be carried on throughout the country.

One of the innovations decided on by Mr. Bolling is the sending of the picture into the South to be shown to Southern buyers. This eliminates the necessity of the buyers coming to New York.

Mr. Mohme expects to be in Boston for nearly a week. From Boston he will go to Chicago and probably continue through the Middle West into Southwestern Texas and Southern territory.

"DEEMSTER" EXPLOITED AS CIRCUS IN ILLINOIS.

Warren & Clarke, the great out door showmen who bought the state rights to Hall Caine's massive photoplay, "The Deemster," for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, purpose sending out the big spectacle under a black-top tent and exploiting it just as if it were a circus. It is their intention to feature "The Deemster" as the principal attraction, but to surround it with side-shows, and the regulation concessions that accompany a circus.

Decorated circus wagons, floats and flats, together with equestrians, clowns and all the other peoples and paraphernalia that go to make up a circus outfit will be part and parcel of the equipment. Horses will be hired locally to draw the wagons, floats, etc., and to exhibit the equestrians.

A special car for projecting machines and motion picture equipment will be a distinct part of the caravan. Half a dozen expert operators and several first class electricians will be engaged to look after the projection department. A film printing outfit will be carried and newspaper criticisms and other complimentary notices of the attraction will be flashed upon metallic screens in the open so that he who is skeptical may read what his neighbor thought of the attraction in the adjoining town or village.

"ALICE OF THE SAWDUST" (Century).

The fourth release in the Century series of two-reel comedies has been finished by Director J. G. Blystone, on the West Coast, and has been shipped to President Julius Stern, in New York, for distribution on state rights lines. "Alice of the Sawdust" is the title and Alice Howell star of Century Comedies, has taken advantage of abundant opportunities to extract no end of fun from her experiences as a circus rider and general "cut up."

It has been the plan of Director Blystone to present Miss Howell in unusual "stunts" under varying conditions. "In "Balloonatics," she works a giant gas bag to get the laughs; in "Automaniacs" a motor provides the incentive for comedy, and in "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" Miss Howell goes under water to bring laughs to the surface. In "Alice of the Sawdust" Miss Howell uses the circus for the first time as an inspiration to merriment.

"IVAN THE TERRIBLE" A RUSSIAN WARNING.

State rights buyers are besieging the Export & Import Film Company for more information about its production, "Ivan the Terrible," announcement of which was made in the trade papers through pictorial display only. Mr. Blumenthal, head of the company, made it his special object to arouse the interest of the market, but did not intend to give the impression that the picture was not ready for inspection. The interest created, however, proves that there is a widespread demand for a high-class Russian subject that is at the same time burdened with material of a historic nature.

The story portrays the savagery of abused power and the tragedy it brings to those who live under it. In this case Ivan's brutality comes back to him like a haunting ghost, and the suffering of a people is visited upon his head. In setting and costuming the picture is said to be magnificent, and the Russian atmosphere has been faithfully adhered to. A number of remarkable scenes of devastation by a horde of mounted barbarians contribute the sensationalism of the picture, while the palace scenes and general costuming are a distinctive feature in themselves.

"Ivan the Terrible" is offered in six reels, and the Export & Import Film Company has found inspiration in the scenes to inject with titles some reading matter that makes the production timely and up to our own day in its significance.

"REDEMPTION" SELLING RAPIDLY.

Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, in "Redemption," are repeating at the Alhambra theater, New York, the success which the photoplay scored during its four-week engagement at the George M. Cohan theater.

The exhibition rights for New York have been secured by the Pioneer Film Corporation. Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has bought the exhibition rights for the New England states. Stanley Mastbaum has secured "Redemption" for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, and will exhibit it at the Forrest theater in Philadelphia for a run beginning September 3. Jones, Linick & Schaefer have bought "Redemption" exhibition rights for Illinois. It will be seen in Chicago first at the Colonial theater. The rights for Canada have also been disposed of, and the remainder of the territories are now being contracted for through the agency of David Bernstein, Putnam Building, 1493 Broadway, New York.

Miss Nesbit has leaped with one bound into the front rank of screen stars. "Redemption," as a photoplay, has been acclaimed by press and public.

The production was directed by Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden. All the way through the picture the audience feels the natural and heart-appealing qualities of the story.

SELZNICK OPENS DOOR WITH TWO BIG FILMS.

Lewis J. Selznick has secured the rights to "Parentage" for the territory covered by his New York and Chicago exchanges.

This is the latest evidence of the sincerity of Mr. Selznick's avowal that he had decided to establish the open door at both ends of his business—open booking for the exhibitor and open distribution for the producer. Last week he obtained "On Trial," the first of the National Exhibitors' Circuit productions, which he took on for his New York and Chicago exchanges; he announces the Hobart Henley "thought film of real life," "Parentage."

Two weeks ago a private showing of this picture was held for the trade and reviewers at the Rialto, and since then the picture has been one of the principal topics of conversation in film circles. S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto, immediately booked the picture for the first public showing, which will be at the Rialto, July 8. Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schafer, the Chicago associates of Lewis J. Selznick, booked the film for the Colonial, Chicago, for the week of the National Convention.

"13TH LABOR OF HERCULES" RUNNING AT RIALTO.

"The 13th Labor of Hercules," which is commemorated by the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has been booked and is now running at the Rialto theater, New York, for twelve weeks. "The 13th Labor of Hercules" is composed of a series of twelve parts, each part a complete subject, and contains pictures of various ceremonies and events of the world's greatest exposition.

The Cinema Distributing Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, of which Henry J. Brock is president and Leon Schlésinger is manager, are offering this historical subject for state rights sale. A new policy has been inaugurated for the selling of this subject for territorial rights which is said to appeal to all those who are interested in state right pictures. An attractive line of advertising is available, which includes a ten-page, two-color herald.

WARREN AT WORK ON CLYMER-HOYT STORY.

Edward Warren has begun work on a story that he has just accepted from John B. Clymer and Hary O. Hoyt. It is described as a thought play of the human heart, and is understood to be worthy of taking its place in the high standard already set by the Warren Productions.

Innovations for "Parantage"

Frank J. Seng Operating Extensive Company on Hobart Henley's "Thought Film."

WHAT is considered to be an innovation for state rights distributors in the way of advertising is being instituted by Frank J. Seng in conjunction with his exhibitors' campaign on Hobart Henley's "thought film of real life," "Parentage.'

Besides getting out a twenty-page ad. book, to be used by exhibitors for their local advertising and publicity, Mr. Seng has in work a house organ, which will be issued every two weeks. This aid should be a sales-lever for states rights buyers in selling exhibitors. It will aso be of benefit to the exhibitor in bringing to his attention new ideas of different exhibitors along with news, views, and money-making ideas, which will be of real service to him in presentation.

While in the past it has been the usual custom, as soon as territory was sold, to forget the states rights buyer and exhibitor, Mr. Seng's ideas are more forward looking, he being a successful exhibitor himself.

Another phase of Mr. Seng's campaign, which will aid exhibitors, will be in conjunction with the openings at the Rialto Theater on July 8, and the Colonial Theater in Chicago on July 15, where the billboard campaign will continue for some time after the close of the showings in these cities, and be supplemented by a full quota of newspaper advertising to keep the picture alive for the future showings.

STATE FILM COMPANY RE-ELECTS OFFICERS.

The State Film Company, of Detroit, Mich., held its annual meeting at Battle Creek on Saturday, June 16. Reports showed that, although only six months in business, everything was going along very satisfactorily and that the general outlook was good. The present officers were re-elected. They are W. S. Butterfield, president; W. C. Beatty, secretary; Claude K. Taylor, treasurer; Harry S. Lorch, general manager, and Earl Rathbun, Detroit representative and booker. The company owns "Civilization," "The Masque of Life," "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Libertine," "A Mormon Maid" and "The Deemster." The last two have not yet been released.

"BEWARE OF STRANGERS" OPENS IN BALTIMORE.

Under the auspices of A. Dresner, general manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., "Beware of Strangers," the big Selig picture, was given its first presentation in the South at Ford's theater, Baltimore, on June 18. The picture began its run to a crowded house at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.50. The picture has played to capacity audiences ever since its opening.

Many prominent exhibitors, city officials and others were present at the picture's premiere, and "Beware of Strangers" earned the unanimous praise of newspaper critics and all others who saw it. Mr. Dresner states that the box-office rereceipts prove that "Beware of Strangers" has established itself as a box-office winner.

"COME THROUGH" ON STATE RIGHTS MARKET.

Following the success attained by the special seven-reel feature, "Come Through," at the Broadway Theater, New York, the officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have decided to offer this picture on the state rights plan. It is said to be a picture with a "punch" and one which state rights buyers will find to prove immensely popular wherever shown.

The story, by the distinguished playwright, novelist and author, George Bronson Howard, is reported to be one of the most novel and ingenious that has ever been adapted for screen purposes. The acting of the cast, which is headed by Herbert Rawlinson, is of exceptional merit, it is said, and the settings and photography of an unusually high standard.

"Come Through" is claimed to be one of the most successful box-office attractions ever presented at the Broadway Theater and packed the house at every performance. The reviews of the critics of the newspapers and trade journals were unanimously laudatory. Many reviewers pronounce it one of the big photoplay hits of the season.

"PERSUASIVE PEGGY" POPULAR STORY.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, had an expensive and exhaustive investigation carried on to ascertain the true human interest appeal "Persuasive Peggy" would have to the public, with the result that he now has on hand many letters similar to the following, which was written by the editor of Farm and Home: "Since I finished running 'Persuasive Peggy' in Farm and Home I have received several thousand enthusiastic letters from readers expressing their appreciation of the story."

"Persuasive Peggy," the first film production of the Mayfair studio, is an assured success from the exhibitor's point of view, if the opinions of numerous responsible publishers throughout the country who have printed this charming story in serial form in their publications are to be considered indicative of the story's popularity.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Five Fox Releases for July

June Caprice, the Lees, Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh and Probably Virginia Pearson Are Featured.

WILLIAM FOX'S schedule of photoplays for July release includes some of the most brilliant stars on the Fox program. The list for the coming month is well balanced and attractive. The films will be issued in this order:

July 1, June Caprice in "Patsy," a dainty story of thrills and adventure; July 8, Jane and Katherine Lee in a novelty surprise drama, "Two Little Imps"; July 15, Gladys Brockwell in "To Honor and Obey?" a screen drama of vigorous action; July 22, George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever."

Virginia Pearson's present production, which Director Carl Harbaugh now has in work, will probably be the release for the week of July 29. This picture has not yet been titled, but the principals in the star's supporting cast consist of Hardie Kirkland, Claire Whitney and William Meehan.

In "Patsy," her eighth William Fox picture, Miss Caprice has another story full of charm and sunshine—the kind that gives her the opportunity to present her naive little self to best advantage. John G. Adolfi directed.

Harry Hilliard is the leading man. Others in "Patsy" are Ethyle Cooke, John Smiley, Fred Hearn, Jane Lee, Alma Muller and Edna Munsey.

Picturegoers the country over are eagerly awaiting the coming of "Two Little Imps." Mr. Fox has not released any film more captivating than this one with the pair of "Baby Grands." Others in the company are Edna Hunter, Edwin Holt, Stuart Sage, W. Harvey and Leslie Austen.

The July 15th release, "To Honor and Obey?" has a gripping story and a cast of exceptional ability. Supporting Gladys Brockwell is Bertram Grassby, Jewel Carmen, Charles Clary, Josef Swickard and Willard Louis.

"THE RESCUE" (Bluebird).

Dorothy Phillips will make two appearances on the Bluebird program in July. "Fires of Rebellion" will be the July 2 release and on July 23 she will again appear in "The Rescue." Ida May Park directed this feature as her third Bluebird, using Hugh Kahler's magazine story as the basis. Lon Chaney and William Stowell will, as usual, lead Miss Phillips' supporting company, but these mere men will have a severe struggle to fight their way to attention among the pretty girls who dominate the scenes. As "The Rescue" is a society play, demanding fine raiment and pretty girls who know how to wear expensive and fashionable gowns without registering consciousness, Miss Park made careful selection from Bluebird's stock forces and picked Gretchen Lederer, Molly Malone, Gertrude Aster and Claire Du Bray for the beauty congress in support of pretty Dorothy Phillips. The star wore eighteen different gowns during the production, and the other ladies shared twelve more dresses among themselves. Even Miss Park caught the spirit of the occasion and "dressed up" while directing the other ladies in their fine array. The exhibitor who announces "The Rescue" as a fashion show with five of the prettiest girls in pictures as living models will not be exaggerating.

VICTOR MOORE IN "OH POP!"

Victor Moore's next release, "Oh, Pop!" was written for him by Thomas J. Gray, the author of "Bungalowing," which scored such a big success, and Mr. Moore feels that in "Oh, Pop!" he has a worthy successor.

Scene from "Oh, Pop" (Klever).

Moore is supported by the clever youngster that made such a hit in his previous releases, and it is a safe bet that this picture will please as much or more so than "Bungalowing" or "Commuting."

MARKED PICTORIAL QUALITY IN "THE SLACKER"

American descendants of all nations will find incidents of special importance to them in "The Slacker," Metro's forthcoming production de luxe, starring Emily Stevens and written and directed by William Christy Cabanne. A representative from every race is shown on the screen, and then the heads of all, grouped together, dissolve into the fabric of an immense United States flag, the true "melting-pot" of the nations.

Memorable incidents connected with the history of the country in its most dramatic episodes are pictured and live again on the screen, and present events are shown in an allegorical form. Civilization is shown being crushed by the God of War. Justice calls Columbia, who lights the torch of Liberty, which then shines over all. A dove of peace is shown on a branch, and then flies away. The branches of the tree dissolve into a fortress of steel with enormous guns. Three thousand soldiers with fixed bayonets answer the call of Columbia, marching close in one great formidable armed mass. The picture changed quickly to a naval scene, showing America's battleships on the high seas. Next the German fleet within the Kiel Canal is pictured, with the Allied fleet waiting patiently outside to engage it in action. Also there are pictured many historical men and events.

STRAND TO RUN TERRY HUMAN INTEREST REEL.

The first of the series of the Terry Human Interest Reel entitled, "How Character Is Revealed In the Nose" was shown at the Strand Theater during the week of June 3 and received a most cordial welcome. Manager Harold Edel, under whose personal direction the Strand Theater is operated, has decided to run the entire series upon the merits of the first of the Terry Human Interest Reels released.

Mr. Mitchell, head of the film department of the Marcus Loew circuit of theatres, has also decided to run the series of the Terry Human Interest Reel. Already he has booked the initial release of this series for the entire chain of Loew theatres.

Paramount Sets Off on Year's Last Half

Mae Murray in "At First Sight" and Kathlyn Williams and Wally Reed in "Big Timbers" Are Features.

THE two features which will be issued by Paramount are "At First Sight," starring Mae Murray, and "Big Timber," starring Kathlyn Williams and Wallace Reid, week of July 2. Besides these two five-reel pictures, that same week Paramount will distribute the seventy-third edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the seventy-fourth of the weekly trips around the world, personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his fellow-journeyers to see "How California Harvests Wheat," and a very Klever Komedy entitled "Oh, Pop," in which Victor Moore is starred.

Mae Murray has been given another vehicle to display her qualifications in "At First Sight," a Famous Players production. The story is filled with heart interest, humor, thrills, action and suspense, and was written by George Middleton. Robert Leonard, who has been devoting his entire attention to the work of this player, directed. The cast supporting Miss Murray comprises Sam T. Hardy, Jules Rancourt, Julia Bruns, W. T. Carlton, Nellie Lindroth, William Butler and Edward Sturgis.

"Big Timber," in which Kathlyn Williams and Wallace Reid are starred, is an adaptation of Bertrand Sinclair's story of the same name by Gardner Hunting. The players are given ample opportunities of displaying their talents, for there are many thrilling scenes, among them a real forest fire in the Big Timber of California. A tremendous timber tract in the Sierra mountains was used as a setting for this picturesque drama, and many interesting phases of logging operations serve as backgrounds for the action of the story. The excellent cast supporting Miss Williams and Mr. Reid include Joe King, Alfred Paget and Helen Bray.

The seventy-third edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, deals with four very interesting subjects: "Fencing in Japan," "American Match Making," "The Oldest Railroad in the U. S.," and a very amusing cartoon entitled "Otto Luck to the Rescue."

Burton Holmes' "How California Harvests Wheat" shows a particularly interesting picture from every viewpoint. The photography is remarkable and every foot of the picture is distinctly interesting.

Exhibitors and patrons who thought that "Bungalowing" and "Commuting" were Victor Moore's best single-reel comedies, will have to put at the head of their list his latest comedy "Oh, Pop," which tells the story of the father of a family who is compelled to take care of his children while mother goes away, and has also thrust upon him the children of a neighbor who desires to go shopping in the city for the day.

"THE MASKED HEART" (Mutual).

A mysterious woman with a gray mask entirely concealing her features, and a wealthy young man who, becoming bored by his easy victories over women, starts out to find an elusive woman whom he can pursue are the principal characters in "The Masked Heart," the American-Mutual production starring William Russell, which will be released on July 2. The masked woman proves to be a married woman with a delight in flirtations, and many complications result which arouse even the blase society man.

Scene from "The Masked Heart" (Mutual).

There are two magnificent sets in the production, one an immense ballroom in which hundreds of dancers in masquerade costumes make a gay scene and divide their time between dancing and merry battles in which confetti and serpentines form the ammunition. The other unusual scene is a large dinner party where the guests are entertained by a dancing nymph.

William Russell appears as the blase society man and Kathleen Kirkham plays the role of the mysterious woman. Francelia Billington is the step-daughter of the adventurous woman. William Conklin is the husband, and Ashton Dearholt enacts the role of Russell's devoted friend and chum.

SIMULTANEOUS RUNS FOR "LONE WOLF."

Herbert Brenon announces that his latest Selznick Picture, "The Lone Wolf," by Louis Joseph Vance, will open an engagement at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, on Sunday, July 1, the same day that it opens its indefinite engagement at the Broadway theater, New York. The fact that this big production will open simultaneously in the two principal cities of the United States as a high class attraction should give it wide popularity.

Selznick Subsidiary Reaching Out

Film Advertising Service Decides to Offer Facilities to Outside Companies.

ANOTHER phase of the open-door policy of the Selznick organizations developed this week, with the announcement that the Film Advertising Service, a Selznick subsidiary corporation, had decided to carry out the general principle established by the Enterprises as a whole and offer its facilities in purchasing and other matters to any companies desirous of using them.

The Film Avertising Service was organized several months ago, with Myron Selznick as general manager, to take over the entire purchasing and supply department of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises. The aim was not merely to relieve the parent corporation of that most bothersome of all departments, but to take off its hands also the preparation of designs and material, the search for novelties, and all other related matters.

In addition to the supply service, the Film Advertising Service is also in a position to handle entire publicity campaigns, this branch of the work being under the direction of Randolph Bartlett, publicity manager for the Selznick Enterprises.

The company has its offices on the fourteenth floor of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue. C. C. Ryan is the purchasing agent and Harry Lutjen shipping agent.

BLIND ACTOR IN "THE SLACKER."

J. Van Courtland, who appears in the forthcoming Metro wonderplay de luxe, "The Slacker," written and directed by Wm. Christy Cabanne, is probably the only blind man appearing in the silent drama.

Twenty-three years ago Mr. Van Courtland left Holland, his native land, and came to this country. Ten years ago he played his first stage engagement in this country, and for more than eight years he appeared steadily in stock.

About two years ago he left the spoken stage to act before the camera. While he was working for a company which has a studio in Chicago, he was the victim of an assault by some thugs, who when they found that he had but four dollars with him, beat him unmercifully. His eyesight was permanently affected, and, although he has consulted many specialists, he is still unable to see very much. He can distinguish daylight from darkness, but is unable to recognize anyone.

In spite of his affliction Mr. Van Courtland moves around the set at the studio as if he had a sixth sense. The blind actor has refused to go to an institution, and is devoted to stage work. His earnestness, added to his culture and refinement, so appealed to Mr. Cabanne, the director of "The Slacker" that he gave Mr. Van Courtland a part in that production.

"FOR LIBERTY" BEING FILMED IN CANADA.

Good progress is being made in the production of "For Liberty," Edwin Bower Hesser's story of the American Legion of the Canadian army, which is being directed by Romaine Fielding for the S-M Films Corporation of Philadelphia. Mr. Fielding has been in Canada for two weeks with the company, and has been accorded every aid by the Canadian military authorities. First going to Montreal, then to Camp Volcartier, taking some scenes in Quebec City, and then proceeding to Toronto, the very spirit of the military situation has been caught. The company is now working at Camp Borden, Ontario, the finest of Canadian training camps. The training of soldiers in modern trench warfare, as it will be practiced in the United States Army, is shown, and actual "front line" conditions are being duplicated in the battle scenes, which are being made with the assistance of officers returned from the front.

E. K. Lincoln plays the stellar role. The studio scenes are to be taken in Philadelphia, where Ira M. Lowry, general manager of S-M is arranging the sets at the Lubin studios.

MISS DECEPTION.

Work on "Miss Deception," the Van Dyke-Art Drama written by Joseph Franklin Poland, in which Jean Sothern is starred, is rapidly taking shape at the studio in Nineteenth Street, under the direction of Eugene Newman. It is due for release following "The Peddler."

"The Plow Woman" Starts Off Universal

Butterfly Subject Leads Week of July 2—Mignon Anderson Appears in a Military Drama.

MARY MacLAREN is the star in the Butterfly picture, "The Plow Woman," which heads the Universal program for the week of July 2. This alone stamps it as a film production of unusual merit, as Miss MacLaren has always been identified with photodramas of the highest type. She will be remembered for her excellent work in a former Butterfly release, "Money Madness." "The Plow Woman" is a film version of the novel by Eleanor Gates and was put in scenario form by J. Grubb Alexander and produced under the direction of Charles Swickard. In the cast supporting the star are Eddie Polo, Kingsley Benedict, Harry De More, L. C. Shumway and others. "The Plow Woman" will be released Monday, July 2. On the same day will appear the Nestor comedy, "Poor Peter Pious," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

The feature for Tuesday, July 3, is the Gold Seal three-part military drama, "A Young Patriot," with Mignon Anderson in the leading role. This is a photodrama which will arouse the patriotism of all who see it. The story is engrossing and the situations are highly dramatic. Supporting Miss Anderson are such well-known screen favorites as J. Morris Foster, Charles Mailes and Roy Stewart. The Victor comedy, "Not Too Thin to Fight," starring Eileen Sedgwick, is the other release of this date.

The chief offering for the Fourth of July will be the two-part L-Ko comedy, "Bombs and Bandits." This is one of the funniest film comedies ever produced by this company and is full of laughs from the very beginning. The regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly will also appear on this date

"Seeds of Redemption," a two-act society drama, will be released under the Rex brand on Thursday, July 5. Claire Mersereau, sister of Violet Mersereau, has the leading role in this picture. The Victor comedy, "Daredevil Dan," featuring Ruth Stonehouse, will also appear on Thursday.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in the principal roles in a two-part Nestor comedy, "Five Little Widows," which is presented Friday, July 6. The weekly issue of the Universal Screen Magazine also is released on this day.

On Saturday, July 7, the chief offering is the Bison two-part western drama, "The Wrong Man," with Harry Carey in the leading role, supported by Fritzie Ridgeway. This is an exciting story of daring and adventure, written by N. P. Oakes and directed by Fred Kelsey. Other Saturday releases are the Joker comedy, "The Twitching Hour," with Gale Henry and Milton Sims, and the Universal special release, Universal Current Events.

Sunday, July 8, is the date of the release of the Imp drama, "The Girl in the Limousine," featuring Molly Malone and Lee Hill. The other releases are the Powers' "China Awakened," a Hy Mayer travelaugh and the Big U drama, "The Mad Stampede," with Jane Bernoudy.

During the week the second episode of "The Gray Ghost," the mystery serial founded on the Saturday Evening Post story, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, will be released. The title of the second episode is "The Mysterious Message."

VARIETY IN COMING GAUMONTS.

So much appears in newspapers and magazines from time to time about Havana, that patrons of motion picture theaters will welcome the views of that city which Gaumont will present through Mutual in "Tours Around the World" No. 36, released July 16. It will visualize for them this lovely city of the tropics, the metropolis of the West Indies. The Gaumont cameraman has been thorough in photographing the beautiful and historic places, and Havana is rich in both. On the same reel are pictures of a number of cities along the Nile. These give an excellent idea of life in Egypt as it has been lived for thousands of years.

The second Gaumont release of the week is The Mutual Weekly No. 132 which appears July 11.

Gaumont's "Reel Life" reaches the screen July 12. This issue, No. 63, will entertain with pictures of America's civil war submarine. It was built early in the war, sunk in 1862 to escape capture by Admiral Farragut, and raised in 1885.

On the same reel appear "A Square Deal for the Baby," the story in pictures of how settlement workers teach mothers to take care of their infants; "Whale Meat," "Camp Fire Signal Girls" and two animations from "Life" in the exclusive Gaumont series taken from pictured jokes in this magazine.

MacDONALD ACTOR AND FILM MAN, TOO.

A new sort of actor has been discovered by General Film in Wallace MacDonald, who was the male lead in "Vanity and Some Sables," one of its O. Henry subjects. MacDonald, who played the part of Kid Brady most acceptably in the release, was an exhibitor before he became prominent as a film player and knows the game from both sides of the screen. Besides that he is a well-traveled chap and has played in stock in many parts of the country. So that when "Vanity and Some Sables" was released he became active to good purpose in aiding bookings.

Brady Promotes June Elvidge

Lew Fields, "The Man Who Stood Still," Again at Work in World Pictures Studio.

JUNE ELVIDGE, the accomplished actress in World-Pictures Brady-Made, now advances to the front rank of fixed stars in this organization. A new contract between the World Corporation and Miss Elvidge to this effect, covering a term of years, was executed on Tuesday last. Under this agreement the name of the actress not alone goes into big type in all advertisements of World-Pictures, but is set opposite a much larger sum than formerly upon the weekly salary sheet.

The rise of Miss Elvidge as a favorite of the screen has been rapid and steady. It is only a few months since she was a comparatively unknown actress on the Winter Garden stage, where she occupied the position of understudy for Jose Collins, and played her part "on the road." Her very striking beauty gave her a ready beginning in the World studio, where the effectiveness with which she registered upon the screen was immediately realized, with the result that she had better and better roles to portray with every new production.

Another item of interest from the camp of World-Pictures is the fact that Lew Fields is again working under the Brady direction, this time in a photoplay the identity of which is not to be disclosed just now. The great success of "The Man Who Stood Still," produced by World, is the working cause for this renewal of relations.

It was in this comedy that Mr. Fields was enabled to demonstrate that he possessed other qualities as an actor than those of a farceur pure and simple.

Just at present Mr. Brady is again demonstrating his firm belief in the proposition that a photoplay well named has more than half won the battle of popularity.

This demonstration has taken the form of changing the titles of four of the completed Brady-Mades awaiting publication.

The picture drama formerly called "Partnership" has had its title shifted to "The Iron Ring." Arthur Ashley, Gerda Holmes and Edward Langford are the featured players. The play originally named "The Waster," starring Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge, is now titled "Youth."

"[illegible]" directed in person by Mr. Brady, will reach the public under the final name "The Marriage Market," with a cast composed of Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley. Ethel Clayton's picture play produced under the working title "Chasms," is now known as "Souls Adrift," and the leading male part is played by Milton Sills.

"SUDDEN JIM" (Triangle).

The Triangle picture version of "Sudden Jim," the Saturday Evening Post story by Clarence Budington Kelland, and now one of the seven best sellers among novels, is being completed. Charles Ray, whose drawing power is increasing at a tremendous rate, has the title role. For the first time in his screen career the young star will have an opportunity to display his own personality. Heretofore he has appeared as weaklings or country yokels.

In "Sudden Jim" he is a fighting, square-jawewd young fellow who takes over a clothespin factory in Michigan and puts up a hard fight against the combine controlling the industry in that section of the country.

Scene from "Sudden Jim" (Triangle).

Sylvia Bremer, appearing in support of Ray, is now convalescing from slight injuries sustained during the filming of scenes in the north woods. As soon as she has fully recovered the final episodes will be enacted.

His "Pinch Hitter," "Clodhopper" and "Millionaire Vagrant" have proved among the strongest box-office attractions ever put out by Triangle, and it is expected that "Sudden Jim" will surpass the high-water mark.

Many Coming Washburns and Gardners

Popular Essanay Players Will Figure One of More Times Each Month in Summer and Fall.

EXHIBITORS may look to Bryant Washburn and Jack Gardner for the bulk of their Essanay pictures during the summer and fall months. These two stars are scheduled to average at least one feature apiece each month, and some times two.

In addition to these productions Taylor Holmes is already being filmed in the initial picture of a series he has contracted to appear in under Essanay's banner. This will be released during the summer, also, as will one or more features starring Marguerite Clayton.

During July Mr. Washburn will appear in two-five reel pictures. The first of these, entitled, "The Man Who Was Afraid," was released July 2. It is an adaptation of the story by Mary Brecht Pulver, based on the timely theme of the President's call to arms.

Mr. Washburn's second July release will be "The Golden Idiot." The filming process of this production has been completed, and it will be given trade showings very shortly. It is comedy-drama of the type best suited to the star's histrionic talents. The screen version was adapted by H. Tipton Steck, from a magazine story. Arthur Berthelet was the director.

"The Range Boss" will be Mr. Gardner's July offering. This production is the second of Essanay's series of westerns, following "Land of Long Shadows," which was released June 18. In "The Range Boss," the former musical comedy star appears as a happy-go-lucky cowboy who frustrates a conspiracy to achieve his own death and mulct an Eastern girl of the ranch which she inherited. The film will be released July 16.

During August, Mr. Washburn will appear in "Skinner's Baby," the third of his famous Skinner pictures. In this production he will be supported by the original cast, including Hazel Daly, creator of "Honey." Mr. Gardner will be offered in the third of the Essanay-Westerns, which will be entitled, "Open Places."

Taylor Holmes will head Essanay's September releases with "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship." This picture will be a screen version of the story by Clarence Buddington Chelland, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. Preliminary scenes for this production are now being filmed.

Essanay is busy preparing its schedule of late fall and Winter releases. These will be announced shortly in order that exhibitors may be enabled by the advance notification to arrange their programs accordingly and have ample opportunity to exploit the showings.

"STOP! LUKE! LISTEN!" (Pathe).

Harold Lloyd, as Lonesome Luke, supported by Harry Pollard, Bebe Daniels and Bud Jameyson, will appear on the Pathe program for July 15, in a two-reel Lonesome Luke comedy produced by the Rolin Film Company and entitled "Stop, Luke, Listen."

In this picture Lonesome Luke indulges in some of the funniest antics even he has been guilty of. He impersonates Paderewski in a way that would make the great pianist's own mother unable to watch her son play without laughing at the thought of Lonesome Luke's burlesque.

Scene from "Stop! Luke! Listen!" (Pathe).

With the aid of a convenient mahogany table, he opens a little bar in the heiress's house, at which he is both patron and bartender. When chased by an irate giant, he climbs the sides of the house, dashes in and out of windows and clings to the roof with an agility that would go far to prove the correctness of the Darwinian theory.

All in all, "Stop, Luke, Listen" is described as a thirty-minute laugh.

Interest in Fox Kiddie Pictures

"Jack and the Beanstalk," Manufacturer Believes, Will Fill Long Felt Want.

GREAT interest has been aroused since William Fox made the statement announcing his intention of making Kiddie pictures with a direct box office appeal both to adults and children. Every exhibitor has felt the demand for a class of pictures or rather subjects with the ultimate appeal to the children, yet pictures of a character to draw business to the box office, pleasing the adults to a greater extent than ever before.

Mr. Fox's first conception of this thought came primarily from his close contact with the public, through the twenty-two picture theaters he owns and controls, deciding that it was but natural if these conditions existed in his theater, located in all character of neighborhoods, the same need existed throughout the country.

With these facts before him, and in an effort to carry through his plan, he immediately began casting about to secure the best timber available for the fulfilling of this long felt want, with the result, "Jack and the Beanstalk," probably the most ambitious attempt ever made to portray with realism a miniature subject on a heroic scale, necessitating ten months in the making, an expenditure of much money, the employment of 1,300 kiddies, the building of miniature cities, portentous castles for the Giant, wardrobes for the juvenile performers, and the thousand and one other requisites for a production of this kind.

A nation-wide publicity campaign is planned in the different magazines and newspapers.

MITCHELL THREE YEARS EDITOR OF GAUMONT WEEKLY.

With the printing of the current issue of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, No. 130, Pell Mitchell completes his third year as editor of this news reel. Mr. Mitchell has come to be known as an authority upon news pictures, his ideas and advice being sought upon all points requiring a decision based upon technical knowledge and good news judgment. He is secretary of the committee collaborating with the government in regard to news pictures of the war.

Mr. Mitchell was able to celebrate his anniversary by getting out an issue of the weekly of which he could be inordinately proud. First in importance were the pictures of the first Americans to go to the front in France under the Stars and Stripes. He also had pictures of the reception of the Belgian commission in Washington, the reception of the Italian commission in New York, the arrival of the Russian commission at Seattle and their welcome to Washington by Secretary Lansing, class day exercises under war conditions at Princeton and Harvard, and the visit of the French aviators to the American school on Hempstead plains.

PAULINE FREDERICK IN UNUSUAL ROLE.

"The Love That Lives," a drama by Scudder Middleton, has been completed at the Famous Players' studio with Pauline Frederick in the stellar role, and will be released by Paramount on July 9. The picture, which shows Pauline Frederick in the novel role of a scrubwoman, was produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, who has directed several of Miss Frederick's previous Paramount pictures. Though Miss Frederick has played a number of roles that are distinct characterizations, such as Bella Donna, Zaza and Sapho, this is by far the most remarkable character study which she has ever been called upon to present.

In the opening scenes Miss Frederick is nothing more or less than a scrubwoman working in an office building as a common drudge. Later she becomes a bird of paradise in order to give her son an education, and then reverts to the pail and mop in her later years when she is broken down in health and in spirit and is a white-haired old woman struggling to keep body and soul together.

Among those in support of Miss Frederick are John Sainpolis, Pat O'Mally, Joseph Carroll and Violet Palmer.

REAL HOME RUN IN DREW COMEDY.

"Wally" Pipp, the snappy first baseman of the New York Americans, made a home run with two men on bases recently. That home run will be shown for many weeks to admiring fans throughout the country. It is one of the features of "Her First Game," a forthcoming Metro-Drew comedy. Sidney Drew is a red-hot fan. When the script called for a man taking his wife to a ball game, Sidney Drew selected the Polo Grounds as the place for the scene to be taken. It so happened that the Yankees were playing the Chicago White Sox, who were then battling for the leadership of the American league. In the fourth inning with two men on bases, "Wally" Pipp broke up the game with a home run to deep center.

The script caled for just what "Wally" Pipp did, and the cameraman was on the job. While the speedy Pip dashed around the cushions the cameraman turned the handle and "Wally" Pip in all his glory is seen dashing across the plate while the thousands in the stands cheered him to the echo.

Good Pathe Program for July 8

Gladys Hulette, Pearl White and Ruth Roland Are Featured in Drama and Serials.

A FIVE-REEL feature, starring Gladys Hulette and the first episode of the big new serial, "The Fatal Ring," starring Pearl White, stand out as of especial importance in Pathe's program for the week of July 8, 1917. Gladys Hulette is seen in "The Cigarette Girl," produced by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of William Parke and written by Philip Bartholomae.

Miss Hulette, star of "The Shine Girl," "Her New York," "The Candy Girl" and other features which have been more than ordinarily successful, appears here in the first picture in which she has starred since joining the Astra forces.

"The Violet Diamond" is the title of the first episode of "The Fatal Ring" in which Pearl White is seen in a serial which is expected by Pathe to break all records. "The Fatal Ring" is a serial of love, mystery, suspense, thrills and perils, written by Fred Jackson and George B. Seitz and produced by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of Mr. Seitz.

Ruth Roland stars in "The Neglected Wife" No. 9, entitled "Deepening Degradation." In this chapter fate brings the thrilling drama of two women and a man to still another climax.

The twelfth release of the "Know America," Combitone Scenics is entitled "Through Central Texas," and it shows interesting scenes taken in the largest State in the Union. These Combitone pictures are in a different class from any other scenic pictures on the market.

A comedy, an International cartoon and scenic split reel, and Hearst-Pathe News No. 56 and No. 57 complete the program.

GARDNER ON HORSEBACK NO TENDERFOOT.

They teach horseback riding in the East as well as they do in the West, as is demonstrated by Jack Gardner in the second of his Essanay-Westerns, "The Range Boss." Mr. Gardener had made his home in the East until he signed up with Essanay. He was promptly dubbed a "tenderfoot" when he made his appearance in the cowboy colony of motion picturedom in California. The "natives" anticipated much mirth-provoking action when the Eastener should stride his first mount.

However, Mr. Gardner demonstrates in "The Range Boss" that the laugh was turned on the skeptics, for he performs some feats of horsemanship with the daring of a professional. His role is that of a happy-go-lucky cowboy who frustrates a conspiracy to mulct an Eastern girl out of a ranch she has inherited. The picture was staged on the desert of Arizona and presents some picturesque scenic of that district. Ruth King appears as Mr. Gardner's leading woman. Carl Stockdale heads the supporrting company. The story was taken from the novel by Charles Alden Seltzer. It was adapted and directed by W. S. Van Dyke.

The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service will release "The Range Boss" July 16. The production will occupy the screen approximately sixty-five minutes.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES OF COWBOYS.

No doubt every small boy labors under the belief that cowboys in their every day labors are really having a glorious time, and if questioned said small boys would undoubtedly say that no better fun could be devised than that of swinging a lariat and dashing over the plains to loop the noose around the horns of a speeding steer. Nevertheless, as will be seen in Paramount-Bray Pictograph release No. 74, when a cowboy is at play the things he does ordinarily are not to be classed with the "stunts" he pulls in his "leisure" hours.

The picture secured for the Bray Studios, Inc., for this release, shows some of the most daring horsemanship that cowboys ever attempt and few, if any, of the things they do in this picture have ever been done before the camera before. One hair-raising stunt is the roping of four steers with one lasso, performed while the cowboy is going at breakneck speed.

As a record of the fast disappearing cowboy and his profession this picture must appeal to everyone who enjoys seeing the Wild West as all of us have always considered it to be.

HUMORISTS TO FACE GOLDWYN CAMERA.

When the American Press Humorists gather in New York during the week beginning June 25 they will spend one day at the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee. A committee of five women will have charge of the program at the studio. These women are Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy and Jane Cowl, Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, editor of Film Fun, and Miss Miriam Teichner of the New York Globe.

About 200 of America's best known newspapermen will make the trip to Fort Lee and inspect screen dramas in the process of making. In addition to beholding Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Jane Cowl working before the camera the humorists will also have a fling at celluloid artistry themselves. Don Marquis, of the New York Evening Sun, and Roy K. Moulton of the New York Evening Mail have promised to deliver a scenario which it is expressly stipulated the humorists must act, direct and protograph.

"BLACKBOARD AND BLACKMAIL" (L-Ko Comedies).

One of the numerous L-Ko Comedies ready for release is "Blackboard and Blackmail," directed by Vin Moore and set for circulation July 25. Director General J. G. Blystone supervised the presentation. Phil Dunham, Myrtle Sterling and Lucille Hutton will be the featured ones. The comedy is based on advanced ideas of higher education, a comedy "vampire" being substituted for the regular teacher of a country school. The rural school board takes a hand in straightening out the love affairs that spring from the employment of the sylph, and the laughable situations that develop prove that, under proper direction, good comedians can get fun out of the most commonplace circumstances

Scene from "Blackhand and Blackmail" (L-Ko).

PLAYERS PHOTOGRAPHED IN THE AIR.

Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell, the two featured principals in Herbert Brenon's latest Selznick picture, "The Lone Wolf," which opens an indefinite engagement at the Broadway theter, Sunday, July 1, essayed the dangers of the air recently in the big "punch" scene of "The Lone Wolf." With Pilot Le Grand of the Staten Island Aviation School they both took several flights at the grounds of the school at Midland Beach, Staten Island. The final scene of "The Lone Wolf" will show an effect never before attained in a motion picture through the nerve and skill of Roy Hunt, photographer for Herbert Brenon. With Miss Dawn and Mr. Lytell in one aeroplane, Hunt ascended in another machine, and the pilot, by skillful maneouvering in the air, enabled Hunt to photograph the two principals while both machines were speeding through the air over Staten Island. It required several hours of flying and the combined skill of both aviators to accomplish this dangerous feat, as the machine carrying the photographer had to fly directly over the one with the two players in order to obtain the scene.

TWO ART DRAMAS PICTURES TITLED.

The recently purchased stories by Charles E. Dazey and Joseph Franklin Poland, which have become the property of the Apollo and the Van Dyke Company, respectively, have been titled after much discussion. The Dazey story, in which Alma Hanlon will be starred for the Apollo company, will be entitled "Behind the Mask." Work on this has already been begun at the Fort Lee studio.

The other production is entitled "Miss Deception." The author is Joseph Franklin Poland. Mr. Poland has written two previous Art Dramas, "The Cloud" and "The Auction of Virtue," the first of which has since been published as a novel. Eugene Nowland is directing "Miss Deception," and Jean Sothern is starred. Donald Cameron will be her leading man. "Miss Deception" will be released late in July, following "The Peddler."

HELEN HOLMES TO MAKE ANOTHER SERIAL.

The box office value of the motion picture serial—a subject of dispute among exhibitors—has been so affrmatively answered by the fifteen chapter photonovel, "'The Railroad Raiders," just completed for Mutual by the Signal Film Corporation, that work will be started at once at the Signal studios on a new serial featuring Helen Holmes.

Wherever and whenever motion picture exhibitors congregate, the subject of serials comes up at some stage of the conversation. It is a question which perhaps has been more thoroughly debated by exhibitors than any other booking problem, and it is a question upon which the individual exhibitor has more decided views than upon any other.

Kitty Gordon was not injured in the premature explosion of a bomb in one of the scenes of her new World Picture as described in some of the New York papers.

Four Selznick Pictures Completed

Comprise Productions of Brenon, Warwick and the Talmadge Sisters' Companies.

FOUR new Selznick-Pictures have been completed and are ready for release. They are Herbert Brenon's "The Lone Wolf," which opens its Broadway run July 1; Robert Warwick in "The Lash of Jealousy," previously named for temporary purposes "The Modern Othelo"; Norma Talmadge in "The Moth" and Constance Talmadge in "The Lesson."

The Brenon production, "The Lone Wolf," is from the novel by Louis Joseph Vance, and the principal players are Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell. It is a melodrama with a dozen big punch scenes.

The Warwick picture, "The Lash of Jealousy," is regarded by Harry Rapf, president of the Warwick corporation, as the best that this star has given the public. Director Leonce Perret is author of "The Lash of Jealousy."

The Norma Talmadge picture, "The Moth," directed by Edward Jose, is a story of high society, and depicts the perils that surround a young wife who is bored and unloved.

Director Charles Giblyn has completed the first of the Constance Talmadge pictures, "The Lesson," and it may be placed upon the market before either "The Lash of Jealousy" or "The Moth."

This promises to be a prolific season in Selznick-Pictures, as there will be no pause between these four releases and their successors, without exception. Herbert Brenon is creating the great epic, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," by special arrangement with Lewis J. Selznick, and will not make another Selznick-Picture until that photodrama is completed. So "The Lone Wolf" will be the only Brenon offering until fall, in the Selznick-Pictures list, as "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will be distributed on a state's rights basis.

TRADE MARK CONTEST STILL UNDECIDED.

Although over two weeks have elapsed since the closing of Art Dramas trade mark contest, in which fourteen thousand answers were received, no final decision has yet been arrived at by the committee of judges.

This committee has succeeded in eliminating all but ten of the designs submitted, and these are now in the hands of the board of directors, so it is improbable that the decision will be delayed longer.

The ten remaining designs are all original, simple and distinctive, and any of them would make an acceptable trademark. In case the judges are unable to arrive at the decision within the week, the ten may be submitted to the readers of the trade papers, who will be asked to vote on the matter.

Some time ago the Gaumont Company was praised by exhibitors for its timely pictures of the Boy Scouts. When one considers the fact that millions of people are interested in this organization because they have sons in it or else realize the worth of the movement and wish to understand how it works the widespread appeal of such pictures is readily understood.

Only next in importance to the Boy Scout movement is that of the Camp Fire Girls. While they may not be as active, they are certainly as ardent, and their pictures should receive the same welcome everywhere. It was wise judgment on the part of Gaumont to reserve space for them in "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. A section in No. 63 is devoted to their activities as they study to "do their bit" for their country. The picture, which is called "Camp Fire Signal Girls," shows an army sergeant giving lessons to a bevy of girls in wigwagging, heliographing, and other methods of rapid communication. The picture should prove very popular on the screen.

WHAT'S DONG AT THE FOX STUDIOS.

GEORGE WALSH'S new subject under the direction of Paul Powell, the latter's first William Fox photoplay, is now well under way. It has just been titled "The Kid Is Clever" and, in the parlance of the day, it is "full of pep and speed." Doris Pawn is playing opposite "Smiling George."

In addition to naming George Walsh's new vehicle, Mr. Fox also titled the picture, starring Jane and Katherine Lee. This will be released for the week of July 15 as "Two Little Imps." Kenean Buel is screening the feature.

Out on the Pacific Coast improvements continue unabated. The latest addition to the large plant there is the installation of a gigantic nursery to supply trees and foliage which the various companies need frequently for settings. The new department has been put into operation at a cost of several thousand dollars, and is under the care and attention of a force of expert gardeners.

Hank Mann has completed another Foxfilm comedy in the Western studios. It will be released on June 25 as "His Final Blow-Out." The supporting cast includes Peggy Prevost, Max Asher and Joseph Swickard.

The current Fox dramatic production will be Valeska Suratt's subject, "The Siren." In the company are also Clifford Bruce, Curtis Benton, Robert Clugston, Isabel Rea, Armand Kalisz, Cesare Gravina and Rica Scott.

BLUEBIRD SHIFTS RELEASE SCHEDULE.

Because of the delay in securing the negative Violet Mersereau's forthcoming appearance on the Bluebird program has been switched from July 23 to July 30, the change clearing Dorothy Phillips, in "The Rescue," one week earlier than was originally calculated. The switch will work a benefit to Bluebird exhibitors who have been reaping the reward of Miss Phillips' increasing popularity, for she will now appear in "The Rescue" only three weeks subsequent to her presentation of "Fire of Rebellion," July 2.

With these changes accounted for the Bluebird releases until the middle of August include "The Clean-Up," introducing Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon. in comedy-drama, August 6, and "The Show Down," a Lynn F. Reynolds "nature study," with Myrtle Gonzales and George Hernandez the stars, to be distributed August 13. There are six more features ready to be scheduled, carrying the preparations Bluebird has made through to the end of September.

These undated features embrace a comedy-drama for Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, entitled "The Fourth Glove," made by Elmer Clifton, the new Farnum-Vernon director; "Triumph," staring Dorothy Phillips, and directed by Joseph De Grasse from Samuel H. Adams' story in Colliers; a Lynn F. Reynolds feature made from Alice Heagan Rice's story, "Mr. Opp," starring Neva Gerber and George Hernandez; and "Little Miss Fix-It," a Jack Conway production starring Ella Hall.

UNIVERSAL WEEKLY CLAIMS BEAT.

Securing a news beat on the most important story of the day, Universal's Animated Weekly, No. 77, gives the only pictures obtained in connection with the Ruth Cruger murder mystery and Mrs. Grace Humiston, the famous lawyer, who, by her persistent efforts, solved the mystery of the girl's disappearance.

Another National subject—Princeton honoring the Allied diplomats—shows close-ups of the English, French, Japanese and Italian Ambassadors; Belgium's Envoy, Secretary of State Robert Lansing, and the Man Who Fed Belgium—Herbert C. Hoover.

New York's first Sunday Big League game between the St. Louis Browns and New York Yankees, playing of which netted $13,000 for the Engineer Regiment, is screend. From Pittsburgh comes a flash of Honus Wagner back in harness which gives the picture an inter-city value. Other timely and interesting subjects are shown.

KAUFMAN DIRECTING "THE AMAZONS."

When the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made its announcement that August 5 would mark the inauguration of an open-booking policy, there was embodied in that announcement a statement to the effect that one of the first productions under this new system was to be an adaptation of Sir Walter Wing Pinero's "The Amazons," starring Marguerite Clark.

Joseph Kaufman is in charge of Miss Clark's picture, which already is in the making. Though the spirit of the stage version of Pionero's play has been scrupuously adhered to in the adaptation, certain minor changes have been introduced which were considered essential.

The entire production is full of charming romance and a spirit of fun, such as the public has been taught to expect when the name of Marguerite Clark is mentioned as the star of a Famous Players picture.

LUSK MANAGING CLEVELAND FOR MUTUAL.

W. E. Lusk has been appointed manager of the Cleveland exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Lusk was formerly a member of the sales department of the home office. He took up the duties of his new position on June 11.

"THE LONG TRAIL" (Paramount).

When "The Long Trail" is released by Paramount on July 23, the production will mark the last appearance of Lou-Tellegen as a motion picture star, this well-known actor having become a director at the Lasky studio, where he is at present staging an adaptation of George Broadhurst's "What Money Can't Buy," with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in the stellar roles. "The Long Trail," which was written by Eve Unsell, is a story of the Canadian Northwest and was produced last winter during the heavy snows. In the supporting cast are a number of well-known players, among them Mary Fuller, Sidney Bracey, Winnifred Allen, Franklin Woodruff, Ferdinand Tidmarsh and Frank Farrington.

Scene from "The Long Trail" (Paramount).

The story itself is extremely dramatic and a greater part of the action was staged in the outdoors which has given the producers an excellent opportunity for obtaining picturesque and beautiful backgrounds for the action. It was in this picture that the producers used a huge Siberian wolf which occasioned a great deal of excitement in and around the studio during the time that he was kept caged there.

GENERAL FILM ANNOUNCES "SPARKLES."

Still adding to its product General Film proclaims another new release, the "'Sparkle Comedies," beginning at once. "The Sparkle Comedies" are an innovation in one-reel comedies and are best described as to their tendency by the name. They are given to sprightly plots farcical in their complications and demanding true humor and good acting throughout. They are, however, described as thoroughly refined and of a nature calculated to prove a boon to houses that want fun without pronounced robustness. It is predicted by General Film officials that these Sparkle Comedies will make new stars in a field that is woefully under-represented, that of light comedy in motion pictures.

Sparkle Comedies are from the studios of the Jaxon Film Company, which has already been producing several series of favorite subjects. These releases are to be had in groups of six, and the first group includes "Where Is My Nightie?" "Fresh Air," "The Spy," "The Trunk Route," "The Water Cure" and "Night of Enchantment.'

MECHANICAL OPERATION OF BRITISH TANKS.

While a number of motion pictures have been exhibited throughout the country showing the now famous British tanks crawling about "somewhere in France," it remains for the Bray Studios, Inc., to give motion picture audiences a first hand glimpse into the actual operation of these remarkably ingenious devices and in the seventy-fourth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs the mechanical operations of these tanks will be graphically explained.

J. F. Leventhal, with the corporation of the Popular Science Monthly, has recured full data covering this subject, and his ingenious pen makes them move about on the screen with all of the reality of the actual tank itself. In addition to this he shows the interior of these land war vessels so that the intricate mechanism which operates them as well as the methods used by their crews can be seen.

REPEATERS—FORTY SUBMITTED.

One contributor in the Art Dramas Trade Mark sent in the same design forty times, once every day during the length of the contest. She evidently hoped that by sending a copy of the drawing often enough it would sooner or later wear out the patience of the judges, and force them to accept it. The design itself, however, only suffered on long acquaintance. It was an exact imitation of the Union Label, except that the words "Art Dramas" were present.

"THE CIGARETTE GIRL" (Pathe).

In announcing "The Cigarette Girl" for release on July 8, Pathe is confident it is presenting to exhibitors a feature of far more than ordinary merit. Gladys Hulette is the star of the picture and from the expressions of opinion from a number of exhibitors and from newspaper critics she has been coming to the front rank in a surprisingly rapid manner.

"The Cigarette Girl" was produced by Astra and directed by William Parke. The story was written by Philip Bartholomae. Mr. Parke, it will be remembered, while with Thanhouser, directed Miss Hulette in several of her most successful productions. The two make a strong combination.

"The Cigarette Girl" has much human interest, strong dramatic moments, has been written with much sympathy, and is altogether a play of the worth-while type.

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY SCORES SCOOP.

Universal Animated Weekly was the only news reel which secured a picture of Mrs. Grace Humiston, the woman lawyer who unraveled the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Ruth Cruger in New York last February. Cameramen had made any number of futile attempts to secure pictures of her without success, and finally Jack Cohn, the editor, went out himself and after half an hour of persuasive talk finally succeeded in inducing Mrs. Humiston to pose for him. Good shots of Cocchi's—the alleged murderer—motorcycle shop and the excavations being carried on there in an effort to unearth the results of other crimes are also shown.

TOURNEUR STARTS FERGUSON PICTURE.

At the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Fort Lee Director Maurice Tourneur has been extremely active during the past two weeks supervising the erection of various gigantic sets, the largest ever built at this plant. In addition to this a complete Arabian village has sprung up with its transplanted palms, its camels, fleet-footed horses and dark-skinned people. These preparations were completed late Sunday night and Monday morning the initial scenes were filmed for Elsie Ferguson's first Artcraft picture, "Barbary Sheep."

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTIONS FOR JULY.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces the following Mutual star productions for the month of July:

July 2, William Russell in "The Masked Heart"; July 9, Marjorie Rambeau in "Mary Moreland"; July 16, Jackie Saunders in "Betty Be Good"; July 23, Mary Miles Minter in "Melissa of the Hills"; July 30, William Russell in "Pride and the Man."

IVAN ABRAMSON, REALIST.

Ivan Abramson, author, film-director, and philosopher, has substantial ideas on life in general, in addition to those he conveys to his thousands of followers by means of his screen dramas.

Mr. Abramson, for a number of years a figure in operatic circles, and later a personality in theatricals in the lower east side, is responsible for the story and the direction of the production which has just finished a prolonged run at the Lyric theater, and which has aroused so much comment, because of the manner in which it has been portrayed on the screen, "One Law For Both."

Ivan Abramson.

Probably one reason for Mr. Abramson's success is his sincerity. His pictures are written and directed by himself, and the titles are written by him also.

"Dress up your morals in an attractive form," he says. "Take your great moral episodes of life and wrap them up in a form nearer the way story writers dress their fiction, and you interest your audience."

Gets Contract to Title Russian Films

Shepard & Van Loan Take Over Contract Covering 550 Reels of Film.

THE largest editing and titling assignment ever given to specialists in this line of work was awarded by the Russian Art Film Corporation a few days ago when they made arrangements with Shepard & Van Loan, who are recognized as most expert men in their line, to title and edit sixty-seven Russian features.

These young men, who only recently opened offices in the Godfrey building, are well known in the industry. H. H. Van Loan was for three years publicity manager of the Universal Film Company and H. J. Shepard was for a long time connected with the same company, at the head of various departments. Both know the many angles of the business and are thoroughly equipped to advertise, exploit and promote anything from a one-reel comedy to a ten-reel feature. They have an efficient organization — the most unique perhaps in the industry, and certainly the only one of its kind —consisting of advertising, publicity, exploitations, titling, editing, sales promotion and art departments.

H. J. Shepard.

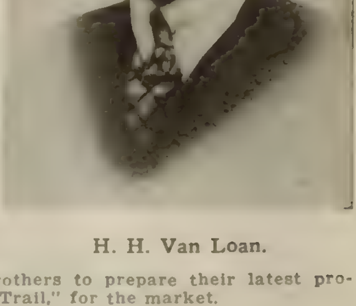
The first big deal put over by these enterprising young men was the "Allenbaugh Process," which was announced in all the trade papers last week.

The features which the Russian Art Film has already on this side of the Atlantic range from five to twelve reels each, or about 550 reels in all. The majority of the features are taken from such Russian authors as Tolstoy, Pasuchin, Tergenieff, Andrieff, and are based on actual happenings observed by the writers.

While the authors and the scenarios are sufficient to promise success for the pictures, the casts are composed of some of the greatest actors and actresses in Russia, including Nadia Lisenko, I. I. Nosjukhin, Mlle. Olga Ozovskaya, M. V. Panov and Mlle. Korobanova. These players are members of the Imperial theater, of Moscow.

"I think Mr. Kaplan is going to give the industry a surprise when he shows his first Russian picture," said Mr. Van Loan. "There is little doubt that the Russian screen stars seem to appreciate that screen acting is pantomime and that in silent acting every movement must express a thought and reveal to the audience what is transpiring in the mind of the character they are interpreting. The work we have undertaken is big, to say the least, and it will probably take us two or three months to complete it."

In addition to this big undertaking, Shepard & Van Loan have been engaged by the Wharton Brothers to prepare their latest production, "The Great White Trail," for the market.



H. H. Van Loan.

It is evident producers are beginning to realize that a great deal depends on the titling, and a large producer said recently that good titles will increase the selling price of a picture by at least one-third, which statement is not to be doubted.

Shepard & Van Loan have just completed titling "The Queen of Spades," an adaptation of the work of Pushkin, the seventeenth century poet of the Russian people. It will be the first release. The film has been forwarded to Washington for showing to members of the Russian commission and United States officials.

Kalem Plans New Production

Phil Lang Makes Special Trip From Coast to Arrange Details of Novel Plan.

INSPIRED by its success in producing series pictures, as attested by the popularity of "The Girl From Frisco," "The American Girl" and "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," the Kalem company is now planning a production which will eclipse all their former efforts in giving to a two-reel picture all the costliness of production and artistry of direction that are usually attended five-reel features. The remarkably large number of extra prints necessitated to meet the demand for "The American Girl" and the new "Stingaree" series convinced William Wright, the treasurer of the Kalem company, that, as he himself put it, "the best money-getter is a high class short length picture." Adopting this conviction as a policy of the company the Kalem officials determined to carry it out to its fullest degree and to produce a series of pictures which would be, they claimed, the limit of lavishness in a two-reel subject.

Enthusiastic over this project, Mr. Wright immediately arranged for Phil Lang, general manager of production at the Kalem studio in Glendale to make a special trip from the coast to discuss the details of the plan at the general offices of the company in New York. Mr. Lang arrived last Saturday and has been closeted in lengthy consultations with the Kalem officials in completing arrangements for the production. Work on the new series will be begun as soon as Mr. Lang returns to California.

Complacent in their conviction that they are leading the field in the production of high class short length pictures, the Kalem officials feel that they are also showing the way with a policy of production that is somewhat new. This policy is to make their latest production a combination of a series and a serial. In the new enterprise Kalem will adopt the best features of both the serial and the series and combine them into a new style of picture which they believe will be the most popular type of short length productions.

The stories will be written by Robert Welles Ritchie, who won recognition as a photodramatist of merit with his stories of "The Girl From Frisco," which proved so successful as a Western series that Kalem extended the number of episodes from fifteen to twenty-five. Mr. Ritchie also wrote the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, which also ran to twenty-five episodes.

The Kalem officials are keeping the theme of Mr. Ritchie's stories a secret and promise a pleasant surprise when the title is announced.

CRAFTSMEN FILM LABORATORIES OPEN.

The Craftsmen Film Laboratories, Inc., has just thoroughly and completely equipped a fine laboratory. Every modern device that will lend itself to the making of the finest laboratory work has been installed, and no substitute chemicals of any kind will be used—nothing but developing agents of the finest quality will enter into the finished product of this concern.

The Craftsmen will bring to the laboratory end of the picture business a number of innovations, which will prove interesting to producers, among which are individual projection rooms for directors to cut their pictures, together with service in this capacity that has so long been conspicuous by its absence. A thoroughly equipped title department is organized to deliver within a few hours a perfect set of titles in plain or elaborate designs.

L. James San, Professor of Chemistry at Columbia College and Stuyvesant High School, has become associated with the company. The officers are: President, Charles J. Hirliman, Jr.; vice-president, Leonard Abrahams; treasurer, Henry Lazarus; secretary, L. James San.

Messrs. Hirliman and Abrahams are well known to the picture trade, having been connected with the Eclair and Eclipse companies for the past four years.

JOHNNY RAY IN NEW ROLE.

Two of the current Johnny and Emma Ray comedies, just announced through General Film, present Johnny Ray, the little stage favorite of farce comedy sketches, as "Muggsy," in which role he finds new fun and new situations. The releases are "Muggsy in Society" and "Muggsy in Bad." They follow "Casey the Bandmaster" and "Casey the Fireman." Another July release is "The Candy Jag." An excellent reception has been accorded the Ray comedies, and the Rays have been working hard to preserve in the pictures the individuality and spirit marking their stage performances. In the casts are not only Johnny and Emma Ray, but more recently Helen Milholland as ingenue.

BILLIE BURKE'S FIRST STORY COMPLETED.

"The Mysterious Miss Terry," an adaptation of Gelett Burgess' story starring Billie Burke, has been completed at the Famous Players' studio under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, and is to be the first of Billie Burke's productions to be released by Paramount under the new "Star Series" of selective releases.

The cast supporting Miss Burke includes Thomas Meighan, Walter Hiers, Gerald O. Smith, George A. Wright and Bessie Learn.

Triangle Shifts July 1 Releases

"Her Excellency the Governor" and "Flame of the Yukon" First July Features.

THE release of "Her Excellency the Governor," a Triangle play produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan and featuring Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar, has been shifted from June 17 to July 1. "Hater of Men," starring Bessie Barriscale, will be released on June 24 instead of July 1, as previously announced.

The program for July 1 has another notable feature, "The Flame of the Yukon," starring Dorothy Dalton in the role of an Alaskan Carmen, a queen of the dance halls during the gold-mad days on the Yukon. Kenneth Harlan appears as "the stranger," a man who exerts a compelling power over the woman and causes her to change her mode of life.

"Her Excellency the Governor" presents a woman of singular contrast to The Flame. She is a woman of mentality and constant ideals who is elected lieutenant governor of a middle western state where crooked politics flourish. Through a strategic move on her part the hyphenated interests, who have attempted to control state legislation, are defeated, and the governor is brought to act for the people instead of the political faction to which he has been subservient. Elda Millar has the part of the lieutenant governor and Wilfred Lucas gives an excellent portrayal of the governor.

A forthcoming Triangle play which will prove unusually popular, it is believed, is "A Strange Transgressor," starring Louise Glaum in a more sympathetic role than the "vampire" parts with which she has long been associated. It will be released July 8 on the same program with "Time Locks and Diamonds," a crook play presenting William Desmond in a distinctly different character than any which he has formerly portrayed.

"THE CURSE OF QUON QWON" (Mandarin).

This is a multiple reel and the first production of the Mandarin Film Company, the only Chinese film manufacturing company in this country. It deals with the curse of a Chinese god that follows his people because of the influence of western civilization. The first part is taken in California, showing the intrigues of the Chinese who are in this country in behalf of the Chinese monarchical government, and those who are working for the revolutionists in favor of a Chinese republic.

A love story begins here and is carried through the rest of the production. The last part of the film is made in China and carefully portrays actual Chinese customs, habits, etc. The scenery and settings, especially in the latter half, are particularly interesting and show some wonderful Chinese scenery as well as strong dramatic sets, all combined with excellent photograhy. All the parts are played by Chinese artists.

Scene from "The Curse of Quon Qwon" (Mandarin).

KITTENS IN ANOTHER ART DRAMA.

Kittens Reichert, the popular child actress, makes her second appearance on Art Dramas Program in "The Peddler," the U. S. Amusement production starring Joe Welch. Her first Art Drama was "House of Cards," in which she won the admiration of all the critics.

"THE LITTLE AMERICAN" (Artcraft).

The accompanying photograph represents one of the scenes in "The Little American," the patriotic subject of Artcraft featuring Mary Pickford. The picture was staged by Cecil De Mille. The story tells of Angela Moore, a typical American girl who braves the dangers of the war zone and "Out There." The Artcraft officials feel that in this subject Miss Pickford not only does the greatest work of her screen career, but provides for picturegoers a production of remarkable appeal.

Scene from "The Little American" (Artcraft).

CARROLL FLEMMING TO DIRECT SERIAL.

Carroll Flemming, general stage director of the Hippodrome, has resigned as director general of the Feature Film Company, to devote his time to the direction of a serial. Four players have been selected for the leading roles and work is already begun on the serial. It will be released through one of the prominent companies this Fall.

Mr. Flemming is well known for his excellent direction of "The Iron Claw," the Pathe serial, starring Pearl White, which was released last Summer.

"MELISSA OF THE HILLS" COMPLETED.

Mary Miles Minter, under the direction of James Kirkwood, is finishing her next Mutual-American production, "Melissa of the Hills," an adaptation of Maibelle Heikes Justice's story. The story is laid in the hills of Tennessee and deals with mountaineer feuds.

Others in the cast are: Alan Forrest, George Periolat, Perry Banks, Harvey Clark, Frank Thompson, George Ahearn, C. E. Rogers, John Gough, Gertrude Lebrandt, Emma Kluge and Ann Schaefer.

ERBOGRAPH BUYS RED BOOK STORY.

Ludwig C. B. Erb, president of the Erbograph Company, has just purchased the motion picture rights to Albert Payson Terhune's story, "The Millstone," which appears in the June number of the Red Book, and will shortly start producing it as a five-reel feature for Art Dramas program.

One thousand dollars was the amount said to be received by Mr. Terhune for the motion picture rights to "The Millstone."

WEEKLY SHOWS AMERICANS OFF FOR FRONT.

Patriotic outbursts will certainly lift the roof from many a motion picture theater during the next few weeks when Gaumont's Mutual Keekly No. 130 is shown. This reel of news pictures has views of the first Americans to leave Paris for the front under the Stars and Stripes. As a feature it will be one of the biggest events of the week on any exhibitor's program.

Asks Entertainment Appropriation for Navy

Secretary Daniels Plans Regularly Organized Entertainment Features at Intensive Training Centers—Pictures Will Play Prominent Part.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washingon, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels has asked Congress to appropriate the sum of $250,000 which is desired by the Navy Department for recreational purposes for enlisted men of the Navy at training stations and camps now or which may be hereafter established.

Secretary Daniels tells Congress that there is a large number of men continually coming into training ashore. The training necessarily must be intensive, rendering some form of amusement and recreation unusually essential. Many of the training places are isolated from places of public amusement, but in the case of those having ready access to diversions found in the cities and places of amusement adjacent thereto, it will be preferable to provide amusement at the places of training, principally because those nearing the end of their courses might contract diseases and carry them into the fleet. It has, of course, been customary to provide some forms of amusement at the regular training stations out of their annual maintenance appropriations, but the number training is so abnormally large that the regular appropriations are not adequate to bear the extra expense that would be occasioned by providing sufficient and proper amusement for all.

It is to be remembered that some time ago the War Department bought something like sixty-six motion picture projection machines to be installed at the various Army posts throughout the country. Motion pictures have proven to be one of the most desirable forms of amusement for enlisted men, and commissioned officers as well, as a break in the monotony of army life. Secretary Daniels does not tell Congress to what particular use this fund is to be put other than that it is for recreational purposes, but it is very likely that among the forms of amusement that will be prescribed and for which the new fund will be used will be motion pictures.

Kleine Promises Letters of Introduction to Soldiers from K-E-S-E Offices.

Washington, D. C.—George Kleine is taking a personal interest in the welfare of all of the employees of the K-E-S-E, and is desirous of helping them out in every way possible. This is evidenced by the letter which has just been received by Rudolph Berger, manager of the Washington branch, which reads in full as follows:

"Dear Mr. Berger:

"If any of our young men are drafted and sent to France, I will be pleased to give them letters of introduction to friends in Paris and London. It may be of advantage to them to have such letters. Kindly keep me posted as the situation develops. Very truly yours,

"GEORGE KLEINE."

Like all other companies in this new industry, the K-E-S-E company is full of young men of conscription age and there naturally will be those among them who will be drafted for service with the colors. To these men, friends at the front or near the front will prove of great value, and those who will go will certainly appreciate this thoughtfulness on the part of Mr. Kleine.

Washingtonians at North Carolina Convention.

Washington, D. C.—Among the Washingtonians who attended the convention last week of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina were George F. Lenehan, manager of the V-L-S-E, who was accompanied by Mrs. Lenehan; Rudolph Berger, manager, and Joseph L. Young, traveling representative of the K-E-S-E; Carl F. Senning, manager for the Fox Film Corporation, and Vivian Whitaker, sales manager in this territory for Paramount and Artcraft. All of these film men are loud in their praises of the hospitality shown them by the exhibitors of the Tarheel state. When not engaged in business conferences they had a very enjoyable time of it, joining in the various activities provided in connection with the convention.

Building Permit Tax in Force.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Friday, June 15, the new building permit tax which has now become a law, went into effect. By this new law, a minimum charge of $10 is made for new construction work and a rate is fixed at $1 per every $1,000 of the estimated cost. A minimum charge of $1 is assessed on alterations and additions and a pro rata charge of $1 per $1,000 estimated cost is provided.

It is understood that the builders who applied for permits on the above date did not like the idea of the mayor in taxing them to make the building inspector's office self supporting. As figured, this will raise about $200,000 per annum and diminish the tax rate about 5 cents.

Kent County Tax Rate.

Chestertown, Md.—On June 12, the County Commissioners met in this city and fixed the tax rate for Kent County at $1.44 for 1917. This is a decrease of 9 cents from the 1916 rate.

Parkway Officers Entertain Film Magnates.

Baltimore, Md.—On Thursday afternoon, June 14, a business gathering of great importance to the moving picture men of Baltimore took place in the dining room of the Merchants' Club. A very enjoyable luncheon was served at which Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Film Corporation; W. E. Smith, district manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, and R. E. Barron, manager of the Paramount Washington exchange, were the guests of Harry W. Webb, president of the Parkway Theater Company, and Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway interests. Plans were discussed concerning the presentation of the Paramount-Artcraft program, to be used in three of the huge and comfortable theaters of this city.

Rising Sun Theater Prospering.

Rising Sun, Md.—Messrs. Armond & Baker, co-proprietors of the Rising Sun theater in this city, visited Baltimore last week and while there called on the several exchanges located in that city. This theater sets 200 people, which number is half the population of this city. They are the first men to make a success of this house. The Mutual Star series is being used.

Premiere of "Within the Law."

Baltimore, Md.—Through the arrangements made by G. F. Lenehan, manager of the Greater Vitagraph exchange in Washington, with L. A. DeHoff, manager of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, a premiere screening of "Within the Law" was given for the benefit of the Baltimore exhibitors. Special invitations were issued to all the exhibitors in this city and quite a representative gathering attended. Besides Mr. Lenehan, there were also present W. F. Ballinger, J. J. Payette and F. McGuth, all of the Vitagraph. Nat Glasser, representative of Sidney B. Lust, of Washington, handling Selznick features, was also present and had a Billy West comedy, "Back Stage," screened for those present. Special organ music was obtained for the occasion. About 200 attended.

Film Notes From Other Places.

Snow Hill, Md.—The Opera House in this city has been taken over by C. L. Boehm and has been reopened under his management.

Frostburg, Md.—Through the courtesy of L. Hitchens, manager and owner of the Opera House, here, this theater was used for a meeting on Sunday, June 17, which was held under the auspices of the J. O. U. A. M.

George Schneider Resigns From Garden Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—Learning that George Schneider, manager of the Garden theater, Lexington street at Park avenue, would resign on Saturday, May 23, this writer had a very interesting chat with him regarding his future plans and past performances. "Mr. Whitehurst, the president of the Garden Theater Company, and I are parting on the best of terms. The only reason I am changing now is that I have a chance to better myself and it is in another city. I have interests in the Garden theater and in my new association with Tom Moore of Washington I will be able to assist the Garden in obtaining better acts, because an arrangement is now being perfected by which a straight three weeks' booking offer, including Phil-a delphia, Baltimore and Washington, can be arranged. In my association with Mr. Moore in Washington I shall act as general manager of all his enterprises. Several new theaters are now being planned in various cities and in six months' time I will have personal charge of a theater now being built in Washington."

Harry Woods, who formerly managed Loew's Hippodrome theater in this city, will probably succeed Mr. Schneider as manager of the Garden. Mr. Whitehurst is now negotiating with him.

Nat Glasser Back From South.

Nat Glasser, the live wire representative for Sidney B. Lust of Washington in this territory, returned from an extended trip through North Carolina and the eastern shore of Maryland last week, which he states was extremely successful. "The Selznick productions are very popular in North Carolina," said Mr. Glasser, "and one very noticeable fact about the exhibitors of that state is their staunch adherence to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. They favor that paper more than any other and have nick-named it, "Old Reliable." Mr. Glasser, for the next three months will have his headquarters at the Caswell hotel in this city and will center his activities on "The Barrier," "Civilization" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Arcade Theater Sold.

Salisbury, Md.—The Arcade theater in this city, for several months under the management of Harry B. Hearnes, has, it is understood been taken over by E. M Day, manager of the Washington, D. C. exchange of the Metro. It is not stated who will manage this house for Mr. Day.

Oxford Has a New Theater.

Oxford, Md.—A new theater has been opened up in this city by C. C. Cannon, who formerly operated the C. C. theater in Easton. The new theater, it is understood, will be called the Oxford opera house.

Academy Entertains School Children.

Baltimore, Md.—Harry A. Henkel, manager of the Academy of Music, gave a theater party to the 151 children of the Louisa M. Alcott public school on the Reistertown road, to see "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

The 1917 Taxes Are Due.

Baltimore, Md.—Notice has been given by William C. Page, city collector of Baltimore, that on July 1, the 1917 taxes on real estate and all forms of personal property, including shares of stock and other property valued or subject to value by the State Tax Commission will be in arrears and will bear interest from that date at the rate of one per cent. per annum. It is also stated that all 1917 taxes not paid by July 1, 1917, will be in arrears, and the property on which said taxes are levied will then be subject to sale for taxes. Requests for bills, accompanied by a stamped envelope, will receive prompt attention.

Red Cross Benefit at Parkway.

Baltimore, Md.—During the week of June 11, a benefit was held at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, through the courtesy of Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager, and Harry W. Webb, president. This benefit was held under the auspices of the Maryland I. F. C. A. and the proceeds are to be used to buy materials needed for the Red Cross work. All the matinees, excepting Saturday, were included in the program of the benefit.

Plan New Parcels Post Street Deliveries

Economical Delivery Method May Be Inaugurated by Government in Parcels Post System—Two Deliveries Daily Hoped For.

By Clarence L. Linz.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Motion picture exhibitors and exchangemen will no doubt be interested in the plan proposed by First Assistant Postmaster General Koons to adapt the present parcel post system to ordinary street delivery. This means that the Post Office Department will inaugurate a new service to replace the ordinary street delivery maintained by private firms and stores, and, in some cases, by exchanges themselves. This is an entirely new plan—one that has never before been broached.

This plan was outlined to our Washington correspondent by E. L. Howe, secretary of a large New York trade association. "The Government is prepared," declared Mr. Howe, "to step in and assist in solving the whole delivery problem of our business houses. I was informed of this plan last week by First Assistant Postmaster General Koons, with whom I had a long talk, during which he told me of the general plan. The Post Office Department is in readiness to immediately take up this work, utilizing the present machinery of the parcel post service.

"I am particularly impressed with the possibilities in this connection," continued Mr. Howe, "especially in view of the difficulties that our business people are beginning to experience in the way of labor shortage. These difficulties will be increased very rapidly as the men are drawn from the business houses for service with the colors and in other pursuits in connection with war measures.

"The parcel post service as outlined by Mr. Koons will provide a thoroughly efficient and highly economical delivery method. The Government is prepared to make two deliveries daily in the city districts and will handle C. O. D. purchases, collecting and remitting for them, and arrangements will also be made to cover the question of claims arising from lost and damaged packages.

"Shipments will be picked up from the business houses late in the evening of each day, thereby enabling them to clean up all accumulations of that day and insuring delivery upon the first trip the following morning. The Government is equipped to handle this work much more efficiently than any private concern, as it employs a higher grade of men, paying around $100 a month, as against commercial salaries of from $50 to $60 per month.

"Where the volume of business warrants it, the Government will place employees of the Post Office Department permanently in the delivery rooms of the establishments, so that there will be no loss of time and energy in the dovetailing of the work.

"The Post Office Department," concluded Mr. Howe, "is the natural agency for the handling of this work, and it is a splendid thing that it is now disposed to take up this plan actively. The department has experimented in one or two places and has received very satisfactory results, so that it is in a position to handle this work on a basis that will develop not only greater efficiency in delivery, but at a lowered cost."

In the event that the Post Office Department actually puts this plan into operation, and from Mr. Howe's statement it is believed that a further announcement will be made very shortly, special arrangements will no doubt be made to fit the needs of the motion picture business. In all other cities, according to reports reaching Washington, there has been from time to time a great deal of difficulty experienced both with respect to local and out of town delivery of films and paper. If the proper arrangements could be made, the Government would not only obtain a highly profitable business, but the exchanges and theaters would secure a service second to none.

In all probability, when the announcement is made, the trade will figure out some plan that would hold good and submit it to the Post Office Department.

Baltimore Business Notes.

Baltimore, Md.—M. Seigel, the popular and live wire representative for the Bluebird productions, has just returned from a successful trip through Virgina and West Virginia. Mr. Seigel is now centering his activities on "Even As You and I" and "Idle Wives."

The Red Mill theater, 1610 West Lafayette avenue, has reopened under the management of J. H. Powers a newcomer in the film circles of Baltimore.

Miss Helen Ulman who is now booking the pictures for the Ulman Opera House in Salisbury, was a visitor to Baltimore last week. While in this city she stopped in at the Mutual exchange to see her friends.

At Ford's opera house, the stirring 8 part drama "Beware of Strangers" began a run on Monday, June 18.

Manager L. A. DeHoff of the New theater, 210 W. Lexington street, admitted owners of Liberty Bonds free of charge last week, and found that many of his patrons took advantage of this arrangement.

On Thursday night, June 7, Marcus Loew, owner of the Hippodrome theater in this city, paid a flying visit to George A. McDermitt, manager of that house. Mr. Loew was accompanied by Howard Brown who owns a theater in Atlanta, Ga. During last week owners of Liberty Bonds were admitted free of charge.

T. J. Bohannon, co-proprietor of the Great Wizard theater, 31 West Lexington street, was pleased with the showing made by the 7 part Universal drama "Even As You and I" last week at this house. He states that the picture drew splendid crowds.

The Arlington theater, Park Heights avenue at Belvedere, which has been under the management of B. Cluster for some months, is now closed.

W. E. Busch, the popular Baltimore representative of K-E-S-E, left Baltimore last week for an extended trip through Western Maryland.

Baltimore, Md.—The Dream theater, 582 North Gay street, which was taken over by Dr. Leonard K. Hirsberg, and has been managed by Samuel G. Smith, is now closed. Mr. Smith is now handling this territory for a film production entitled "White Slave Traffic."

The Daisey theater, 1752 North Gay street, which is owned and managed by L. Hasslinger, has now closed down owing to the hot weather having set in.

Col. Jacob W. Hook, vice-president of the Southern Amusement Company, operating the McHenry theater, was complimented in a letter receivid from R. W. Wooley, publicity director of the Treasury Department of the U. S., on his promotion of the sale of Liberty Loan bonds in this city.

"Garden of Allah" at Ford's.

Baltimore, Md.—As a special feature for advertising "The Garden of Allah," which began a very successful run at Ford's Opera House on Monday, June 4, John T. and Charles E. Ford, co-proprietors of this theater, had the lobby decorated with Oriental figures dressed as Bedouins. Just before the film drama began, a group of Bedouins sang the famous Bedouin Love Song.

Theaters Big Factor for Red Cross Fund

Claim Is Made that Sixty Per Cent. of Liberty Bond Sales in Buffalo Were Due to Screen Advertising—Red Cross Being Helped This Week.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. Telephone, Tupper 6296-J.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The screen as an advertising medium in helping to assemble guns to aid the United States in its present crisis has been exemplified in Buffalo.

"Sixty-five per cent. of the total sales of Liberty Bonds in this city was brought about by means of the various slides used on the subject in the local theaters," was, in effect, a statement of the promoters of the Liberty Loan campaign here. The statement was officially made to W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Mutual Film, Buffalo. Mr. Mack was an active worker in the campaign. He also has been appointed a member of the publicity committee in conection with this city's efforts to raise $1,500,000 for the Red Cross. The committee is composed of leading members of the Buffalo Ad Club.

"In the next Liberty Loan campaign the screen will be featured more than ever before," said Mr. Mack. "Great results are also expected in the Red Cross work this week. Mutual employes used automobiles supplied by this exchange to distribute Red Cross posters and cards to the various theaters.

"The theatrical managers have heartily co-operated with our publicity committee," continued Mr. Mack. "Every theater in Buffalo has already used two different slides on two occasions. These referred, of course, to the Red Cross cause. Similar slides will be used later. The theaters are also showing window cards and three-colored one-sheets that carry a strong appeal for subscriptions. We have arranged to have ministers and others address the audiences on the vital meaning of the campaign."

Among the Rochester theaters at which speakers urged contributions to the $1,000,000 fund being raised there for the Red Cross were: Regent, Gordon, Picadilly, Strand, Family, Colonial, Victoria, Lyndhurst, Grand and Avon. Every appeal was short and urgent and carried a "'punch."

George Eastman's contribution to the Red Cross fund in Rochester amounted to $250,000.

Henry Carr, manager of Shea's theater, Buffalo, arranged to have Bert Leslie, a vaudeville actor appearing at that house, sell Liberty bonds at a local department store. Mayor Fuhrmann of this city was among the other salesmen who volunteered for the same purpose.

Local Mutual Makes Changes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Leon Davidson has succeeded L. C. Thompson as roadman for the Buffalo Mutual. Mr. Davidson is special representative of the company's star productions. W. C. Fickeisen has been appointed feature booker at the Mutual. He was formerly roadman for the General out of Buffalo and later was booker for the Pathe in Syracuse. Miss Rose O'Neil has joined the Mutual staff as bookkeeper. Stephen Bochen, night shipper at this exchange, is recovering from injuries sustained when he recently fell down an elevator shaft.

John F. Miller Heads Niagara Film Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Niagara Film Co. has opened an office in the Chapin Block, Buffalo, under the management of John F. Miller, who for a long time has been in the show business. He has managed his own companies and has been with the Bostock and other shows. For some time Mr. Miller has been prominently connected with the advertising department of the Buffalo Times.

Film Show Proceeds Buy Four Ambulances.

Buffalo, N. Y.—With the proceeds from moving pictures of the European Battle Front and the British Grand Fleet, four ambulances have been bought for the Buffalo unit of the American ambulance field service. The films were shown at the Star theater, this city.

Selznick Headquarters Now Under C. R. Rogers.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The new Selznick headquarters in Buffalo are at 86 Exchange street. Charles R. Rogers is manager. He succeeds A. I. Shapiro, now manager of the Goldwyn offices in Detroit. Mr. Rogers was formerly president and general manager of the Essemar & Rogson film companies, this city.

Geo. R. Matthews Special Representative of Rogson Film.

Buffalo, N. Y.—George R. Matthews has been appointed special representative of the Rogson Film Co. and the Veribest Photoplay Co.'s branch office at 15 West Swan street, Buffalo. He was visited this week by his brother, Samuel Matthews, president and general manager of these companies.

Organ Factory to Make 6,000 Bugles.

North Tonawanda, N. Y.—The Rudolph Wurlitzer Manufacturing Co. of North Tonawanda has just received a contract for the delivery of 6,000 bugles to the Federal Government and will operate its plant overtime to get the order out quickly.

Notes From Here and There in New York State.

The Temple theater, Lockport, which closes for the season this month, will be used for church services by the First Congregational Church of that city.

John M. Sitterly of Buffalo is handling "The Crisis." He has the New York State rights on this picture, exclusive of Greater New York.

Harold E. Hughes of Buffalo has the New York State bookings of the Chaplin pictures, "Charlie in the Harem," and "Son of the Gods."

Rochester, N. Y.—The Temple theater, Rochester, will be closed shortly to permit the making of considerable improvements. These will include a new stage, new carpets and a general brightening up preliminary to the opening of the season about September 1. Vaudeville and moving pictures are featured at the Temple. The alterations will begin at the close of the two weeks' engagement of "A Daughter of the Gods," which has been drawing crowds to that house.

Moving pictures on child hygiene were shown at the Broadway Auditorium, recently, in connection with the celebration of "Baby Week," under the auspices of the Buffalo Health Department.

The film in a projection machine at the Orpheum moving picture theater in North Main street, Niagara Falls, recently caught fire, causing $500 damage to the theater. No one was injured.

Several of the exhibitors and exchange men donated the use of their automobiles for the annual outing of 3,000 orphans housed in local institutions, on Thursday. After a tour of sightseeing the youngsters enjoyed the moving pictures and other attractions of Carnival Court, a summer park, where refreshments were served.

Maritime Film News Notes

From Alice L. Fairweather, St. John, N. B.

Imperial Theater Working With Greater Production Movement.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Imperial theater has joined with the Provincial Government in the effort to aid in the Greater Production movement. A picture showing the growing of apples in New Brunswick was shown at the Imperial this week. The scenes were taken at Lower Gagetown, about forty miles from St. John, so the pictures had local interest as well as the patriotic appeal.

Serials Past, Present and About to Come.

St. John, N. B.—S. T. Hurley of the Lyric theater is starting an advertising campaign for the "Mystery of the Double Cross," which opens at that theater on June 21. The serial "Pearl of the Army" ends the same day. Large blue double crosses have been prepared, which will be prominently displayed in every shop window, and posters are well shown on the billboards about the city. For the Lonesome Luke comedies on Saturday afternoons magic cards were presented to each child attending. The Unique makes a specialty of souvenirs for the children at the Saturday matinees and finds it a very good policy.

The St. John opera house is running two serials in connection with vaudeville. The first three days of the week "Gloria's Romance," featuring Billie Burke, is shown; the last three days the Universal serial, "The Voice on the Wire," is featured and is proving a drawing card. Fine co-operation was shown between this theater and the St. John Standard, a local paper. This paper, which runs a daily motion picture column, sent the editor of this column to New York to see the stars and how pictures were made. Having the pleasure of an interview with Billie Burke, the story was written up in the Standard on Saturday morning (the day of the change at the opera house) and Manager W. C. McKay advertised the interview, taking a good space for his advertisement.

Children Good Patrons for Serials.

St. John, N. B.—The Star theater, a neighboring house in the north end of St. John, has a program of good variety. The theater seats 450 and is very popular. On Mondays and Tuesdays a Pathe picture is shown (this week's is featuring Derwent Hall Caine), Wednesday and Thursday Fox features are the attraction, and these, A. B. Farmer tells me, are his best days. Friday and Saturday a serial is given with a comedy and travel picture. Mr. Farmer says: "I try, of course, to make Saturdays attractive for the kiddies."

The serial is usually one that has had an uptown running, but "I warn my patrons long before I show the picture and they usually wait for it at the Star," Mr. Farmer states. "And the children enjoy serials. There is no doubt of that."

Here is Mr. Farmer's program for the third week in June. Surely an excellent one for a small theater charging 5 and 10 cents admission:

Monday, Tuesday, "Crime and Punishment," Pathe featuring Derwent Hall Caine, with other reels. Wednesday, Thursday, "The Straight Way," Valeska Surrat, Fox. Friday, Saturday, "Patria," travel picture, two-reel western drama, an educational reel and a Lonesome Luke comedy.

Maritime Local Items.

Fairville, N. B.—The Gaiety theater in Fairville, a suburb of St. John, seating 400, is using the Butterfly (Universal) pictures, showing "Eternal Love," with Ruth Clifton and Douglas Gerrard, starting June 27. E. O'Rourke is the manager.

With the St. John Exchangemen.

Carl Crawford of the Fox Corporation office in Montreal is in St. John at present. Mr. Crawford is going over this territory with several specials.

I. Starfield of the Independent Film and Theater Supply reports splendid bookings on the Art Dramas and specials controlled by this company. Bookings have been made in Halifax, Yarmouth, Moncton and a number of the towns in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for "The Crimson Stain Mystery," "Robinson Crusoe," "Rosie O'Grady" and others. The quarters of the company in St. John are opened, though owing to delays they are not completed as yet.

Weather conditions here have been very bad and it seems as if there is a conspiracy on the part of the weather man to put the theaters out of business. On the last eight Saturdays it has rained on five of them.

Triangle, Vitagraph and Metro pictures are to be seen at the Imperial from now on. Contracts have been signed with those companies and the first Triangle, starring William Hart, will be shown June 20. Very few Triangle pictures have been exhibited in this city and it is expected that they will prove as popular here as they have elsewhere. The Gaumont World Tours are very much liked in this city and their return to the Imperial screen was welcomed.

A popular operator is leaving St. John in the person of Arch Mason, who has for some years been the chief electrician at that theater. Mr. Mason is also a singer whose services are greatly in demand and his going will be regretted by his many friends in the city. Mr. Mason is going to the opera house at Wolfville, which has been taken over by a number of St. John theater men, including William C Smith and Mr. Mason himself. Marshall Black, the former owner and manager, died recently. Wolfville is the center of a large district and has the advantage of patronage of the Wolfville Academy.

Middle Canada News Letter

W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East Toronto.

P. E. Doyle Leaves for Vancouver.

TORONTO, ONT.—P. E. Doyle, formerly of Regal Films, Limited, has gone to Vancouver to succeed M. J. Meagher as branch manager there of the General Film Company. It is understood that Mr. Meagher is returning to Toronto.

A. P. Keegan Back to Help President Ouimet.

Toronto.—Andrew R. Keegan, one of the best-known exchange men in Canada, has become assistant general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, distributors of Pathe subjects in the Dominion. Mr. Keegan has been in charge of Pathe interests in Western Canada for the past two and a half years, but he has been called back to the East to assist President L. E. Ouimet at the head office.

Will Oppose Daylight Saving Bill.

Toronto.—D. G. Walkley of Calgary, president of the Exchange Managers' Association of Alberta, has enlisted the aid of the Toronto Film Exchange Managers' Association in a movement to oppose a daylight saving measure for the whole Dominion. The bill providing for the immediate change of time throughout the country has been brought up at Ottawa. The Westerners have raised particular objection to the proposal because of late darkness in the Prairie Provinces. If the clocks are moved forward one hour, as proposed, it will not become really dark until after ten o'clock, and the people, it is declared, will not care to patronize picture shows under such a condition.

MacKay Bros. to Build New Theater.

Hamilton, Ont.—Plans have been drawn for another new moving picture theater in Hamilton, Ont. According to the specifications the new house will cost $[illegible]000, and it will be built at 150 Locke street South by MacKay Bros., [illegible] Lister building. The building is to be a one-story brick and steel structure with plastic relief.

Foundation Laid for New Montreal House.

Montreal, Que.—The foundation for the new Majestic theater, Montreal, has been laid, and it is expected that the house will be ready for business early next fall. The new theater is situated at Crey avenue and Sherbrooke street and will serve the fashionable suburb of Westmount. It will have a seating capacity of 1,500. The contractors are J. Gillett & Co., and the architect is Daniel J. Crighton.

Gets Official Italian War Films.

Toronto.—President L. E. Ouimet of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributors for Pathe, announces that he has secured the official Italian war films for the Dominion of Canada. The first release is known as "On the Italian Battle Front" and was taken with the authorization of the supreme command of the Italian General Staff.

Will Distribute Films Showing Life at Camp Borden.

Toronto.—Permission has been extended by the Militia Department to representatives of the United States Government to take moving pictures of Camp Borden. These films are to be screened throughout the states under the direct auspices of Uncle Sam to give an idea of camp life under war conditions and to stimulate interest in military affairs.

Toronto.—Manager Clarence Robson of the Strand theater, put on a fine front on the occasion of the presentation of the latest Chaplin feature, "The Immigrant." The whole entrance of the theater was converted into the appearance of an ocean liner with hatch doors to permit the entrance and exit of patrons.

Toronto.—The Ontario Government has announced that fifty projection machines are being purchased for use in the educational campaign to be pursued by the various departments of the Government to encourage thrift and conservation among the citizens and to illustrate what the authorities are doing to protect the interests of the people.

Cleveland Screeners Plan Summer Frolics

First Outing Day Set for July 11—Automobile Trip to Springfield Lake, Basket Luncheon, Baseball, Other Diversions and a Picnic Dinner.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—The first of a series of summer frolics of the Cleveland Screen Club will take place Wednesday, July 11, when the screeners will make an auto trip to Springfield Lake, thirty miles south of the city.

The program of the day includes a baseball game at the lake between a team of exhibitors headed by Jack Greenbaum of the Alhambra and a team of exchange men captained by E. A. Eschmann of the World Film Corporation. Besides this there will be little fistic exhibitions and a tug of war.

Besides a picnic dinner at Young's restaurant, there will be a basket lunch, bathing, fishing and other pastimes. The screeners plan to take their entire families and make a day of it.

Tom Colby was appointed chairman of the committee on entertainment and the screeners are looking to him to do some hard work in order to insure them a good time.

Feel Burden of Higher Wages in Middle West.

Cleveland, O.—Local expenses of film exchanges in the middle west have been greatly increased by the higher wages paid help, according to the statements of several managers of Cleveland.

"Salaries of poster clerks and film inspectors have mounted greatly, due to the shortage," said one manager. "Poster boys are getting an average of $12 a week and the rewind girls average $10. These girls a couple of years ago were paid about $8 a week, but now you can't get one for that and few at $10. There is one exchange in Cleveland which is paying $12 a week to the girls."

"Ignorance" at Orpheum in Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—"Ignorance," the film play, made in Cleveland and New York, has opened in Ohio after many months of delay, due to the fact that certain parts of the film were made over.

It played a week in the Orpheum theater, Cleveland, and a week at the Majestic theater, Lorain, and is booked for week runs in several other Ohio cities.

The cast of "Ignorance" includes Earle Metcalfe, Mary Moore, Ethel Tully, Augustus Phillips, Arthur Mathews and several other well known players.

Headquarters of "Idle Wives" in Columbia Bldg.

Cleveland, O.—"Idle Wives," after a long preliminary advertising campaign, has at last gotten under way in Ohio.

After playing two weeks at the Lyric theater, Cincinnati, other bookings were taken swiftly, three prints being in use the week of June 18. One print was playing indefinitely at the Opera House, Cleveland; another in Toledo at the Alhambra theater, and the third was working in Hamilton, O.

E. J. Schmidt has been appointed manager of the Idle Wives production in Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana, with headquarters on the seventh floor of the Columbia building, Cleveland.

Another Foul Odor Bomb Outrage.

Cleveland, O.—The "movie bomb" has been introduced in Cleveland theaters.

Someone exploded one of these obnoxious odor obstacles in the Milo theater and the owner, Mrs. H. Papp, had Albert Dolan, a movie operator, arrested, charged with assault and battery.

The Milo has had troubles with the unions for some time. Mrs. Papp charged that Dolan threw the bomb at her, cutting her arm and leaving a scent like a skunk's in the theater and upon herself. Dolan pleaded not guilty.

E. H. Griffith Formerly a Cleveland Reporter.

Cleveland, O.—E. H. Griffith, for two years with Edison and who recently directed a picture for that company called "The Star Spangled Banner," was formerly a reporter on the Cleveland Leader. He left his job to go with Edison as a scenario writer. He is a distant relative to D. W. Griffith.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully Reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Airdome Season in Middle West Worst Ever

Oldest Inhabitant in Cincinnati Remembers No Chillier Season than This Year—Out of Door Theaters Unable to Open.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First Nat'l Bank Building, Cleveland, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—So far this season the exhibitor with the airdome has received by far the worst break of his career, since the memory of the oldest inhabitant does not reach back to a colder summer season than this has been. Several airdomes have been repainted and otherwise prepared for the summer season, and the Orpheum roof, one of the pleasantest places in the city on a hot summer night, has for weeks been ready for business, but the nights have uniformly been so cold that so far from outdoor pictures being possible, it has been a question whether heat should not be supplied inside. The larger seating capacity of most of the outdoor theaters makes the exhibitors eager to open them, but so far this has been out of the question.

Fire in Booth at the Grand Drives Out Audience.

Cincinnati, O.—A crowded house at one of the recent performances of "Enlighten Thy Daughter" at the Grand Opera house had some thrills not in the picture, and a panic was narrowly averted, not to mention the possibility of a real fire. The film took fire while being run, a tongue of flame shooting out over the auditorium, and the audience arose and started to leave. Clifford H. Purcell, who was at the organ, calmed them, however, by shouting that the booth was fireproof, when the crowd was startled again by a burst of flame when the door of the booth was opened. Purcell again quieted the crowd by playing a lively air, and the blaze was quickly extinguished with no loss other than that of the film. George Nixon, the operator, did quick work with an extinguisher in the booth. Another print of the film was obtained with comparatively little delay, and the engagement was concluded with almost no interruption.

Films Made of Yearly Latonia Derby.

Cincinnati, O.—Prints of moving pictures of the Latonia Derby, as well as other events at the old Latonio race course, always have an active demand in and around Cincinnati, and this year was no exception. Four or five camera men, independent and attached to various news film concerns, were on hand at the recent running of the Derby, and secured some excellent pictures for the edification of those not personally present. In addition to the pictures used locally, however, it is understood that a number of prints were ordered after the race from the East, on account of the fact that an Eastern-owned horse, shipped to Cincinnati only a day or so before the race, won the event, and that there was special interest in it in New York and other Eastern cities.

Both Operators and Exhibitors Buy Bonds.

Cincinnati, O.—Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 165, of Cincinnati, joined the move to support the Government through purchase of its bonds by officially subscribing to $500 of the Liberty Loan issue. The organization also decided, and so informed its 120 members, that if any of them desired to purchase the bonds at the rate of one dollar a week they could do so by depositing that amount with the secretary, who would purchase and deliver the bonds as fast as enough money accumulated.

Moving picture exhibitors of Cincinnati can claim at least part of the credit for the huge success of the Liberty Loan in Cincinnati and therefore in the country as a whole. The city's allotment of the issue was $25,000,000, and not only was this amount subscribed for, but an additional five million for good measure. Practically every exhibitor in the city took a substantial amount of the bonds personally, besides giving the use of his screen free of charge for the various advertising stunts used to familiarize the public with the nature and merits of the issue.

Dayton House to Be Like Indianapolis Circle.

Dayton, O.—Building has begun on the handsome photoplay house to be erected on the site of the old First Baptist Church, on North Main street. Mark Gates, of Indianapolis, who is interested in the house, will be in Dayton to supervise the work of construction. The house will be one of the finest in Ohio, and will be modeled and operated much like the Circle theater, the newest and handsomest of the picture houses in Indianapolis, and one of the finest in the country. So far it has not been practicable to set a date for the opening of the new Dayton house, but it is hoped to have it ready for business by the latter part of the fall.

Manager Kress Collects Red Cross Offering.

Piqua, O.—Manager H. W. Kress, of May's opera house, came to the front recently with another piece of public spirit, for the benefit of the American Red Cross. He showed a picture, "The Red Cross Nurse," illustrating vividly the work of the great organization, and charged no fixed admission fee, but had an offering collected for the benefit of the Red Cross, a handsome sum being realized.

Louisville News Letter

Pin a Medal on Him for Contempt of Danger.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Various exhibitors and machine operators have different views of what should be done in case the operator accidentally puts on reel four instead of reel three and fails to find his mistake until after a hundred feet or so of film has been run off. In many cases the audience will start hissing, whistling, or in some other way attract the notice of the operator. Sometimes the latter has not seen the film before and does not discover his mistake until he is deep in the reel. Such a case occurred in a Louisville theater on Sunday, June 17, where the operator either failed to find his mistake until through with the film, or else didn't know what to do. He missed reel No. 3 completely, putting on No. 4, and finished No. 4. He then went back and put on No. 3, after balling up the show until no one knew the theme of the story.

When interviewed on this subject one film exhibitor stated that in many cases it was possible to eliminate the missed film entirely. Where it is an overpadded picture it is sometimes easy to skip the reel, but in most cases the thread of the tale will be entirely lost, as no matter how much padding may occur in a reel, it is impossible to miss a thousand feet without cutting out a lot of important factors. But once in a while an operator may be commended for putting the fifth reel on first. In rearranging the material he handles he becomes an artist, for he adds greatly to its value.

Use of Pictures for Private Entertainment Grows.

Louisville, Ky.—The idea of using feature moving pictures for outdoor as well as indoor entertainments of the private kind, given by the wealthier residents, gives promise of growing in importance in this section of the country. Last week one of the largest and finest entertainments of the season, given at "Lincliffe," the elaborate country home of Judge Robert Worth Bingham, on the Upper River road, was made unusually interesting, due to a private exhibition of pictures. Arrangements had been made for showing the film "Diplomacy," starring Miss Marie Doro, and showing many scenes at the Bingham home at Palm Beach, Fla. However, the film did not arrive in time, and a substitute bill had to be made up hurriedly, but took extremely well.

Big Camps Will Make Plenty of Local Trade.

Louisville, Ky.—One of the local exhibitors in commenting on what the camp would mean to Louisville, said: "We understand that 45,000 soldiers will be stationed at Louisville, or about one-fifth of the total population of the city. At Chattanooga, Tenn., the theaters have been packed and jammed, and business has been humming. In that case there are about 10,000 soldiers, and these are at Chickamauga, ten miles from the city, and on a fifteen-cent car line. At Louisville the boys will be on a five-cent line and five miles from the city. This means that the theaters will not begin to be able to handle the business, especially along about pay day. The same thing is shown at Indianapolis, Ind., where the officers at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, and other men number about 5,000 at the present time. The city is overrun with visitors and soldiers, and accommodations can hardly be secured, especially at the week end. With 45,000 men stationed at Louisville, it is a safe bet that we will do rush business from opening until closing hours, and the operating hours may be made longer."

Mutual Film Closes Its Louisville Office.

Louisville, Ky.—The Louisville office of the Mutual Film has been closed, and in the future Kentucky business will be handled from the company's other offices within striking distance of the district. Eastern Kentucky will be handled out of Cincinnati, and Louisville and other districts from Indianapolis or probably some of the Southern offices may handle a portion of Southern and Western Kentucky.

J. W. Van Wart, manager of the local office, recently left the company, and it was decided to give up the Louisville branch.

Personal Mention.

Louisville, Ky.—L. J. Dittmar is again at Jacksonville, Fla., spending ten days looking after the making of colored pictures.

Paducah, Ky.—E. Douglas Bagby has resigned as manager of the Arcade theater, and has gone back into the drug business.

Joseph Kaliski Comes Well Recommended.

DETROIT, MICH.—Joseph Kaliski is the new Fox manager at Detroit, succeeding C. G. Kingsley, who left for Boston June 19. He has been so long with Mr. Fox that he knows exactly what are the requirements of his superiors. We wish him every success in Michigan. He comes to us with splendid recommendations as being square and straightforward in all dealings, which is an assurance to exhibitors that they can be certain of good treatment.

Monroe Isen Transferred to Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—Monroe Isen, formerly in charge of the booking department at the Universal Mecca branch in New York City, has been transferred to the Detroit branch and will have the same capacity in the Michigan office.

Complete Selling Staff of Local Pathe.

Detroit, Mich.—C. W. Perry, manager of Pathe at Detroit, announces his complete selling staff as follows: L. E. Davis, H. I. North, M. H. Bryer, J. J. Kulms and G. M. Rowell. Mr. Perry has inaugurated a big selling campaign to increase the business at least 25 per cent.

Offers $500 Reward for Thief.

Detroit, Mich.—J. H. Moore of the Temple theater, Detroit, has offered a reward of $500 for the capture of the men who held up and robbed Charles G. Williams, house manager, on Sunday night, June 10.

The Youngest Manager in Detroit a Live One.

Detroit, Mich.—The youngest theater manager in Detroit is O. V. Locey, who has the Coliseum at Edmore. His father, V. V. Locey, owns the house. Young Locey is one live-wire; he belongs to the Michigan Exhibitors' League, is a frequent visitor to Detroit investigating the box office attractions, and attends all of the state conventions. Yes, Edmore is a small town, but young Locey—although only about 21 years old—has big city ideas.

"Joan the Woman" Opens to Good Business.

Detroit, Mich.—"Joan the Woman" had its premier in Detroit Sunday evening, June 17, at the Opera House. The theater had been specially decorated for the event. Will M. Elliott, in charge of the advertising, has certainly been very liberal in buying newspaper space and billboards, as we doubt if any big production has had any more of this sort of advertising than "Joan the Woman." The receipts and attendance the first three days, considering the warm weather, has been all that could be expected, but the fact that there was a bigger crowd Tuesday than on Sunday shows which way sentiment is running for this production. Barnett Film Attractions own the picture for Michigan, Ohio and the Northwest. They will not show it after the Detroit engagement until September, when they will be ready to accept Michigan bookings.

Local Theaters Redecorating.

Detroit, Mich.—The Norwood theater, Detroit, has just completed redecorating its interior. Some time ago the Bernhardt theater, Detroit, completely remodeled its house. The Gladwin Park theater is planning to enlarge and to completely alter and redecorate. Improvements are to be made at the Martha Washington theater, Ypsilanti. About ten thousand dollars will be spent on redecorating and alterations to the New Holland theater, Pontiac.

D. Leo Dennison is at the Hotel Pontchartrain, Detroit, looking after the interests of the Selznick enterprises. Mr. Dennison will later open a Detroit office for Selznick.

One week after his arrival in Detroit to open a branch office for the distribution of Goldwyn pictures, A. I. Shapiro announces having signed up the biggest exhibitor in the state, John H. Kunsky. The signature of Mr. Kunsky was placed on the dotted line Tuesday afternoon, June 19.

Illinois Censorship Bill Proves Unpopular

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—The impracticability of state censorship for moving pictures was pointed out to members of the judiciary committee of the state Senate when the Guernsey bill was up for consideration. In this contention the representatives of the exhibitors had the support of several members of the upper branch of the Illinois legislature. Senator Walter I. Manny of Mt. Sterling, who fought the bill, declared that one might as well try to dictate what other people should eat as try to regulate local pictures by a state censor.

As the bill originally stood there was no redress for the exhibitors after the proposed state censor had once ruled that a film could not be shown. Senator Barbour proposed to remendy this by giving the courts power to allow redress. His amendment to the bill was adopted by the committee, but was not concurred in by the house. The other amendment and one upon which the Senate took a firm stand was that there should be no conflict between the state and local boards [illegible] one or two other cities.

Immoral moving pictures are not bringing financial success and the producers are gradually eliminating them, thus doing away with the need of censorship. F. W. Hartmann of Chicago, representing the Illinois section of the Moving Picture Exhibitors League of America, told the committee.

Leading newspapers of the state have opposed the bill from the start because censorship is un-American.

H. L. Weil Assumes Management of Maxine Theater.

FORT HURON, MICH.—Herb. L. Weil becomes a still more prominent figure in amusement affairs in Port Huron by a deal by which he assumes the management of the Maxine theater. This house, which was operated for three years by Harry Goseline, has been taken over by a syndicate of Port Huron business men. Weil is secretary and treasurer of the company. As he is lessee of the Majestic theater and owner of the Bijou theater, the increased holdings will give him an opportunity for excellent booking service. There will be no change in policy at any of the theaters.

Crown Theater Stock Changes Hands.

Calumet, Mich.—The interest of the Vogel estate in the Crown theater has been purchased by Louis G. Sesing and Delbert Laity, who have taken a five years' lease on the theater building. Newcastle's New Strand Makes Impression Pretty Motion Picture Theater Opens With Fine Bill—Patrons Are Pleased With House—Seats 500—Will Feature Music.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

NEWCASTLE, IND.—The new Strand theater, Newcastle's pretty new motion picture house, at the corner of South Main and Central avenue, was formally opened last Monday night and made a splendid impression on lovers of the film drama. Two shows were given, the program including a fine bill of motion pictures and a one-act vaudeville sketch, and the house was filled at each show. Everyone expressed themselves as being highly pleased.

The new playhouse is under the management of the Newcastle Motion Picture company. The officers of the company are: John G. Ostot, president; Ralph Swearingen, vice-president and treasurer, and John V. Bezy is secretary. The house is under the management of Mr. Swearingen, who has had several years' experience in the motion picture business.

Persons who attended the opening say the new house contains just about everything that is needed to make it complete. The needs of the patrons are well cared for, especially along the lines of safety and convenience. There is no danger from fire, owing to the fireproof construction of the building and the adequate fire escapes. The ventilation is good and in the winter time the house will be comfortably heated by steam.

The new Strand is situated in the building recently remodeled by Cicero Bailey, a portion of which was formerly the old Christian church. The theater is one of the most up-to-date playhouses in the state and is built along the same lines as the Circle theater in Indianapolis. It has seating capacity of 500 people. It has a lower floor and balcony and the interior is prettily finished in cream calcime.

The auditorium has thirty-five feet of fire exit and has a floor of cement. The theater has an eighteen by twenty-two-foot stage, with plenty of room for a good vaudeville act. The seats are so arranged that there is no place in the entire house from which the whole stage will not be in full view. The walls and floor of the lobby have been beautifully decorated, giving it a most attractive appearance.

The theater will be supplied with pictures by three different moving picture corporations, the Pathe, Mutual and Art Dramas. It is the plan of the management to stage a one-act vaudeville feature with each program. The Mic Kinney orchestra, one of the best musical organizations in the city, has been engaged to furnish music for the place.

Zaring Gives Theater Party to Orphans.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A. C. Zaring, secretary of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and proprietor of the North Star theater at Twenty-fifth street and Central avenue, entertained about 225 children from the Indianapolis Orphan Asylum with a theater party last week. The children were taken to the theater on a special street car, provided by the Indianapolis Traction and Terminal Company. "The Twin Kitties," a picture indorsed by the board of indorsers of motion pictures for juniors, was the attraction.

New Theater Will Be Named the Lyric.

Newcastle, Ind.—John and George West, proprietors of a barber shop on North Main street, are arranging to open a new moving picture theater in the Burr block in the room formerly occupied by the old Strand theater. A new motion picture machine has been ordered and the latest pictures will be shown. The new theater will be strictly a five-cent house and will be known as the Lyric.

Will Ask for City Censor in Columbus.

Columbus, Ind.—The Rev. B. M. Kellam, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church of this city, was delegated at an indignation meeting of the ministers of this city last week to wait on Mayor Karl Volland and protest against pictures that are being shown at some of the moving picture theaters here that the ministers insist are sensational. The ministers also will ask the City Council to pass an ordinance providing for a city censor.

Tennessee News Letter

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Signal Amusement Reopens Knoxville House.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—The Signal Amusement Company of Chattanooga, operating a chain of moving picture and vaudeville houses in east Tennessee, has extended its theatrical holdings into Knoxville, and has opened the Strand theater. The Strand was formerly under the management of Geo. N. Shorey, of Knoxville, and was known as the Gay. Remodeling and improvement has made it a much finer house than before. A $15,000 pipe organ has been installed, and Professor Lee Mayher, of Berkeley, Cal., will play.

Four mammoth typhoon fans have been installed on the roof of the building, and will keep the building well supplied with fresh air. An immense electric sign, bearing the word "Strand" in four-foot leters, with a white border around it, has been installed in the front.

The highest class pictures used at the new Strand are booked under contracts held by the Signal company, of which Wm. H. Lindsey, of Nashville, is president, and Frank H. Dowler, of Chattanooga, is general manager. W. E. Drumbar has been placed in charge of the new house, and gives promise of furnishing the local public with a program second to none in the city. The slogan of the theater is the same as used by the Alcazar, a Chattanooga theater belonging to the company: "Where Quality Meets."

Princess Has Beautiful Summer Lobby.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Princess theater has installed what is probably the handsomest lobby in this section of the state for the summer season. With a trellis work of vines and flowers wound about a frame extending the entire length of the corridor, hanging baskets, bird nests, electric gold-fish fountains, etc., as set off in a brilliant glow of vari-colored lights. Incandescents are placed inside the birds suspended from the overhead framework, which gives a weird effect. Manager Harry Sudekum pulled off his coat and pitched in on a Sunday morning with the decorating work, and assisted by his helpers, had the display in shape for the show the following day. Heavy timbers were used as uprights, and much work was necessary to put the extensive decorations in place. While Mr. Sudekum personally directed the work, Stage Carpenter Lee Murkin executed a large part of his ideas, together with Pete Ponzano, Louis Altman, Chas. Stedman and Joe Flynn.

Violet Mersereau to Play Editor.

Birmingham, Ala.—Violet Mersereau, beautiful moving picture star, will edit the photoplay columns for the Birmingham News during her three days' star in this city, at which time she is booked to appear on the stage at Loew's Bijou, in connection with one of her screen plays, "The Boy-Girl." The newspaper work was arranged through Manager Hugh Cordoza, local manager for the Loew interests. While in Birmingham a series of social entertainments will be arranged for Miss Mersereau, who is a great favorite in this city.

Pictures and Vaudeville at Lyric.

Jackson, Tenn.—Both moving pictures and vaudeville are being shown at the Lyric at the present time, and the program includes two matinee performances and two in the evening. The afternoon shows are at 1:45 and 5:00 o'clock, while the evening performances start at 6:30. Seven reels of pictures are shown, in addition to vaudeville specialties with admission at ten cents. D. L. Williams is manager of the Lyric.

"Womanhood" Scores at Bijou.

Nashville, Tenn.—Following closely upon the presentation of Vitagraph's spectacle, "Womanhood," the Bijou, local negro theater, booked this picture with special orchestral music, and did a big business during its two days' run. Hundreds of negro men of military age viewed the production, and much enthusiasm was created toward recruiting.

Nashville Theaters Make Donations.

Nashville, Tenn.—The ready response with which Nashville amusement people have met the Government's call for assistance has been noted particularly in large newspapers advertising the Liberty Loan some weeks ago and the Red Cross campaign now under way. Manager Carson Bradford of the Strand gave an entire page to the Red Cross publicity work in the afternoon paper last week, with a huge page illustration bearing the words: "If You Can't Go Across With a Gun, Come Across With Your Part of the Red Cross Fund." This is a good work and serves further to show that profits at the local houses are not on the decline. Tony Sudekum, president of the Cresent Amusement Company, also furnished a page ad recently in connection with a local commercial organization.

Earl Rife Goes to Paramount.

Memphis, Tenn.—Earl Rife has resigned his connection with the Mutual at Memphis, and has gone to Atlanta, where he will be affiliated with the Southern Paramount. Up to the present no successor has been named for the Memphis office of Mutual.

Visitors at Memphis Exchanges.

Memphis, Tenn.—Among the visitors around Memphis exchanges recently have been noted the following prominent exhibitors: C. S. Swann, Tunica, Miss.; W. S. Mayes, Gendora, Miss.; W. W. Clay, Colliersville, Tenn.; C. Lancaster, Wynne, Ark., and Mr. Moorehead, Tohula, Miss Mr. Lancaster is a regular weekly visitor to the Memphis film row.

Summer Prices at Loew's Lyceum.

Memphis, Tenn.—Loew's Lyceum has instituted its summer scale of prices, effective June 17, which are as follows: Matinees, 5 and 10 cents; night performances, Saturdays and Sundays, 5, 15 and 20 cents. The Lyceum is doing a wonderful summer business, with no indication of cessation.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Atlanta News Letter

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Violet Mersereau Greeted by Atlanta's Mayor.

ATLANTA, GA.—Mayor Asa G. Candler, the city's most distinguished photoplay fan, was the first to greet Violet Mersereau, the celebrated film ingenue, who reached the city Tuesday for a personal appearance the remainder of the week at the Grand theater.

Mayor Candler has long been an admirer of the captivating little film celebrity. He greeted her today when she arrived at the Terminal station, assuring her of her welcome to the city and its hospitality.

Preceding Miss Mersereau Wednesday was E. T. Granlund, chief publicity director of the Marcus Loew Theatrical enterprises. Granlund has introduced to audiences more film artists than any other man in America. He will remain in Atlanta several days.

Myrtle Reeves Begins to Shine.

Atlanta, Ga.—The rise of an Atlanta school girl into the firmament of film stars is being testified to this week by "A Kentucky Cinderella," being presented at the Grand theater.

The star of this is Myrtle Reeves. Two years ago she was a pupil of the Girls' High School. Given an opportunity to go in pictures, she was a success from the start. She did not have to serve her apprenticeship in the ranks of the "extra" people, as almost all inexperienced performers have to do, but from the beginning was given important roles.

Gladys Hanson Stinting Not in Patriotism.

Atlanta, Ga.—Gladys Hanson (Mrs. Charles Emerson Cook) is on a visit to her father, Mr. P. H. Snook, at their home in Copenhill, Ga. She is an eloquent example of the woman, who with her professional duties faithfully pursued, can combine the war service with other women of the nation. While one of the most successful women on the dramatic, as also the moving picture stage, today, Mrs. Cook finds time to do full duty to her work.

She has passed her examination in the first-aid and surgical dressing classes she has given generously of her talents for benefits for Red Cross work, and is one of the inspiring spirits who brings others to the work. Her heart beats always most warmly for the South and Atlanta, her native city. She was one of the first who, reading of the disastrous fire, at once sent her personal check for $75 to be given for the relief work.

Her visits home are always the occasion for a series of brilliant entertainments

Arthur Lucas Publicly Thanks Senator Smith.

Atlanta, Ga.—The thanks of moving picture theater people generally were extended Senator Hoke Smith Tuesday, June 5, by Arthur Lucas upon his return to Atlanta from Washington, where he went

A. C. Thornton, of Columbus, Ga., manager of the Majestic theater there, was in Atlanta last week.

Minneapolis Notes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Shafer Laboratories have completed an order for 700 Red Cross slides which are to be sent to theaters in Minnesota to boost the fund for sending the "Red Cross across." The slide drawing has been made into cut form and used by the Minneapolis Journal as a thumb-nail illustration for all stories about Red Cross activities.

Minneapolis Film Trade Notes of Interest

Changes in Personnel to Local Film Offices—Business and Personal Notes from Exchanges—What Exhibitors Are Doing.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—"As advertised," William K. Howard resigned as manager of the Minneapolis Greater Vitagraph exchange last week and on Monday, June 18, began his duties as manager of the Minnesota Metro service, an office next door to his former headquarters. Mr. Howard succeeds E. M. Ames at the Metro helm and is succeeded at the Vitagraph exchange by H. J. Bayley, formerly of the Vitagraph exchange at Omaha, Neb., and also with the same firm at Cleveland, Ohio, for eight months.

Mr. Howard, undoubtedly the youngest exchange manager between Chicago and the coast, came to Minneapolis the first week of August last to succeed C. W. Swain as manager of the Vitagraph. He was formerly connected with the Chicago Vitagraph and Cincinnati World offices. Mr. Howard has won a host of loyal admirers among exhibitors of the Northwest in a short time and is very popular among the exchangemen. He was president of the Minneapolis F. I. L. M. Club until it disbanded last month and is secretary of the Northwest advisory committee of the National Association of the industry.

Harry Cohen of the Metro and his bride left Minneapolis Saturday, June 16, on a delayed honeymoon trip to Vancouver, B. C. The Cohens will remain on the Canadian Pacific coast for about three weeks, stopping off here on their return to New York City.

E. C. Davies Back at Saxe Office.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Here's 'nother change. Edward C. Davies, who recently left the Saxe office to join the Metro forces, has resigned from the latter exchange and returned to the Saxe exchange as manager, succeeding Ralph M. Bradford, who has been appointed manager of the Goldwyn exchange.

John Bachman Joins Saxe Exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—John Bachman has resigned as manager of the Norway Film Co. and has joined the Saxe exchange and will cover the Minnesota and Dakota territory.

Fred S. Meyer Goes to General at Chicago.

Fred S. Meyer, former manager of the Universal and General exchange here, has announced that he will join the Chicago General exchange within a week. Mr. Meyer leaves Minneapolis with expressions of regret from a large number of exhibitors who have become close friends.

Lochren Film Gets New Blood.

Richard Sasse, O. T. Olson and C. E. Doll have joined the forces of the Lochren Film Service in the film producing and distributing departments.

Notes from the Exchanges and Personals

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has leased the former Artcraft offices on the sixth floor of the Film Exchange building and is moving in. Up to time of going to press Manager Bradford and a step ladder had moved in and a sign painter had decorated the main entrance with some artistic Old English lettering.

Arthur Solle, who has been touring Missouri and Kansas for the past year with "The Spoilers" de luxe edition, has returned to the Minneapolis headquarters of the Friedman Film Corp. for a short rest, previous to leaving on a tour of Minnesota and Iowa via motor with "Her Condoned Sin." Israel Friedman has returned from the Iowa territory after giving "'Her Condoned Sin" a good start.

The rumor that C. L. Booth, assistant manager, would leave the Vitagraph exchange and join the Metro forces at the same time Mr. Howard did has been killed by the announcement that Mr. Booth is now assisting Mr. Bayley at the Vitagraph offices and working harder than ever.

H. D. Naugle, Western representative for the Greater Vitagraph, spent several days in Minneapolis last week on his way to the Southwest, where he will meet General Manager Goof of the Vitagraph. In company with Mr. Goof, Mr. Naugle will return here about June 30.

Manager P. H. Carey of the Zenith exchange has booked "The Conquest of Canaan" in the Metropolitan, Minneapolis' legitimate theater, for a six-day run, beginning Monday, June 18.

Rube Harrison, aide de camp to Manager Mannie Gottlieb of the Favorite Feature exchange, has been directing the destinies of a road show combination of war films and two lecturers, Canadian soldiers direct from the battlegrounds of France. The combination played a week's engagement at the St. Paul Blue Mouse and did well.

Manager Wilson of the American Maid exchange has announced that he will book "God's Man," featuring H. B. Warner, in the Dakotas and Minnesota for N. De Roma, who controls the rights to the production.

C. L. Peavey, manager, and J. P. Cubberley, assistant manager of the Paramount exchange, have returned from a short business trip to Chicago and announce that the snappy little house organ recently published under the generalship of C. J. Ver Halem, will be printed regularly again within a short time. One hundred and thirty-six Paramounts will be released through the local exchange during the next year, it has also been announced.

Among the Exhibitors in Northwest.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager James A. Keough of the Strand has booked the Universal feature, "The Doll's House," featuring Dorothy Phillips.

Manager Lowell V. Calvert of the new Garrick followed up a capacity business with "Wolf Lowry" with Anita Stewart's "Clover's Rebellion," and did a good business.

Manager William Koch of the new Aster added a three-reel local military feature to his program for the first half of the week of June 18 and it proved worth while.

Manager Billy Watson of the new Garden has booked "Hell Morgan's Girl" for third down-town run in Minneapolis.

St. Paul, Minn.—Elliott and Sherman, owners of the Hippodrome, have booked their feature, "The Birth of a Nation," in the theater for the third down-town run in St. Paul. The first week's business was large and if the feature continues to draw it is possible that the run will be extended a week.

Manager Granstrom of the Strand played "The Spoilers" for the third time the first half of the week of June 18 to a good business. He has booked Bluebird features for first run in St. Paul for three days a week in the near future.

Manager Maitland of the three Breilein theater added a soloist to the program at the Victoria recently in the person of Robert E. Gehan, a favorite in this city, and did a capacity business as a result.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Hugh C. Andrews of the Lyric began a four-day run of Bryant Washburn's "Filling His Own Shoes" on Sunday, June 18, to a capacity business. Washburn is rapidly becoming a favorite of Minneapolis photoplay-going public.

New Orleans Lafayette Theater Shuts Down

After Two Weeks' Trial It Is Abandoned by Josiah Pearce & Sons—Seats 2,000—House Lived a Hard Luck Story Recently

N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Lafayette theater, after only two short weeks under the management of the Josiah Pearce & Sons interests, has been closed. This was rather a surprise to the wise ones along Exchange Row. The Lafayette is a cozy theater, seats about 2,000, and is fully equipped for the successful showing of the most pretentious screen releases.

Under the management of the Saenger Amusement company it was made a very popular house. At that time the Lafayette had fallen into decay as a theatrical place of amusement and its rehabilitation was a difficult matter, but the Saenger management went about it with determination and were rewarded with large and consistent patronage. The Lafayette is situated at a disadvantag in being several blocks away from Canal street, but it has the advantage of being in the direct line of travel from the uptown district, which is admitted to contain the most desirable population from whence to draw motion picture patrons.

Recently, under the management of "Jack" Clark, who has proven his efficiency by long association with the Pearce interests, the Lafayette started off well. The first week Lois Weber's production, "Even as You and I" was shown with most acceptable orchestra accompaniment and all of the personal and mechanical accessories that go to make a theater popular. The attendance was satisfying and well satisfied. The second week started with the showing of "The Naked Soul," a picture made in France and having the place of its nativity about the only good thing that could be said about it. This offering was followed by "The Moonstone" and the dissolution quickly set in. These releases were furnished to the Lafayette over the protest of the house manager.

The closing of this house caused a complete realignment of the film situation. "The Star Spangled Banner," which was to have been shown at the Lafayette during the week of June 10 in connection with the Marine Corp Enlistment Drive, was hurriedly transferred to the Tudor theater, where it received liberal patronage. Major Bracksrom of the Marine Corps rendered valuable assistance in stimulating attendance. It is not likely that the Lafayette will again be used as a motion picture theater. The magnificent New Strand is rapidly nearing completion and will probably open on July 4 under the management of the Saenger Amusement Company and other large interests are looking to other locations for permanent homes for their enterprises.

New Orleans, La.—There are from 3,000 to 5,000 soldiers at Camp Nicholls, adjacent to the City Park. Many of the Louisiana troops are sent here for training after enlistment. Camp life under war regulations is not as lenient as on parade occasions and it is only natural for a good many of the boys to desire some means of entertainment without having to obtain leave and spend their time in the city. To help Uncle Sam's soldiers enjoy their spare hours in camp, J. Eugene Pearce has donated the use of two fine Simplex machines and other equipment which was a part of the Lafayette theater outfit and a motion picture theater will be erected at the camp. The soldiers are delighted with the idea and they are singing—or more property speaking—shouting praises for Mr. Pearce. Not to leave the enterprise half done, Mr. Pearce conferred with the various exchange managers in New Orleans and nearly every one of them at once gladly agreed to supply the soldiers with film sufficient to make up a regular weekly program. No charge whatever will be made for this service, the sole object of every one connected with the enterprise being to make the boys in camp as happy as is possible. Manager Tuttle, of the K-E-S-E exchange, suggested that the boys charge a small admission fee and let the total receipts go into a canteen fund for the use of any who may be sick or to provide luxuries not furnished under the regulations. This suggestion will probably receive favorable action.

How Manager Sobel Makes Personality Help.

Nat Sobel.

New Orleans, La.—Nat Sobel, of the Sobel-Richards-Sheer Enterprises, operators of a chain of the best motion picture theaters in New Orleans, is a prince of good fellows and a successful manager. He gives his personal attention to the Washington theater, besides being actively connected with the other houses of the company in an advisory capacity. The Washington theater is one of the most substantial and most profitable among the suburban theaters and it has attained its present prominence under the guidance of Manager Sobel.

His method of cementing patronage to his house is simple, but concentrated. He makes himself a part of the neighborhood and takes a keen interest in the affairs of his neighbors. If a needy person gets sick that person is almost certain to have a benefit at the Washington theater. Besides that every school and orphanage in the vicinity of the Washington is down for a benefit in its regular order and usually Wednesdays are set aside for these enterprises. Early in June the Boys of St. Alphonsus Orphanage were made happy by the purchase of greatly needed dining room furniture. Since the storm of September the year before the boys have been having a hard time of it because a great deal of their equipment was destroyed, and notwithstanding a long time had elapsed, there have been so many calls for charitable purposes that the boys were overlooked. The King's Daughters annually give Manager Sobel a large birthday cake because of a big benefit which he had given them and he is constantly the recipient of tokens of esteem from the persons he has aided, not the least of these being a big bank account which his methods have accumulated.

L. Pennybacker Promoted.

New Orleans, La.—L. Pennybacker, who for over two years has been cashier in the local Mutual exchange, has been transferred to the Memphis, Tenn., branch by Manager Stephens and has the title of manager. The Memphis branch under the direction of Manager Stephens has steadily grown in importance and the business requires an effcient manager, which doubtless Mr. Pennybacker will prove himself to be. J. Palmer, who has been booking clerk in the Mutual exchange, has been promoted to cashier.

District Manager E. Auger Makes Short Visit.

New Orleans, La.—District Manager E. Auger, of the Eastern division of the Greater Vitagraph, made a short visit to New Orleans on June 10. He was formerly stationed here as exchange manager for the World and other corporations. He declared the necessity for a longer visit did not exist, as he found the affairs of the local Vitagraph exchange under the management of D. S. Holmes to be in excellent shape.

Efficiency Is the Word at New Orleans Vitagraph.

D. S. Holmes.

New Orleans, La.—Manager D. S. Holmes of the New Orleans Vitagraph exchange has been doing things since he took over the office a few weeks ago, relieving J. S. Stimson, who was transferred to the branch at San Antonio, Texas. Mr. Holmes attained his present position by hard work in the field for the Vitagraph Company. He was given the Arizona and New Mexico territory, where towns are small and a long distance apart, but in spite of these handicaps he was able to secure a place near to the top of the Vitagraph efficiency list, hence his promotion to the New Orleans managerial position.

Since taking charge of the office he has instilled a great measure of energy in the force and is getting practical results. Proficiency is the standard by which everything about the exchange is measured and the results are an attest to the correctness of the standard.

NOTES FROM KANSAS CITY.

Changes Among the Theaters.

Oswego, Kan.—H. H. Daniels is now the sole owner of the picture show, having purchased the interests of his partner, Neale Nafus.

Hill City, Kan.—Noe, Noe and Brown have bought the Star theater from Ira Campbell.

Stafford, Kan.—The Liberty theater was damaged recently by fire; the principal damage was the loss of films.

Jennings, Kan.—The opera house has been remodelled and is being used for moving pictures.

Waterville, Kan.—Fitzgerald and Burns have bought out the interest of Mr. Miller in the moving picture show.

Pineville, Mo.—An airdome has been erected and is now open to the public.

Clarkville, Tex.—Ross Rainey, owner of the Princess theater, has purchased the Mission theater from B. B. Butcher and Miss Lillie Butcher.

Fort Worth, Tex.—Work of erecting the home of the Crusader Film Co. has begun. The company was recently organized by Fort Worth business men and several blocks of land have been purchased. The capital of the company is $100,000.

El Paso, Tex.—W. K. Ziegfeld, a well-known theatrical motion picture producer and playwright, was here recently looking for a location for a film city. He annouunced he had $1,000,000 to spend to establish the organization.

D. O. Reese, manager of the Universal office, has returned from a flying trip through Southern Kansas and Missouri, in which territory he made a short review of the trade. Mr. Reese reports a wonderful business for the Universal.

The Pathe company announces a revival in the serial business, as many of their exhibitors are putting on two serials and a comedy on the same program, and find it very remunerative.

Film exchanges in Kansas City have been handicapped lately by poor railroad service due to the violent winds and high waters. Exhibitors have been unable to get new films or return old ones.

P. J. Swift to Manage Film—J. Hicks Goes With A. D. Thornton.

Kansas City, Mo.—P. J. Swift has been made manager of the General Film Company office at Kansas City. Mr. Swift has been with the General Film Company for two and a half years, coming here from Charlotte, North Carolina. He takes his new position on June 18, succeeding John Hicks. Mr. Hicks goes with A. D. Fullerton, president of the Kansas City Feature Film Company distributing Paramount and Art Craft features. Mr. Hicks has traveled in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Oklahoma, and is very well known throughout those states.

Theater at Carthage, Mo., Burns.

Carthage, Mo.—The Sho-to-wall theater at Carthage burnt out June 6, ruining machinery, equipment and the film "Neptune's Daughter." The building was also damaged. However, all of this did not deter A. S. Caukins, the manager, from giving a show that night. The fire occurred at 6.20 and at 7.10 Mr. Caukins had rented the Colonial theater across the street, not even waiting to have his burns dressed until he had closed the contract. The loss totaled about $1,800, of which $800 is covered by insurance. Mr. Caukins hopes to be back in the old place, which is being remodelled, by June 15.

Pathe Holds Sales Meeting June 18, 1917.

Kansas City, Mo.—Pathe recently held a sales meeting at Kansas City attended by C. S. Edwards, manager of the St. Louis office, George P. Meek, V. H. Hoddupp, Hugh Hemphill, Fred Pickrell, E. Poland, O. A. Bandy, Theodore Stover, S. S. Diamond, inspector auditor, and Andro Glostko. Plans were laid for the launching of the new Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring," and the company expects to do a large business as a result of this meeting.

D. E. Boswell Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. E. Boswell, who has traveled in Oklahoma and Arkansas for the Universal, has been promoted to branch manager of the St. Louis office.

Frank Gehring Now With Standard Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank Gehring has joined the Standard Film Corporation sales force. He will travel in Iowa out of the Des Moines office.

G. W. Hinton Will Work in Missouri for Standard.

Kansas City, Mo.—G. W. Hinton, formerly with the Universal, is now with the Standard Film Corporation. He will work in Missouri territory out of the Kansas City office.

Art Craft Office Moves to 2024 Broadway.

Kansas City, Mo.—Art Craft Film Corporation has moved to 2024-26 Broadway, which is also the new home for the Kansas City Feature Film Co.

Kansas Finds "Nation" Film Case Interesting

Recalled Picture Shown in Topeka June 15—Reasons for Censor's Recall—Legal Status of the Recall—Arrests in Topeka.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bld., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—"Birth of a Nation" has been shown in Kansas, under a permit issued by the board of motion picture review. Already, two days after the showing, there have been suits for injunction, applications for writs of mandamus, arrests and proceedings galore, which will doubtless test many phases of the new Kansas law on censorship.

Picture Shows in Topeka June 15.

The Kansas board approved the picture May 5; on May 9 the board recalled it for another review. H. W. Glickauff, representing the Sherman-Elliot Film Corporation of Minneapolis, objected to the recall, and sought injunction, which was denied. The picture was booked at the Grand opera house, Topeka, for Friday evening, June 15, and was shown to a packed house. On this same Friday, Attorney General Brewster sought an injunction in the Shawnee County District Court to restrain the distributor from presenting the film, alleging that the permit under which it was to be exhibited was illegal. The court could not hear the case that afternoon. The picture was shown Saturday afternoon and evening at the Grand, also to large crowds. The prices were 25 cents to $1 for matinee; 25 cents to $1.50 for night. On Saturday the injunction was denied.

Why Picture Was Recalled.

The board of review approved "Birth of a Nation" on May 5 because, it is said on good authority, it could not find in the law a basis for rejection of the picture. After the picture had been approved members of the board consulted attorneys; and they discovered that "immoral" applied to anything that was below the mark of virtue—neglect of the principles that stabilize civilization and keep society whole. It was seen that many incidents and sections of "Birth of a Nation" could be disapproved by the board under the law. Two members of the board felt sure that the picture should be rejected and when they found that they had reasons that could be backed by the law for its rejection, they ordered its recall for another examination. It so happened that there was no stenographer in the office of the board until Wednesday, May 9; and while the recall was made May 7, it was not issued until later. It is denied that there was any pressure from officials, or that politics had anything to do with the recall.

What the Censor's Recall Means.

The complications of legal proceedings are gradually making clearer the actual status of a picture under the Kansas law—and is revealing some of the weaknesses of the law.

For instance, the paragraph in the law with reference to recalling for further review, was understood, when the law was introduced, to bear chiefly on pictures that had been passed, were being shown in the state, but which were alleged to be shown without the eliminations ordered. The board had the right to recall such pictures, to see whether the copy as approved by the board, was that being circulated. The recall was also expected to affect the new advertising matter circulated with an approved picture from time to time. Under the "Birth of a Nation" case, the recall is made to apply to a picture that has been approved, and recalled before being shown at all.

If the recall was to affect only the new advertising, or was to affect only matter previously passed upon, distributors could book an approved picture far in advance without hesitancy. But if the recall is to jeopardize titles and pictures, no distributor could be sure that a permit to show would be any good a week or a month hence.

The recall was issued May 9, and the review was supposed to be had in 30 days. The picture has not yet been brought back for review, so that this is another offense which the state will charge against the distributor.

Topeka Exhibitors Arrested.

A minor incident of the Topeka showing June 16 was that the attorney general, S. M. Brewster, enlisted the aid of Robert Garver, county attroney of Shawnee county, Kan., in the vindication of the censor law. Garver got out warrants for the arrest of L. M. and Roy Crawford, owners of the Grand, on the charge of advertising a moving picture show that had not the approval of the state board. Both gave bond. The points involved are the same, of course, as in the Supreme Court proceedings for mandamus.

Went After Vice With a Butcher Knife.

Kansas City, Kan.—"The Little Girl Next Door" has again been before the Kansas board of review. It came back on recall, information having reached the board that eliminations ordered had not been made, and that improper advertising matter was accompanying the picture. The picture had smooth sailing, however, for the Rev. J. M. Porter, who is taking the picture through the state and lecturing with it, came in with the reels and refuted the alleged criticisms. It seems that another copy than that examined and amended by the Kansas board had been sent to Kansas. The original copy reviewed has been cleaned, and is now being sent out.

The matter of advertising came up in an amusing way. The picture had been sent to Emporia, Kansas. When the Rev. Mr. Porter reached Emporia, he found the town placarded with flaming posters, on which the most flaming element was the word "Vice." He got him a butcher knife, a wad of white paper and a can of paste and went over the town cutting out the objectionable word, or pasting white paper over it when the poster stuck too closely to the fence for amputation. William Allen White, editor of the Emporia Gazette—one of the most noted editors in the West—jollied Mr. Porter about the incident in his paper, and the whole town laughed good naturedly—and went to see the picture.

The state board ordered new literature, which is now supplied for the Kansas exhibitions.

Censor Board Won't Pass "Easiest Way."

Kansas City, Kan.—J. C. Fox, proprietor of the Holland theater, Wichita, made a trip to Kansas City, Kansas, this week, to find out whether the exhibitors were to be considered in the operation of the censor law, and whether there was any way to get pictures back before the board after they had been rejected. Mr Fox explained to the board that he had paid his money for certain pictures which have been rejected; that the company selling him the pictures is ready to give him another in the place of that rejected, but has not released any more which he can get.

This case is one of many developing in Kansas. One of the specific cases is that of "The Easiest Way." It has been rejected, and the board is not inclined to call it back for another review. The exhibitors want it and they are exerting their influence to persuade the board to review it again and let some, at least, of it go through. The board is inclined to pass any picture if possible, even though sharp cuts have to be made, but they do not see their way clear to act thus on "The Easiest Way."

Dallas-Paramount-Artcraft Gets Started

Combination Offices Are at 1902 Commerce Street—H. M. Owens Is Manager and Hoyt G. Morrow, Sales Manager—The Consolidated Road Staff.

By Kent Watson, Newspaper Club, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—The Paramount and Artcraft pictures corporations have consolidated their exchanges in Dallas, the Artcraft office being moved from the former offices at 1919 Main street to the Paramount offices at 1902 Commerce street, immediately in the heart of "film row."

H. M. Owens, manager of Paramount, assumes the management of the consolidated organization, and Hoyt G. Morrow, not to his sorrow, becomes sales manager of the extra working force.

The road sales force is now composed of the following capable and amiable partisans:

W. H. Godbey, former assistant manager of Artcraft, "making" northwest Texas; L. A. Martin, former Artcraft booking manager, "making" southwest Texas; L. E. Herrington, "making" east Texas; A. B. Doctoroff, formerly with Metro and known wherever pictures are shown in Texas, "making" Arkansas.

H. E. Fulgram Assistant Booker for Vitagraph.

H. E. Fulgham, formerly of the Vitagraph road force, is now in the office of the company, having been assigned the duties of assisting with the bookings.

Men Who Make Vitagraph Road Force.

J. L. McKinney, O. V. Randal, G. W. Thorton, Jack Petit, Robert Vernon, now constitute the Vitagraph road force. Mr. Petit formerly was with the Peirce-Fordyce Oil Association, with whom he gained the reputation of star district salesman. Mr. Vernon, formerly with the G. P. Wharton company selling school books, enjoys the reputation of being able to sell anything.

War and Hot Weather Have Not Hurt Business.

Dalas, Texas.—The war and hot weather are having very little success in causing the usual slump in the film rental business in this state, according to the unanimous reports of exchange managers here, all of whom tell stories of unprecedented bookings.

"Paramount and Artcraft pictures," stated Hoyt G. Morrow, sales manager for the newly consolidated Artcraft and Paramount exchanges, "are now enjoying heavier bookings than ever. Exhibitors from every section of the state frequently visit Dallas for the purpose of signing a contract for our entire output. We have more men on the road now, due to the insistent call from the four corners of the state for our pictures."

J. B. Dugger, who has for some time successfully piloted Vitagraph pictures as manager of that respective exchange, sums things up in about the same manner:

"There is absolutely no question about the matter," says Mr. Dugger. "Vitagraph today is furnishing more exhibitors in Texas than ever before in history."

Notes of the Trade in Texas.

Jeff Hendon and family are spending a week in Shreveport, La., the trip having been made in an automobile. Mr. Hendon is booking clerk for Paramount-Artcraft.

Tom Gaines, manager of the Best theater at Hillsboro, Texas, numbered among those who signed contracts for Artcraft-Paramount productions this week.

Stewart brothers, of the Dreamland theater, Denton, Texas, and J. F. Green, of the Yale at Cleburne, did likewise.

Mrs. Woods, manager of the Topic theater, Sherman, Texas, and Jim Wolson of the Gem at Sherman were visitors in Dallas this week.

George F. Cooper, general auditor for the Vitagraph company, is a visitor in Dallas from New York.

H. D. Naugle, western division manager for Vitagraph, will arrive in Dallas on the 25th to attend the meeting of the Dallas Vitagraph sales convention, at which J. B. Dugger will be the principal speaker.

T. E. Hervy, manager of the Unique theater at El Paso, Texas, spent a few days in Dallas with "film friends" this week, en route to his old home in Indiana.

Theodore Polmakos, Crown theater, Houston, Texas, and Miss Edith Johnson, owner of the Liberty and Key theaters at Houston, visited Dallas this week.

T. M. Alexander has purchased the Elks theater at Marshall, Texas, according to information reaching local film circles. T. G. Clawson, from whom the purchase was made, will retire from the theater business.

Ben S. Myer, the well-known Queen manager from Tyler, Texas, spent a day in Dallas this week. Mr. Myer states that it doesn't take him more than a day to decide what he wants. He booked "Womanhood" from Vitagraph.

THEATER CHANGES AND EXHIBITORS.

By Kansas City News Service.

Sherman, Tex.—F. R. Crosby of Omaha has bought the Lyric theater from Miss Beattie Fairchild and has taken charge. He will remodel the theater.

Hugo, Okla.—R. F. Barrett has taken over the airdome for the summer.

Tulsa, Okla.—Howard T. Tucker, vice-president of the Tucker Bros. Amusement Co., which purchased the Overholser theater in Oklahoma City for $130,000, has secured an option for a five, ten or twenty-year lease on the lot and building occupied at present by the Tulsa post-office. He will be given possession July fourth, when the post-office moves to the new building.

Harry Leonhart, general Western representative for Fox Film, was a visitor at the Kansas City office on June 18. Mr. Leonhart was accompanied by his wife.

Iowa Blue Law Menace Not Yet Downed

Theater Managers Threatened With Arrest and Sentence for Open Houses on Sunday, June 17—Managers Not Worrying Over It.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—When the film men of Iowa were just beginning to feel that the Sunday closing scare was all settled, Attorney General Havner ordered the theaters closed on Sunday, the 10th of June, by arresting several of the managers about three o'clock. The following week none of the arrested managers were brought to trial, and on Saturday night before the 17th, Havner issued the edict that Sunday, the 17th, everything must close and that any theater manager opening his house will be arrested and held without bail until trial. In spite of the warning, every theater in the state, except those in the towns where public sentiment has closed the theaters for years, is at this writing planning to open.

After the decision of Judge Myers three weeks ago reports have been coming in to the effect that theaters over the state that had never thought of running before on Sunday, had opened on the strength of Myer's decision. This new development of his rigid enforcement of the laws has angered Havner to the point that he is well nigh desperate and now he comes out with the statement that all parties found conspiring to evade the Sunday closing would be arrested and sentenced to not less than three years in jail. Havner's threats did not frighten the Des Moines film men, who have arranged to carry the fight into the higher courts through the one adverse decision that Judge Meyers made in the first five test cases. The theater men and their attorneys feel most optimistic over the Blue Law fight since they have several high cards up their sleeves to spring on Havner if he begins to get nasty. At any rate, the Sunday closing in Iowa is not a settled question by any means.

Military Camp Means Much to Des Moines Exhibitors.

Des Moines, Ia.—When Des Moines was chosen for the site of the military training camp for the states of Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota and Minnesota, the exhibitors of Des Moines pricked up their ears at the prospect of some 35,000 prospective patrons, in the drafted training army. There is no question but what the camp will mean big business for the Des Moines motion picture houses because the soldiers, while not blessed with an abundance of money, will be apt to choose the film as their best recreation when not on duty.

Majestic Theater Changes Policy.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Majestic theater changes its policy of longer runs and bigger features the week of Sunday, the 17th, when they begin to show their programs two and three days. On the first three days they have chosen the William Fox pictures. The middle of the week will be devoted to the Butterfly pictures, starting with "The Flame of Youth," and the latter part of the week the Art Dramas will make their bow to the down town district. The Art Dramas have been showing in the suburban houses prior to this time.

Theater Changes Over the State.

Bagley, Ia.—Chas. Owens has rented the Past Time theater in Bagley from J. L. Young. Mr. Young has moved to Sioux City, where he will continue his dental practice.

Coon Rapids, Ia.—C. E. Smith has traded his Lyric theater in Coon Rapids for land in Texas. J. J. Conway is the new owner of the Lyric.

P. L. Ryan, of Art Dramas, Opens New Selling Plan.

Des Moines, Ia.—Phil. L. Ryan, sales manager of the Standard Film Company, is taking care of the Des Moines branch of the Standard while Marty Williams, local manager, is confined at home recovering from a minor operation. Mr. Ryan is opening a new campaign in the selling of Art Dramas in Iowa, the details of which are interesting.

It is no secret that in Iowa the small town exhibitor with few exceptions is making little or no profit. Mr. Ryan is doing something to enable the small town exhibitor to get pictures while new at a rate that will enable him to live and make at least a fair salary.

Mr. Ryan brought three more men to the Des Moines selling force last week and with six prints of each picture is arranging a schedule whereby the pictures may be shown in six different places over the state on the same night, and probably at six different prices. It is the purpose of Mr. Ryan to arrange to show the Art Dramas in such a manner that the exhibitor as well as the Standard Film Company will make money. Where he knows a theater can pay, it must pay, and where the exhibitor can pay but five dollars, five dollars is the price.

In the try-out last week, when the three extra salesmen were put on the job, the Art Dramas opened 60 accounts and showed pictures less than six weeks old in many towns less than 500 in population, the same picture that is now running in Chicago in many of the larger houses.

New Organization Files Articles

Northern California Exhibitors' and Exchange Men's Body Has Been Incorporated—Officers Who Were Chosen at the First Meeting Are L. Reichert, President; E. Roth, Vice President; M. L. Markowitz, Treasurer, and N. Eisner, Secretary.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The new organization of film exchange men and exhibitors, recently launched here, is now an established fact and articles of incorporation of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California have been filed, the incorporators being Eugene Roth, Howard J. Sheehan, E. Bruce Johnson, Herman Webber, Louis Reichert and W. O. Edmonds. A special meeting of the new body was held on Monday, June 11, at Tait's Cafe, when the final details of the organization were arranged and officers chosen. These are as follows. President, Louis Reichert, manager of the local Metro branch; vice-president, Eugene Roth, manager of the Portola theater; treasurer, Morris L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film Exchange; secretary and attorney, Norman A. Eisner. The directors comprise the list of those who are set down as the incorporators of this non-profit company.

The special meeting was called primarily to receive the reports of members on the success that had been attained in securing subscriptions to the Liberty Loan, and more than $6,000 was subscribed at the gathering. Many of the large firms had already purchased bonds, and this sum represented additions to original purchases and the subscriptions of employes in the various theaters and film exchanges. The members of the new organization are proud of the fact that the first matter that received their attention was that of the Liberty Loan, and they feel that through the enthusiasm aroused at its meetings the subscription on the part of the moving picture industry was materially increased.

Mary Pickford Helped Sell Bonds.

San Francisco, Cal.—Mary Pickford, who has been working for some time in the Livermore valley near here on a forthcoming Artcraft production, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," was the magnet at a huge mass meeting held on the evening of June 13 at the Exposition Auditorium to secure subscriptions to the Liberty Loan. Fourteen thousand people crowded this great public meeting place to speak the determination of San Francisco to take its allotted share of the loan and to see the celebrated screen star. Before the evening was over one million dollars had been subscribed, and all who wished to make pledges could not be accommodated. The appeals of Little Mary for subscriptions brought such a rush that the officers could not cope with the crowd and reinforcements were necessary. The screen star and her mother were accompanied by C. Mel Simmonds, who has had charge of the local Artcraft office since its opening, and it was with great difficulty that he managed, with the assistance of the police, to get them out of the auditorium to their automobile. During her stay in this vicinity Miss Pickford has appeared several times at some of the leading theaters, including the T. & D. theater at San Jose, the Garden City.

Goldwyn Exchange Opened Soon.

San Francisco, Cal. — An exchange for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will be opened shortly on the fifth floor of the Easton building, adjoining the Greater Vitagraph, and this will be in charge of C. Mel Simmonds, who until a few days ago was manager of the local Artcraft office. About twenty-one hundred square feet of space has been secured, and the new quarters will be made ready for occupancy as quickly as possible. The territory to be covered from this branch will include all of California north of Bakersfield, Nevada and a portion of Oregon most easily reached from San Francisco. Mr. Simmonds is well known here through the work he did for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation and the introductory work done for the Triangle.

Progressive and Artcraft Offices to Amalgamate.

San Francisco, Cal.—The offices of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation in the Pacific Coast territory are to be merged shortly with those of the Progressive Motion Picture Company under the management of Herman Wobber. Work is now under way enlarging the local offices of the latter concern in the Phelan building, and within a short time the change will be in effect here and in the offices at Seattle and Los Angeles. Arthur S. Kane, who has been in charge of the Artcraft interests on the Pacific Coast since the organization of the concern, has been called to New York to accept a position with the home office and will leave shortly. H G. Rosebaum, formerly in charge of the Seattle Artcraft office, but more recently of Philadelphia, has returned to the Pacific Coast and was here recently on his way to Seattle to take charge of the combined Progressive and Artcraft offices.

Many Film Stars in Town.

San Francisco, Cal.—During the past week a number of film stars have been in town and others are coming as several companies are preparing to spend the summer in this vicinity. Geraldine Farrar and Lou-Tellegen were here recently and visited the Strand theater to see Douglas Fairbanks in a return engagement of "In Again, Out Again." Charles Chaplin spent a short time here, Baby Marie Osborne has been giving the city of Saint Francis the once over, while Mary Pickford has lent her presence as an aid in the Liberty Loan campaign. Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, has also been here with William de Mille.

War Films Draw at Tivoli.

San Francisco, Cal.—The official British war films shown at the Tivoli theater have created a veritable sensation and a capacity business marked the opening week. William R. McGarry, an author, globe trotter and military officer, appeared on the stage during the presentation of the pictures and told patrons just what the pictures represented, explaining what the British activities in Northern France really mean. The members of the Newspapermen's Club were the guests of the Tivoli management one evening during the week and the pictures were shown to the members of the San Francisco Ad Club at the Palace Hotel one afternoon.

Carbons Arrive in Carload Lots.

San Francisco, Cal.—A full car of Speer carbons has been received by G. A. Metcalfe, this being the first time, it is believed, that such a shipment has ever been brought into this territory. The heavy demand for carbons, coupled with the possibility of a car shortage later in the season and a shortage of goods, led to the placing of this big order. Sales of machines have shown an improvement of late, a Powers 6A having been sold to the Bijou theater, Visalia, Cal.; another to the Mare Island Navy Yard, while equipment has been furnished to the new U. C. theater at Berkeley, Cal.

Portland, Ore., Coming Back as Film Center

Once Shied at by Exchanges, the Rose City Is Again Looked Upon With Favor—Several Producers Plan Portland Agencies.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Portland is coming back as a film distributing center. After about two years of quietness from an exchange standpoint, due to censorship among other things, the Rose City is making another start toward becoming a film distributing center in the Pacific Northwest to which position it is entitled by reason of its central location in the territory.

The combined Artcraft-Paramount agency has been seeking a suitable exchange location here, and has advertised for a building site in the film exchange district in the neighborhood of Ninth and Davis streets, the present location of the Mutual and Universal exchanges.

H. G. Rosebaum, the new manager for the combined agencies, was in Portland looking over the field preparatory to selecting a definite location. Mr. Rosebaum was en route from Philadelphia to Seattle.

Marion H. Kohn, well known feature man from California, was a recent visitor in Portland, also looking over the field, contemplating opening an office here.

Oregon for Motion Picture Locations.

Portland, Oregon.—From the recent indications it is apparent that Oregon's wonderful scenery will soon be properly capitalized by moving picture producing companies. The World Film Corporation has had several location men in the territory of late, and reports are most favorable to the World Corporation sending several companies to Oregon this summer. It is intimated that Alice Brady will make three pictures here, also that Ethel Clayton will be featured with Oregon scenery as a background.

J. A. Koerpel, Northwest manager for World, recently reported that his company's location men were much impressed with the scenery in the Greater Lake country, also with the Columbia River Highway.

New Enterprises in Weiser, Idaho.

Weiser, Idaho.—A. C. Gordon, who now conducts the Star theater, is completing his new showhouse which will seat 500. The new theater is located in a brick and concrete building owned by Mr. Gordon. A big stage is being provided and entirely new equipment installed. Mr. Gordon plans to close the Star and remodel it into a store.

Just across a short bridge from Weiser is located the Oregon Trail Park, where Frank Morterman opened his new airdome a few weeks ago. The site is across the Oregon boundary line and is on a wooded island in the Snake River. The airdome is of concrete.

B. J. Sperry, representing the General Film Company, was in this territory and reports good business in Idaho and Eastern Oregon.

Edwin F. James in Montana.

Portland, Oregon.—The boys on Film Row report that Edwin F. James, former owner of the Majestic theater and of James' Broadway, is now in Montana.

W. M. Rogers, former assistant to Mr. James in his Portland enterprises, is in the United States aerial corps at San Antonio, Texas, where he is training to become a pilot, a commission which carries the rank of first lieutenant.

New Theater for Flavel.

Flavel, Oregon.—A new motion picture house will be opened about July 1 by C. L. Lynch. Mr. Lynch is erecting a new building to house his theater. The population of Flavel has increased considerably since the coming of shipyards into the town, 1,500 men being employed in this industry alone.

Oregon Summer Resorts Opening.

Portland, Oregon.—B. J. Callahan, Strand theater, Seaside, Oregon, was a recent visitor here and reports the summer season at the beach resorts is slow in opening. The Strand has opened for the season now, however, and prospects for good business are in sight.

L. H. Evans, of the Royal theater, Newport, Oregon, was also a recent visitor, arranging service for his Yaquina Beach theaters.

Rose Festival Film Doings.

Portland, Oregon.—The Annual Rose Festival brought into the city Dick Charles, of Vader, Wash.; L. H. Evans, Newport, Oregon; George Bligh, Salem; Fred Park, Molalla, and J. B. Johnson, Amity, among the exhibitors, also a number of exchange men.

The photographing of the events was done by Jesse J. Sill, whose pictures were shown at the Columbia theater; H. H. Brownell, for Universal, and W. A. Van Scoy for Hearst-Pathe.

Contrary to the case in preceding festivals, the downtown exhibitors enjoyed good business owing to the absence of evening parades. Suburban theaters suffered as usual, however, owing to the crowds going downtown.

Heilig's Picture Policies.

Portland, Oregon.—William Pangle, manager of the Heilig, announces that the summer policy of the big "legit" theater will be big photoplay features interspersed with first class road shows. Mr Pangle says that high prices will be maintained for all photoplay productions. The Heilig recently signed up for K. & E. and Shubert attractions for five years.

One of the big features recently shown at the Heilig was Clune's "Eyes of the World," which ran two weeks at advanced prices.

Brief Oregon Items.

Pendleton.—Guy Matlock is now a happy papa.

St. Helens.—H. O. Strom has postponed the construction of his new theater until business conditions are more settled.

Athena.—Lester Martin has sold the Peoples theater to F. E. Alderman.

Halfway.—A. W. Parker has reopened the Electric theater.

Bend.—Louis Doonar has sold his interest in the Bend theater to Ward Coble, his partner.

Portland.—W. A. Van Scoy spent several weeks with the government foresters on the coast photographing the government replanting of trees in burnt-over areas.

Robert C. Bruce, of the Educational Films Corporation, has been on a photographing tour in the Mt. St. Helens country, Jesse G. Sill being his cameraman.

Film Notes from Spokane

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Ruth McCord Expected on July 8.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Ruth McCord, the Triangle-Ince girl who is touring the United States on a motorcycle, unaccompanied, as a publicity stunt for the Ince moving picture productions, is due to reach Spokane July 8. She will rest here for a day. Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater has been notified that Miss McCord will appear at that photoplay house.

Miss McCord left San Diego May 13. The first three months of her trip will be spent in visiting Bakersfield, Fresno, San Jose, San Francisco, Stockton, Sacramento, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Butte, Pocatello, Ogden, Salt Lake and Denver. From Denver she will go east to Chicago and New York.

Bill Hart Arrives in Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—Big "Bill" Hart, six feet four inches tall, screen idol and impersonator of the western bad man de luxe, is dog tired, his nerves are worn to a thin shred and he is ready for a sanatorium, according to his own admission. In spite of that, he dropped from a Milwaukee train the morning of June 5, shook hands with a dozen girls who surrounded him as soon as he stepped on the platform, met several newspapermen, spoke twice at the Liberty theater and once at the flag-raising, attended a dinner party in his honor, contested with policemen on their target range and caught a late train for the coast at night.

"Intolerance" Comes Back at Reduced Prices.

Spokane, Wash. — "Intolerance," the huge film spectacle that was shown at the Auditorium last winter, will play a return engagement there the week of June 24, Manager Charles York announced. The picture will be shown as it was before with the orchestral accompaniment and chorus, but prices will be somewhat reduced from the scale that prevailed on the former occasion.

"Intolerance" is admittedly the most spectacular motion picture production ever accomplished and it aroused keen interest when shown here before, as it did wherever it was presented.

Thousands Turned Away from "Barrier"

Spokane, Wash.—Six thousand people saw "The Barrier" at the Clemmer theater Sunday, June 10, and 3,000 were turned away, according to the estimate of Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager. This sets a Sunday record for the theater. Five shows were given during the day, beginning at 1 o'clock, and capacity houses were the order at each, with fully 300 people standing in the foyer at each performance.

New Co-operative Assn. for Renting Film

KILDEER, N. D.—A co-operative association for the renting of films has been organized by exhibitors of the north branch of the Northern Pacific. A. B. Currie of Kildeer has been elected treasurer, and Messrs. McFadden of Kildeer, McDaniels of Golden Valley and Sovereign of Beulah are directors.

Theater Changes in Dakota.

Pingree, N. D.—J. W. Foster has opened a moving picture theater and will give exhibitions every Saturday night.

Harvey, N. D.—Rev. V. P. Welch has purchased a moving picture machine for use in church work. Some of the films which he has used are the "Passion Play" and "The Last Days of Pompeii."

Sioux Falls, S. D.—The Princess theater had the G. A. R., W. R. C., the National Guard, Boy Scouts and other patriotic organizations as its guests at a special matinee of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."

Sharon, N. D.—Free moving picture shows were a feature of Market Day held by the Sharon Commercial club.

Grand Forks, N. D.—The Grand theater has adopted a new policy for the summer, using pictures exclusively on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and vaudeville and films the last three days of the week. A change will be made on Wednesday.

Claims to Be Youngest Picture Show Manager.

Omaha, Neb.—Oscar B. Rohlff, who recently opened the Rohlff theater at Twenty-sixth and Leavenworth streets, has the distinction of being the youngest moving picture manager in the city. He is but 22 years old.

Notes From Across Nebraska.

Cambridge, Neb.—The moving picture theater owned by P. N. LeDou was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $1,000.

Aurora, Neb.—J. P. Chapman has leased the Airdome to F. M. Mitchell, proprietor of the Mickelson theater, and will operate it this summer.

York, Neb.—E. B. Woods is erecting a moving picture theater seating 650. It is part of a business building, the entire structure costing $26,000.

Florence, Neb.—The Florence theater superseded the Rex, which has been leased by Fred Bitney and Lewis Nathan Palmer, Neb.—Leffelbein & Beyer have sold the Pastime theater to Charles Griffith.

La Crosse Theaters Return to 5 and 10 Cents.

LA CROSSE, WIS.—Five local houses which raised their admission prices some time ago have returned to the old admission of 5 and 10 cents.

Majestic Begins a New Policy.

La Crosse, Wis.—Four changes of program a week is the plan of the Majestic theater for the summer. New bills will be started on Sundays, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Wisconsin Defense League Makes Patriotic Film.

Green Bay, Wis.—The Grand theater had a two days' showing of an unusual and timely film made under the auspices of the Brown County branch of the Wisconsin Defense League. It showed officers in training at Fort Sheridan, the local batteries B. and E. in action, the local registration day parade and children of Green Bay working on vacant lot gardens. It was shown at 25 and 50 cents, and special matinees for children at a dime. The proceeds were turned over to the mess fund of the local batteries.

Interesting Theater Changes Through Wisconsin.

Stevens Point, Wis.—Manager Russell Gregory has closed the Gem theater for a month while he will make a 35-foot addition, install a new heating and ventilating system, redecorate and put in a new front. The change will increase the seating capacity to more than 500. While the alterations are in progress the shows will be given in the Ideal theater on Main street.

Hartford, Wis.—Arthur Klug has sold his lease on the Crystal moving picture theater to the management of the Hartford Opera house and probably will enter the lumber business at Billings, Mont.

Merrill, Wis.—Hales brothers have purchased the Majestic theater from A. C. Johnson, who operated it for three years.

Wewaunee, Wis.—The Palace Theater company has opened the Palace theater.

Superior, Wis.—Joseph E. Wardman has closed the Parlor theater, which he operated for several years.

Lancaster, Wis.—Clifford Taft has leased the Grand theater to Donald Dyer and Virgil Angus. They will operate the show nightly with a Paramount and Artcraft program.

Vancouver Exhibitors Face Double Problem

Decide to Run Summer Shows for Employes' Sake and Have Lottery Prizes at the Big Orpheum Drawing Most of the Summer Patronage.

By Chas. Thomson, 645 Burrard St., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—After going more deeply into the matter of abolishing the matinee during the summer months, the exhibitors of Vancouver have decided to abandon their intention of keeping the theaters closed until 5 p. m. For the sake of the many operators and musicians who would have been thrown out of employment and the numerous other employees who would have been compelled to work on reduced pay, the managers have recalled the notices that had already been served on those concerned. For a few days there was no small excitement and perturbation among the theatrical workers of the city, but now all is calm and peaceful once more, that is, as far as the employees are concerned.

The exhibitors themselves are still considerably troubled over the excessive competition of the Orpheum where the weekly distribution of money prizes continues to attract overflowing crowds at the expense of the other theaters. When it is considered that the Orpheum has double the seating capacity of any picture house in the city it will be realized what such competition must mean in this slack season of the year. The exhibitors are somewhat [illegible] to start a fight against the Orpheum by using the latter's own methods, on account of the fact that in this province lotteries, sweepstakes and similar schemes are strictly illegal.

Last year, as a business-getter, some of the theaters started giving weekly prizes, but the civic authorities stepped in and put a stop to the proceedings on account of its illegality. The reason that the Orpheum has been able to get away with it in the present instance is because Mr. Con Jones is devoting the profits to charitable objects, and the Mayor of Vancouver is lending his name to the project. Last week, when several operators seemed about to lose their jobs, the local union approached the Trade and Labor Council to see if some action could not be taken to put a stop to the methods of the Orpheum. On that occasion, President McVeety stated to the operators that the matter was entirely up to the other exhibitors. If prize giving were against the laws of the province, the fact that the mayor had lent his name to the scheme made no difference, and if the exhibitors felt that they had legal cause for complaint it was up to them to take proceedings against Mr. Con Jones and Mayor McBeath. The Association of Exhibitors has had several meetings to thrash the matter out, but up to the present moment no definite course of action has been decided on.

Government Asked to Postpone Ticket Tax Till Fall.

Vancouver, B. C.—Though the war tax on theater tickets has passed its final reading in the Provincial Parliament and thereby become law, it has not yet been put into active operation. The exhibitors have written a joint letter to Provincial Censor C. L. Gordon, whose department, it is understood, will have the supervision of the collection of the tax, and have requested him to approach the Government with a view to having the tax put into force in the middle of September, when the hot weather and other unfavorable conditions affecting the theatrical world will have passed away. It hs also been suggested that the Government should supply each theater with a ticket chopper, to facilitate the collection of the tax and to ensure the destruction of each tax ticket when used. A further suggestion has likewise been made that as the collection of the tax is to be entrusted entirely to the exhibitors themselves, the latter should receive ten per cent. of the total amount collected, as a remuneration for their services in this direction. The Government's answer to these suggestions, when Parliament reassembles in August, will be anxiously awaited by all concerned.

Railroad Strike Upsets Picture Business.

Vancouver, B. C.—As a result of the strike on the B. C. Electric Railway, which has completely tied up the street car system of Vancouver and surroundings, the suburban theaters are reaping a rich harvest of business. Even the theaters not very far from the center of the city feel the difference. Manager Gow at the Broadway, Mr. Fairleigh at the Progress and Mr. Dawson at the Kitsilano have their hands full dealing with the crowds that are flocking to their doors. Though these gentlemen are not the ones to rejoice over the misfortunes of others, they and the many other suburban exhibitors must be inwardly hoping that the strike will not be settled too soon. On the other hand, business has shown a proportionate decrease at the down town theaters, whose managers are naturally hoping that the strike will be over twice as soon as possible. It may be quite a period before the matter is settled though, as trouble has been brewing for a long time. What may make matters considerably worse as far as the theaters are concerned is the fact that unless the street railway employees get their demands, the workers at the light and power plant have threatened to go out also in sympathy with their brother workers. If such a thing happens it will, of course, mean that all the picture houses will have to close down until the matter is settled. The entire electric energy of Vancouver is made and supplied by the B. C. Electric Company, and when their supply fails, either through a strike or any other cause, there is no other source from which light or power can be obtained.

Of course, everything is being done to avoid such a calamity, and all are hoping that the strike will be settled before the light-makers go out, too. In the meantime, it is "an ill wind that bodes nobody any good" and the jitney drivers and previously mentioned suburban exhibitors are doing a great business.

Colonial Theater's Beautiful Flower Display.

Vancouver, B. C.—Hector Quagliotti, of the Colonial, recently adorned the foyer and lobby of his theater with some beautiful tropical palms and a tree of margarites. The latter has expanded until it now bears hundreds of blossoms, which, are the admiration of all who pass by. Someone suggested to the genial "Quag" that as prizes and lotteries are now the order of the day, he should give a handsome present to the visitor who makes the best guess as to the number of blossoms on the tree. After giving the matter much weighty consideration, Mr. Quagliotti finally decided that as such a scheme might fill his lobby with small boys and old women trying to make a count of the blossoms before coming in, the disadvantages would be greater than the advantages. Hence the suggestion was discarded.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Simplex

When We Designed the Simplex

we reasoned that outside gears were exposed to dust and dirt, and that the Operator was exposed to injury by the gears: bad both ways.

So we built the Simplex like a watch: with the gears on the inside.

And when we had shown the way, others (give 'em credit for that) recognized the wisdom of such design, and followed our lead.

In a way, we don't mind that imitation. It's the sincerest form of flattery.

But YOU understand, of course, that nobody can make a Simplex out of another Machine by enclosing the mechanism any more than you can make a bulldog out of a mongrel by clipping his ears.

No, Simplex means more than Enclosed Mechanism.

It means

Simplex Design, Simplex Quality, Simplex PROJECTION.

Only a Simplex Distributor can help you to Simplex Projection. See one; or let us mail you Catalog "A."

Simplex is such a Simple Name—but what a Lot it Means on the Screen!

SPARKLE COMEDIES.

A RIDE FOR LIFE (One Reel Pokes and Jabs Comedy).—Pokes and Jabs work in a grocery store. Jabs is in the delivery system and practices trick riding on his bike. About a year later Pokes, with Ethel, the belle of the town, takes in the sights of a traveling street fair. One show feature "Daredevil Jabs," and Ethel recognizes her old suitor as the daredevil trick rider.

Pokes is jealous of the acclaim won by the feats of his rival, and undertakes to duplicate anything done by Jabs. His attempt at a "daredevil dive" on the wheel is made unhappy by Jabs who cuts the guy wires of the platform. After a tumble Pokes tries it again, gritting his teeth at the sight of Ethel spooning with Jabs. He mounts the wheel and starts down the steep runway to terra firma. He goes at such a velocity that he plunges far over the tank of water set to receive him, and his bicycle commences to act like an aeroplane. He soars over fields, woods and towns. The last seen of him is far out at sea pedalling zealously into the horizon.

MILITARY MADNESS (One Reel Pokes and Jabs—Comedy)—Pokes conducts a clothing store but business is dull, Jabs come by. Showing Pokes the war news in the day's paper, Jabs suggests that he (Pokes) lay in a profitable stock of munitions. Pokes is further inspired by conscripts full of the war spirit coming to him to ask for uniforms. He lays in a supply and business becomes brisk. Suddenly Pokes is called to the front as their commanding officer.

In many thrilling skirmishes at the front Pokes is singled out by the enemy. A new invention, a chasing bomb overtakes Pokes, and blows him into the enemy's camp, where he fights a hand to hand battle with the champion of the foe. His troops, witnessing the conflict from afar, decide to rescue him.

A lasso is thrown to snare the foe, but Pokes is caught instead and dragged over rock and rill—until he awakes and finds Jabs pulling his necktie to rouse him to another war bulletin. Pokes, after his dream, is through with war, and decides that Sherman was right.

SELIG WORLD LIBRARY NO. 6.

Washington's Boyhood.—George Washington at the age of 16 surveyed the town of Alexandria, Va. This is King Street, main thoroughfare. Washington was chosen one of the first Vestrymen of Christ Church. This is the church.

The Historic Hotel. The City Hotel of Alexandria, Va., was Washington's headquarters and was the scene of the first celebration of the 22nd of February, Washington's birthday. The Father of his Country made his farewell address to the Continental army from the steps of this old structure.

Carlyle House.—Carlyle House was built at Alexandria, Va., in the year 1745 and it was here that Washington received his commission as Major in the British army. Many were imprisoned during the French and Indian wars in the dungeon of Carlyle House.

Human Figures on a Chess Board.—Here is an exhibition game of chess, played by human beings on a board made twenty-four feet square. Grand march of the chessmen.

Where Uncle Sam Mints His Money.—Uncle Sam is the richest individual in the world. Here is where he turns gold into legal tender. Gold bullion worth $2,000,000. A handful of gold-pieces. A practical method of counting money.

Home of the Seal.—Thousands of seals, during the mating season frequent the islands of the Pacific. Some of the youngsters.

THE RIGHT OF MIGHT (Two Parts).—The cast: Mary Smith (Alice Edwards); John Willis (Charles Schauten); David Lawrence (Harold Benedict). Written and directed by George Barber.

Some people go through life believing that "Right is Might," that power and riches are the essentialities in this world. However, John Willis, wealthy and powerful, learned that the battle is not always to the strong.

Willis refused to place safety devices in his extensive industrial plants. John Willis could not sway Mary Smith by influence or riches. He loved her but she informed him that he could not buy his way into grace and that he must learn to know that the power of riches is not everything in this world. John Willis only laughed, but Mary Smith began to tell him a story.

She told of a father and his young daughter made idle through the Willis lockout, how matters went from bad to worse and finally the old man suffered a breakdown from privation and the girl rendered desperate by want, married a man who was a crook and a gangster. She did this solely to secure money that she might take home to her parents, but when she took this money home her mother refused to believe that she had been married, would not listen to any explanation and ordered her from the house.

Finally the girl's sweetheart returned after a long hunt for work. Searching for the girl he found that she had married the gangster. She urged him to leave the house for her husband might return and might kill him. The husband did return and the girl and her former sweetheart trying to escape, fell from a second story window to their death.

After Mary Smith had finished her story, realization came to John Willis that it was the evil power of his money, his slogan "Right is Might," that had caused deaths and other troubling occurrences. He resolved to install the safety devices in his mills and reopen them.

IN THE TALONS OF AN EAGLE.—The cast: Carl Venger (Chas. Wheelock); James Steel (Lafayette McKee); John Zimmerman (Walter Hatfield); James Steel, Jr. (P. McCullough); Hilda (Edith Johnson). Written by Gilson Willets. Directed by F. J. Grandon.

Carl Venger, employed on the country place of James Steel, a rich bachelor, asks his sweetheart, Hilda, the blacksmith's daughter, to marry him. Steel, however, tempts the girl with promises of luxury and she marries him although she does not love him.

Venger, half-crazed with the shock, becomes a hermit, while Steel and Hilda, his wife, are apparently happy on their country place with their infant son.

One day the little one left alone in the garden becomes the prey of a gigantic eagle which swoops down upon the baby carriage, carries away the infant to the nearest nest in the mountains. Venger, the hermit, rescues the child. The man recognizes the baby as belonging to Steel and conceives a revengeful plan to keep the child until it has reached its twenty-first year, rearing it as he would an animal. At the proper hour he plans to present this half-wild boy to the parents and enjoy his revenge.

Venger suddenly awakens and is pleased to discover that the plot was only a dream.

RAY COMEDIES.

CASEY THE FIREMAN.—The cast: Casey (Johnny Ray); Goldie Myne (Emma Ray); Roaring Jack (Arthur Morrison).

Goldie Myne, a wealthy, not to mention healthy heiress from "somewhere in the West," bursts upon the effete East accompanied by an ardent admirer in the person of Roaring Jack, a two-gunman. Goldie has been requested by her father to look up Fire Chief Casey, who saved her life when a "mere child." She communicates with her father's old friend by telephone upon her arrival in New York. The chief promises to call upon her.

In the meantime, Casey, fireman of the boiler room in Goldie's stopping place, goes to her suite for the purpose of building a fire. The humble fireman is mistaken by the heiress for her hero of years ago. Goldie wines and dines the bewildered but acquiescent stoker, while Roaring Jack, at first jealous of the attentions bestowed upon Casey, becomes more than cordial, and the strange trio become a merry little party. The Chief, unable to keep his appointment with Goldie until later in the afternoon, phones to this effect, and the beautiful one realizes that the now intoxicated Casey is not her "fireman."

Then things begin to happen. The pseudo guest is ejected after a battle. Purchasing a bottle of "Superhuman Oil," he returns after a few drinks and with the strength acquired from the "tonic" proceeds to clean out the hotel. In the melee a fire breaks out. Goldie's hero refuses to answer the alarm on the grounds that it might soil his new uniform. Casey steps to the rescue, saves Goldie, and becomes her gallant fireman, and, needless to say, her "chief" in life.

just earned $5, but will not risk it until he hears more about the matter. Tripp then confides that the story is about a young runaway girl from the country. He found her on the streets utterly bewildered, and she told him about venturing to New York to find one George Brown. She said she was about to marry a rich young farmer at home, but she couldn't forget George Brown—the lover who had gone to the city four years before, promising to come back. Tripp, therefore, had taken her to a boarding house and put her in hock, so to speak, until he could raise money to send her home, for she had arrived with but 25 cents, all of which she had spent on gum drops.

The chivalry of Chalmers is aroused, and he goes with Tripp to the boarding house, pays the girl's board bill and advances fare back home. The girl shows him a broken silver dime, the keepsake Brown had given her, the other half of which he had put on his watch chain. He urges her strongly to forget about Brown, who is doubtless a worthless fellow, and to marry the rich farmer. All of this good advice Tripp seconds.

Chalmers now has his story, but as he turns from the ferry station he sees Tripp's shabby coat fall back and discerns on his cheap silver watch chain the other half of the dime. Tripp is the missing George Brown. The reporter realizes that this is a drama of human souls too sacred to be profaned, and brings into the office the report, "No story."

GOLD SEAL.

THE YOUNG PATRIOT (Three Parts—Rel. wk. of July 2). The cast: Captain Phillips (Charles Mailes); Tommy (Elwood Bredel); The Colonel (Jack Connolly); Katie (Mignon Anderson); The Grandfather (Ed Brown); Dick (Roy Stewart); Janos (J. Morris Foster); Miklos Vitez (Wadsworth Harris). Scenario by E. J. Clawson. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Because Tommy, the small son of Captain Phillips, who is experimenting with new explosives, can't seem to get much attention, the boy goes out to romp with his grandfather, a veteran of the Civil War.

Tommy's sister Katie, and her fiance, Dick, are sitting on the veranda of the Phillips home. Miklos Vitez, a foreign gentleman who is also a suitor of Kate's, joins them. Kate, to make Dick jealous, flirts with the foreigner. Dick, angry, leaves.

Captain Phillips considers Vitez a friend, although the colonel, his best friend and confidant, warns him. Vitez learns where the captain keeps his notes and formulas. One day he steals the key to the laboratory and hides in a closet behind the stairs, while Janos, a foreign accomplice, phones the captain that he is wanted at the barracks. When Kate and Dick leave the house, Vitez furtively makes his way into the laboratory.

Tommy has gone to bed, where the old man is relating war stories to the boy. The grandfather hears a noise and, ordering Tommy to go to sleep, goes downstairs with his old musket on his shoulder. Katie has seen the light in the laboratory and takes it for granted that her father has returned. The two start toward the house. Janos, hidden in the shrubbery, catches Kate, and he and Dick fight, Dick throwing the foreigner down the well. Then Kate rushes for a rope and they try to pull Janos from the well, but he is afraid to come up.

The captain, meantime, having arrived at the barracks and being informed that there has been some mistake becomes suspicious, and rushes home. The grandfather enters the laboratory to find Vitez working with the strongbox. He holds him up, but when the foreigner makes a move toward him, and he fires no sound is heard, the musket being too old. Vitez springs upon the old man, and begins to choke him. Tommy, awakened, goes to the laboratory and, picking up a bottle of explosive, hurls it at Vitez. The room is wrecked.

When Kate, Dick, the captain and the policemen enter the room, they find Vitez dying. Tommy, though injured, is trying to help his grandfather from the laboratory. A week later, Tommy tells his grandfather that he knows he hasn't much chance of ever being a hero now that he is injured, but he changes his mind when the colonel, the captain and the sergeant visit him to present him with a medal, upon which is inscribed "To a Little Hero, from His Regiment."

BIG U.

THE MAD STAMPEDE (Rel. wk. of July 2).—John is thinking of the past, when two cowboys appear. He tells them the story of Lasca. Years before he had ridden the range in Texas and loved the girl, who was as fearless as a man. Once when he flirted with a pretty Mexican she stabbed him in the shoulder. Then one day they rode off. Beside their camp-fire they forgot everything but each other. Suddenly a terrific storm came up, and the cattle all around them were stampeded. There was but one thing to do, to try to keep ahead of them. Both on one horse they fled before the herd. But it was useless. John knew that the only thing that could save them was to shoot the horse and crouch under its body, taking their chance. He attempted to carry out the plan, but the horse ran away and he was thrown and hurt. Lasca them fell over him, and with her body protected him from the hoofs of the cattle. When they had passed and he regained consciousness, she was dead. He buried her there on the plain, and never forgot her.

POWERS.

CHINA AWAKENED (Hy. Mayer Travelaugh Rel. Week of July 2).—The Yangtse River is the scene of the [illegible] combination scenic from the famous expedition of Doctor Dorsey, with the inimitable art of Hy Mayer. We see steamers leaving Ichang for Hankow. The scene then changes into a cartoon. A pagoda at Ichang towers seven stories in height, while the houses of the poor are poor and low. Drawings are interspersed with the pictures. Great junks transport the commerce on the broad waters of the river.

VICTOR.

DAREDEVIL DAN (Rel. Wk. of July 2).—The cast: Mary Ann Kelly (Ruth Stonehouse); Her Mother (Lydia [illegible]). [illegible] by Chas. Wilson, Jr. Produced by Ruth Stonehouse.

Mary Ann Kelly wants to be a gunman. One night, when her [illegible] in an old coat and trousers and, taking an old musket, she goes out and holds up the soda-clerk. At first he is frightened, but he sees the curls under her cap and calls her attention to a policeman. She leaves in a hurry. She regains her courage and enters a saloon. She crawls under a table and hears three crooks planning a job. She hears their names, and determines to follow them, and be a [illegible] man. She is arrested [illegible] and taken to the station. Here she says that she is "Daredevil Dan, the Dangerous Dago," but her curls again betray her. Her mother misses her and comes to the station. Mary Ann is scolded and released and decides that she will be a cop as they are mostly all Irish.

NOT TOO THIN TO FIGHT (Rel. Week of July 2).—The cast: Widow ([illegible]); Ralph (Ralph McComas); Willie (Milton Sims); Doctor (Ed. Baker); McDuffee (Charles Haefli). Scenario by W. Warren Schoene. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Ralph is in love with the widow, but she says she cannot marry him as she has her delicate brother to care for. Ralph plans to make brother into a strong man. He takes him to a gym and finally the boy develops so much that he challenges the champion McDuffee to a fight.

The doctor is devoted to the widow, but he steals a necklace from her, and when he goes to the athletic club to see the fight he bets the necklace against Willie. Eileen hears where her brother is and rushes to the club. She [illegible] next the doctor and is furious [illegible] against her brother. Willie is victorious, and then Eileen finds out that the doctor has bet her necklace. She tells Willie to throw him out, but a policeman saves him.

JOKER.

THE TWITCHING HOUR (Rel. Week of July 2).—The cast: Cleopatra (Gale Henry); Launcelot (Milton Sims). Written by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Cleopatra and Launcelot, employees at the hotel, want to be married, but when they set fire to the hotel the proprietor fines them their wages for the week. There is a mysterious guest in the hotel who has a black box which he places in the safe. Cleopatra and Launcelot determine to blow it up. They get a big charge of dynamite, and blow open the safe, then escape in a rig. The mysterious one follows, and the sheriff, who thinks him to be a spy wanted by the government, follows the foreigner. The mysterious one overtakes them, but the sheriff arrives on the scene and takes him into custody. He is a spy, and there is a reward for his capture, which is given to Cleopatra and Launcelot. So they marry after all.

IMP.

THE GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE (Rel. Week of July 2).—The cast: Dick Deacon (Lee Hill); The Girl (Molly Malone); A Crook (J. Morris Foster). Scenario by Maie Havey. Produced by George Cochrane.

Dick is startled to see a girl's agonized face at the window of a limousine which passes. She drops a note which reads, "Save me—85 Newton Street." Dick follows and finds an old house, with the girl at an upper window. He climbs up on some vines and she tells him that she has been kidnapped. Two crooks break in, and Dick gives the girl his revolver and starts to fight with his fists.

Then suddenly she turns the gun on him. He realizes that she is a decoy. They are bank thieves. They tie him, and leave the girl to guard him. He asks her to untie him, but she says she dare not. At last she does so, and he climbs out through the window, and goes for help. The two crooks return and threaten the girl. She says she is through with them. They advance toward her when Dick enters with two policemen. The men are made prisoners and the girl is allowed to go free. She tells Dick that she is going home to start again.

NESTOR.

POOR PETER PIOUS (Rel. Wk. of July 2).—The cast: A Persistent Lover (Eddie Lyons); A Young Missionary (Lee Moran); Eddie's Love (Edith Roberts); Her Father (Fred Gamble). Scenario by Fred A. Palmer. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Father will not allow Eddie to marry Edith, but has reserved her for the son of his old friend, who is a missionary. Eddie goes to the station and meets Peter Pious, the missionary, to take him to Edith's. He takes him to his own place instead, and when Peter goes to take a bath, Eddie steals his clothes and goes to Edith's disguised.

He telephones the hospital that there is an insane man in the bathroom. At the Gambles, Eddie, as the missionary, disgusts the old people and their guests by drinking and smoking. Peter Pious escapes from the ambulance, and the attendants chase him down the street. He finally arrives at the Gambles, and comes through the window. Eddie is exposed, but is forgiven when Peter says that he has a wife and five children.

FIVE LITTLE WIDOWS (Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of July 2).—The cast: Daniel Morgan (Harry Rattenberry); His Secretary (Eddie Lyons); Morgan's Daughter (Betty Compson); Mogul Hassan Pfeffer (Lee Moran). Written and produced by A. Christie.

Eddie loves old Morgan's daughter Betty, but her father says he can't support her. Eddie tells the old man that he will go in business and make a fortune. He sets up a broker's office, and waits for clients. Betty tells him that she overheard her father telling some one to buy B. V. & D. Eddie does so, and the bottom drops out of the market. Then Betty finds out that father was ordering underwear, not stocks.

But Eddie had forgotten that he had a wealthy uncle in Turkey. One day he received a letter from him, saying that he was sending his nephew his Turkish treasures, as he could no longer keep them safely on account of the war. Of course, Eddie fell for the treasures, and so did Betty's father and mother when he told them the news.

A few days later they arrived in charge of Mogul Hassan Pfeffer. Eddie went to meet them, and was flabbergasted to find that the treasures were five beautiful wives. They insisted upon being taken to Eddie's home, though he had invited Betty and her mother there, and was afraid to take five girls to meet them. But Hassan's sword compelled him. The girls were delighted with all they saw. Just then Betty and her mother came in, and Eddie hustled the girls into the bedroom. But one of them comes running out, and Betty's mother is furious and takes Betty home.

That night Eddie's engagement was to be announced final. He goes home to dress, and finds all the wives in his bed. He calls Hassen and has them taken out so that he can dress for the party. They try to go with him, but he escapes. They follow, however, and arrive in the midst of the party. At last Eddie is given a chance to explain that this is his uncle's harem. When Hassan opens the box he is carrying and shows all the jewels within, Betty and her mother are reconciled.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 26 (Rel. Wk. of July 2).

A non-recoil airplane gun of large calibre is the first subject of this issue of Screen Mazazine. The preparation of a shad for planking is shown in complete detail by Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, the culinary expert. Then comes the making of a mattress, including all the steps in the production of the bulky article. Artificial incubation of eggs, as it is carried out by the New York College of Agriculture at Cornell University is the next subject. The reel closes with a clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor, called "Sport Fiends."

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode No. 2—"The Mysterious Message," Two Parts (Rel. Wk. of July 2).—The cast: The Gray Ghost (Harry Carter); Morn Light (Priscilla Dean); Wade Hildreth (Emory Johnson); Jean Marco (Eddie Polo); Williams (Francis MacDonald); Ashby (Wilton Taylor); Cecelia (Gypsy Hart); Brenner Carlow (T. D. Critenden). Adapted and produced by Stuart Paton.

Hildreth, the English attorney, is ready to go to New York, and Carlow commissions him to get a necklace worth two million dollars from Arabin in New York, saying that he will cable Arabin in code that Hildreth is coming. On the steamer Hildreth receives word from Arabin that he will be unable to meet him at the dock, but will call at the Hotel Battenberg that night, where Hildreth's room is already engaged for him.

Meanwhile, The Gray Ghost reads the copy of a cablegram from Carlow, which says that Hildreth will arrive in New York the 25th; that the necklace is to be delivered to him per order he having Carlow's certified check for two million dollars.

Morn Light, in her dressing room, awaits a message from The Gray Ghost. Her maid watches furtively and closely; she appears to be a woman not to be trusted. The Gray Ghost arrives, first phones to some men and then proceeds to try to make love to the girl, but though he loves her, she hates him.

Hildreth lands from the steamer and is met by a man who presents a card from Arabin & Company, and leads him to a taxi. But just as he is about to enter the machine, Hildreth remarks that he prefers to walk.

In the Battenberg Hotel, other men are waiting. Hildreth learns that a room has been engaged for him by Mr. Arabin on the sixth floor, but when he gets up there he shudders as he looks down into the street—such a distance below—and tells the bellboy he thinks he will have to change his room. The men in the adjoining room hear his words and are furious. They manage to stand near Hildreth as he procures another room near the ground floor, so that they see the number of it. Then they phone The Gray Ghost at Morn Light's apartment of the change of rooms.

William, private secretary to Arabin, but really a co-worker of The Gray Ghost, comes to the apartment and the former tells him of their disappointment. William is worried about having intercepted Carlow's cablegram, but The Gray Ghost merely nods grimly. The three crooks enter and The Gray Ghost flays them for their failure to do as ordered. He tells them of the two million dollar check and of the pearl necklace—he wants them both. Morn Light is fearful at what is going on. The Gray Ghost phones Hildreth that he is Arabin and is sorry he couldn't meet him at the dock, but has booked seats for a show at the Brooks Theatre, after which they will have a supper party. He will be unable to go with Hildreth to the theatre, but will join him as soon as possible. Hildreth is delighted at Arabin's thoughtfulness.

Morn Light blames The Ghost for lying and saying that he is Arabin. She declares that she is going to telephone Hildreth. She picks up the telephone, and he grabs her. They fight, and he chokes her into submission.

BISON.

THE WRONG MAN (Two Parts—(Rel. Wk. of July 2).—The cast: Jack Wilson (Harry Carey); Ben Bostwick (George Berrell); Alice Malone (Fritzi Ridgeway); Larry Malone (Bill Gettinger); "Chip" Stevens (Vester Pegg); "Chip's" Pal (Hoot Gibson). Scenario by J. L. Cunningham. Produced by Fred Kelsey. In June, 1891, two men toil through the desert toward Guadaloop, a town on the edge of the desert. Jack, the younger, is a desert prospector, while Ben Bostwick is considered the derelict of the town.

"The Silver Top" Saloon is the social and business centre of Guadaloop and is owned by Larry Malone, boss of the whole town. "Chip" Stevens is a pal of Larry. The stage drives in, and while the driver is getting a drink at the bar, he tells of the money he is carrying, but boasts of the five thousand dollars he is to bring in for the Banner Mine the coming week. Chip is pleased by this news.

Alice Malone comes to the saloon to see Larry, her father, just after he has received a letter from a friend, warning him to elect a sheriff in the town or the U. S. marshals will take charge of it themselves and will make it unpleasant for the inhabitants.

When Jack and Ben arrive in the saloon, Chip proposes to Larry that Ben be elected as sheriff, for he would be absolutely harmless. And as usual the bosses win and their candidate gets in office. Ben displays his star and revolvers with great pomposity. He never realizes that the men are making fun of him. When Jack starts out again toward the desert, Ben can't be persuaded to accompany him. Alice has promised to become Jack's wife as soon as he makes his strike, and is impatient for his return.

Chip and two pals arrange to hold up the stage to get the five thousand dollars. Jack happens to be passing over a ridge and sees their preparations, and, being suspicious, rides toward them. The stage is pursued, two of the outlaws are shot and then Chip climbs up on the back of the stage, fires at the driver and is just searching for the bag of money, when Jack climbs onto the coach. They fight, and soon both roll off the stage, while the horses dash away without a driver. Chip regains consciousness and, seeing Jack, removes the mask from his own face and puts it on Jack. He then takes the gold and he rides away, meeting one of his pals.

The stage arrives in Guadaloop and Ben immediately sets out to catch the bandits. He finds Jack lying in the road with the mask on, and though grief-stricken, forces him to go with him to the town where he places him in the jail. When Alice is told the story, she passes a bar through the jail window, with which he pries up the bars of the window and escapes. He rides quickly to the case and catches Chip just as he is leaving with the gold.

Ben and Alice follow Jack and meet him on the road as he is bringing Chip to town. They tell the people that it was just a joke, a preparation to get the real outlaw. Ben rides on with Chip, while Jack and Alice loiter on the way.

SEEDS OF REDEMPTION (Two Parts—Rel. Wk. of July 2).—The cast: Rita Ashley (Claire Mersereau); Jack Warren (Stanley Walpole); Cora Maitland (Marguerite Straselle); Mrs. Warren (Nellie Slattery); Thomas Houpe (Johnnie Walker); Baby Warren (Violet Axtell). Written and produced by Robert F. Hill.

Rita Ashley is the guest of Mrs. Warren, but she is expected to put in most of her time taking care of Baby Warren. Jack, the son, is the only one who pays much attention to her. Cora Maitland has designs on Jack. She tells Rita that her clothes are getting shabby.

Thomas Houpe, a young man who lives by a refined form of blackmail, reads in the paper of the house party at the Warrens. He sees Cora's name among them, and sends word to her which compels her to go to him. At his rooms he tells her that it ought to be worth something to her to keep her past from Jack Warren.

In the Warren home, Rita is playing with the baby. They go into the garden and watch the planting of seeds. Rita tells the baby that flowers will grow from them. Jack returns and gives the baby a package, which she hides in Rita's room. That night Rita is dressing for the musicale in her old gown. The baby says that Santa Claus will be angry if she doesn't wear his gown. She opens the closet door and finds the box. Rita puts on the frock and goes down. Jack proposes to Rita. In the meantime, the baby is searching in Cora's room and finds her string of pearls. She thinks they are seeds, takes them out in the garden and plants them.

Later in the night Houpe and his pal come to the house with the intention of robbing it, and Cora lets them in. They chloroform Mrs. Warren, and are searching her room, when Jack, hearing a noise, comes in with a gun. Houpe trips Jack, who falls, and then shoots. Houpe falls dead. Rita awakens and comes in; she revives Mrs. Warren. The police are summoned.

The following morning the missing pearls bring new complications, as the police think it is an inside job. Cora says that it is strange that Rita should wear a new gown the night the pearls were missing, as she has no income. Jack, who has bought the frock, remains silent, as he fears to compromise the girl. As they are about to accuse Rita, the baby enters and says that Rita fibbed, as the pearls have not come up. She takes Jack out in the garden and shows them to him. Cora leaves the house, and Jack announces his engagement to Rita to his mother.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO 35 (July 3).—Bizerta, Tunis, and Sydney, New South Wales, are the two cities which are shown in this issue of "Tours Around the World." Bizerta is a French naval port, next in importance as a French Mediterranean base to Toulon, France. The harbor covers 300 acres. The city is Arab in architecture, especially interesting being the entrance to the ancient citadel, and the fountain and street of the armorers.

The pictures are interesting for more than views of the city itself, for there are also shown the ruins of Carthage, one of the most famous cities of antiquity. These lie near Bizerta. The wars of Rome and Carthage are among the greatest in all history. General Petain, now supreme commander of the French forces, acknowledges his indebtedness as leader to his studies of the campaigns of Hannibal, greatest of the Carthaginian leaders. Carthage was destroyed by Rome 146 B. C., rebuilt by the Romans, and destroyed by the Arabs 698 A. D.

Among the Carthaginian views are the ruins of the Odoen, ruins of the amphitheater, tombs, and cross to the memory of two Christian saints.

Sydney, Australia, is noted for its imposing public buildings. Among those shown in the Gaumont pictures are federal and state government houses, House of Parliament, the art gallery, Mitchell Library, Sydney Hospital, Central Railway Station, post office and St. Andrew's Cathedral. A historic picture is that of the Australian warship "Sydney," which sank the German cruiser "Emden."

REEL LIFE NO. 62 (July 5).—When Gaumont releases "Reel Life," No. 62, this magazine in film will add a new department. Animated humor will be presented in a separate section, the pictures being taken from the magazine "Life." Two fantastic drawings comprise the first offering: "A Saving Grace" and "Hands Up!"

The more serious contributions begin with a picture of "Making Jewelry at Home." It shows every process of making a jeweled ring, the work being done by a young woman who labors amid charming home surroundings.

A sterner picture is that of the disciplinary troops at Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay. Its name, "Making Real Men—the Army System," indicates what the Government is successfully accomplishing with men who under less humane penal methods were sent to military prisons. Now for infractions of army regulations and for crimes the men are sent to what are known as disciplinary barracks. Gaumont has gone to the fountainhead of the system, the Alcatraz troops being under the officer who devised the new training.

'Berry Pickers of the South" show not only the negroes in the fields, but also the various processes necessary to turn out the berry boxes in which the fragile fruit is packed for shipment. The Gaumont Company is the first to show pictures of negro women engaged in industrial pursuits, the box factory employing negro labor entirely.

"Toys of Wartime" show the ingenious work of soldiers who have been disabled in the great conflict.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE MASKED HEART (American—Five Parts—July 2).—The cast: Philip Greycourt (William Russell), Catherine Villiers (Francelia Billington), John Villiers (William Conklin), Helene Villiers (Kathleen Kirkham); Frank Sturtevant (Ashton Dearholt). Directed by Edward Sloman.

At a masked ball Philip Greycourt, a wealthy society man who has tired of his easy conquests of women, becomes interested in a grey-gowned woman who will not remove her mask.

Later invited with his friend, Frank Sturtevant, to visit the country home of the Villiers he finds in Helene Villiers, the second wife of his host, his lady of the mask. Catherine, the step daughter, falls in love with Philip, but he is so infatuated with the mother that he does not notice it.

Helene enjoys a flirtation with Philip and leads him on until finally she invites him into her sitting room, during the absence of her husband. Losing control of himself, Philip clasps Helene in his arms, and the returning husband sees the shadow on the curtain. Warned by the maid, Philip runs into the hall and entering the first door, finds himself in Catherine's bedroom. Mr Villiers finds him there and Philip says he and Catherine are to be married the next day.

After the wedding, Catherine is perfectly happy, not knowing of the attachment between her stepmother and Philip, but Helene tries to still carry on their flirtation and, becoming jealous of Catherine, tells her all. Believing Philip still loves Helene, Catherine leaves a note for him and takes passage on a steamer. Philip, however, has grown to love her and throwing Helene aside forever, he boards the boat and sails away with Catherine.

THE GIRL IN THE FRAME (July 3).—A mischievous office boy substitutes a picture of a girl in tights for wifie's portrait in the frame which Otto keeps on his desk. Wifie sees it and, leaving home, goes to live with a girl friend, who for a secret reason is masquerading in men's clothes. Otto hires a detective to find his wife. The detective discovers her in the arms of the handsome "young man" and Otto sues for a divorce. The court room is the stage of a series of comic situations as the lawyers and judge, assisted by the mischievous office boy, unravel the mysterious situation.

SKIDDING HEARTS (Mack Sennett Keystone—Two Parts—June 17)—Mother has chosen an Englishman for her daughter, Ora, while dad prefers a Frenchman. Ora is fancy free until a momentous occasion; then, all alone on a runaway motorcycle, she meets her fate.

The rivalry of the Englishman and the Frenchman, the schemes of father and mother to further the interests of their respective candidates, furnish the basis of a really funny plot. It is carried to ludicrous extremes by Frenchy, who tries his best to commit suicide, only to weaken at the crucial moment.

At the end there comes a big surprise, which is so unusual and changes the anticipated finish so completely that it defies all canons of dramaturgy.

Everett Nelson was born on a farm and is an only son. He does all the hard work on the place for his father, who keeps the country bank. Unable to stand the bondage any longer, Everett leaves for New York in quest of work. While job hunting he sees a sign on the door requesting the services of a janitor. On entering to apply for the position he finds himself on the stage of a theater, where a rehearsal for a musical comedy is in progress.

The astounded manager gazes at this apparition, and then an idea strikes him. He hires the "Clodhopper" for a rural number in his show. How the "Rube" makes the hit of his life as well as showing he is not to be laughed at as a prodigal son is shown in the events that follow.

THE DOG CATCHER (Mack Sennett Keystone—Two Parts—June 24)—The story briefly, has to do with the schemes of Slim Summerville and Glen Cavender to secure dogs to sell and the task Hal Cooley has to win Peggy Pearce against the opposition of her father. In order to accomplish this he goes into picture making.

Later in the game Vavender becomes a candidate for the girl's hand and is progressing, as far as father is concerned, until a certain forgery is disclosed. A duel is fought, and many other surprising incidents happen that make the calcium light too strong and revealing for the comfort of either Slim or Glen to stand.

MADCAP MADGE (Ince Bay Bee—6 Parts—June 24)—The cast: Madge Flower (Olive Thomas); Earl Denham (Charles Gunn); Julia Flower (Dorcas Matthews); Mrs. Flower (Aggie Herring); Charles Lunkin (Jack Livingston); Earl of Larlsdale (J. Barney Sherry); Mr. Flower (J. Frank Burke); Letitia Jane Adams (Gertrude Claire). Directed by Raymond W. West. Written by R. Cecil Smith.

The Flower family has two daughters—Julia, who has not landed after six strenuous seasons, and Madge, the "Madcap," who is still at school. Mrs. Flower reads an announcement in the papers that the Earl of Larlsdale is seeking his health at Palm Beach incognito. Here is the chance for Julia to annex the title as well as the ancestral estates. So mother and daughter leave for the resort, leaving Madge at the finishing school.

This does not suit Madge, who, after a series of escapades, is expelled and joins her mother to their discomfiture. Madge shows that she is rightly christened the "Madcap," as is seen on the events that follow her sudden arrival, for she puts the fashionable Palm Beach colony on a tumult and drives her mother into hysterics.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars "The Orang Apprentice"—June 18).—The picture tells a connected story and deals with the marvellous orang-utan that has soared into the ranks of comedian celebrities. This animal escapes from its cage and hears the plumber at work downstairs. The action discloses that the plumber has left a number of tools, his hat and lunch and pipe in a room overhead. Deciding upon a full imitation of what he has seen human hands perform, the orang starts in. The picture is a continuous series of laughs and gasps of astonishment.

Frank Burke); Maid (Lavinia Gre); Stage Doorkeeper (Ben Hopkins).

Donald Van Wye, an athlete, is seized with a fainting spell during a polo game, and is advised by his doctor to go to Arizona. Donald's brother, Tom, is called back from college to take up the duties of Donald at home.

Among the admirers of Tom's is one Mazie Du Val, a Prima Donna of the Follies, for whom Tom has purchased a valuable present. The bill for the gift is discovered by his mother, who shows it to Donald, which causes him to change his plans about leaving for Arizona at this time.

Donald is persuaded by Tom to meet Mazie. After several meetings, finding he is unable to have Mazie give up Tom, he decides to win and marry her himself.

During Donald's absence from his Arizona home, his mother arrives and pleads with Mazie to give up Donald so that he could go back to New York and take his place in Society. Mazie makes the sacrifice, and falls exhausted on the sands of the desert. On Donald's return home, he is surprised to find his mother there, and on making inquiries, he is told about Mazie's departure. With the aid of an Indian runner, Donald finds Mazie, and lifting her up, he says "Whither thou goest, I will go, thy people shall be my people, and lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

THE SUBMARINE EYE (June Eight Parts).—The introduction to the story proper is developed in a prologue that goes back to the year 1820, when New Orleans was a social center of the New World.

John Fulton, a young inventor, has perfected an under-water periscope with which it would be an easy matter to search out sunken treasure on the floor of the ocean. To finance it is his problem.

Fate intervenes to save him from disappointment. Just when things look bluest, he makes the acquaintance of Dorothy Morgan, a vivacious heiress to millions. She introduces him to her father, who organizes an expedition for treasure hunting, using for the purpose his private yacht.

Armed with an old chart fixing the exact location of a sunken treasure chest, the expedition arrives in the West Indies. The professional diver, who has been brought along, refuses to descend in the shark-infested waters. Young Fulton volunteers; clad in the regulation diving suit, he is lowered to a depth of 14 fathoms. Trapped by the heavy lid of the treasure chest closing on his hands he is held a prisoner at the bottom of the sea. His rescue by Buller, a native diver, who scorns any such contraptions as hemlets or rubber suits, is one of the biggest thrills of this picture.

The treasure casket is finally opened in the presence of Captain Bob, whose chart gave the clue to its whereabouts. What it contained is one of the pleasing surprises of the picture.

OH, POP! (Klever Komedy—July 2).—Vic's wife receives a telegram that her mother is ill, and to come to her at once. Vic insists that she go. She will only go if Vic will agree to take good care of the children. Vic agrees to do this and the whole family sees her off. Vic begins to look after the house and the children.

Rudolph Carey, his next door neighbor, and Mrs. Carey are going down town shopping and they also bring their children over for Vic to take care of. He agrees, and from here on the trouble begins. What the children don't do to poor Vic isn't worth while doing. He undertakes to order food for the house, and his list consists of five dollars' worth of ice, three dozen meat balls, and a couple of dozen cream puffs.

This gives the children the ammunition with which to "play war," and they do. Meat balls and cream puffs fly everywhere, and Vic happens to get in the middle of the "play war" just as his neighbors get back. They get it, too, and all are covered with meat balls and cream puffs. The neighbors excitedly ask, "Where are my children?" to which Vic replies, "Pick them out yourself, I don't know my own."

AT FIRST SIGHT (Famous Players—Five Parts—July 2).—The cast: Justina (Mae Murray); Hartly Poole (Sam T. Hardy): Paul (Jules Rancourt); Nell (Julia Bruns); Mr. Chaffin (W. T. Carlton); Mrs. Chaffin (Nellie Lindreth); Sheriff (William Butler); Deputy (Edward Sturgis).

Justine Gibbs, a romantic small town girl, has been inveigled into an engagement with Ralph Gaylor, who cares only for the fortune she will bring him. In the meantime young Hartly Poole, a successful author of romantic novels, has run out of inspiration and is in despair about his next serial, the first installment of which is due in a week. His editor sends him down to his own home in the country where he asserts the young man will find an idea on every bush.

Hartly starts for the village, which happens to be also the home of Justine, and true to the editor's prediction he collides with romance the moment he steps off the train in the shape of Justine herself who has come to buy a supply of her favorite magazines.

The two make friends over their amusing encounter and she takes him in her car to "The Stone House" which is to be his residence. Later he decides to engage a housekeeper and Justine sends him her own personal maid, the trusty and middle aged Clara. Soon afterwards Justine stops at the "Stone House" to see Clara and asks about the novel. Hartly tells her he has the heroine in love with the hero but doesn't know what to do with them next. Justine suggests having the hero love the heroine and drives off. Hartly follows her advice and soon after phones her to inquire about the color of her eyes—for his heroine, of course.

Thus the queer courtship proceeds to its climax, the author not realizing that he is living every bit of his thrilling novel in his own experiences with Justine. The climax comes when Justine finds out how unworthy her fiance is and resolves to punish him. She allows the preparations for the wedding to proceed until the very hour before the ceremony when she flies to the "Stone House" to Clara—and Hartly. Hartly, absorbed in his writing, pays but scant attention to her until a searching party that has set out to look for the runaway bride, enters his home.

It seems he had in a moment of discouragement, telegraphed back to his editor that he had his heroine stuck—didn't know what to do with her next in the novel, and the humorous answer had come back: "Why don't you abduct her?"

The village detective finding the telegram had thought it a clue and hence the abrupt entrance of the searching party. Ralph Gaylor threatens to disgrace her by saying he found her alone with Hartly. Justine tells the young author that the only escape from the situation is for them to get married at once.

Hartly agrees in an absent-minded sort of a way, until the happy thought strikes him that he will be furnished with unlimited material by his vivacious bride and Justine is happy in the thought that here at last is Real Romance.

FIRES OF REBELLION (Five Parts—July 2). The cast: Madge Garvey (Dorothy Phillips); Helen Mallory (Belle Bennett); Cora Hayes (Golda Madden); Mrs. Garvey (Alice May Youss); John Blake (William Stowell); Russell Hanlon (Lon Chaney); Dan Mallory (Edward Brady); Joe Garvey (Richard La Reno). Written and produced by Ida May Park.

Every man, woman and child who could be spared from the homes of Sackville worked in the shoe factory. Madge Garvey loathed the drab life she led, a slave in chains of drudgery—the life her mother led, with the husband and father, Joe Garvey, a drunken brute, the life her sister, Helen, led, as the wife of Dan Mallory, another drunken brute.

When John Blake, the foreman, discharged Dan Mallory because of his unfitness, Mallory, in his drunken rage, attacked Blake during the noon hour. Blake knocked Mallory out, and followed the crowd that bore the limp form to his home. Mallory was dead but the physician declared that he died of a weakened heart, depressed in its action by over indulgence in drink.

Cora Hayes, stenographer in the office at the shoe factory, had made Madge Garvey's acquaintance at lunch hour. Cora came from the city and told Madge of the opportunities the big town affords pretty girls; of the life of leisure she may lead. Cora longed for the city, and finally gave up her position to return to her old haunts, promising to write Madge.

Helen returned to her father's house after Dan Mallory's funeral. She awaited the arrival of her first-born, with only the small amount of insurance her husband carried standing between herself and privation. The factory foreman, John Blake, called at Joe Garvey's on business concerning Helen's insurance, came face to face with Madge and without manifesting evidence of affection asked Joe Garvey if he could marry his daughter Madge—and it was so decided.

Madge took for granted her coming marriage, but she longed for the kiss of affection and the fond embrace that John Blake denied her. When a letter came from Cora Hayes telling Madge that there was work for her in the big city—to pose for a famous artist—the factory girl hailed the dawn of a new day, borrowed Helen's insurance money and, on the morning set for her marriage, stole away from Sackville.

John Blake had furnished a little cottage for his bride and when Joe Garvey died, Blake gave this shelter to Mrs. Garvey and Helen—for they were left destitute. When Madge arrived in the big city and found out what was actually expected of her, the girl's nature revolted. She withstood Cora's urgings to wander down the primrose path and lived as best she could—until the money Helen had loaned her was nearly gone.

Then she wrote home to Helen and explained. John Blake told of Madge's dilemma, went straight to town bent upon rescuing her. From Cora he learned where Madge was to be that particular evening and arrived at the artist's studio just in time to rescue the girl, who, in spite of her resolution, was being tempted to humiliate herself. Then came reconciliation and happiness for Madge and the man who really loved her.

THE DIVORCE GAME (Peerless—5 Parts—June 25).—The cast: Florence, Viscountess de Sallure (Alice Brady); Paul, Viscount de Sallure (John Bowers); Jean le Beau (Arthur Ashley); Mrs. Safford (Kate Lester); Duke de Sallure (Joseph Herbert); Mendoza (John Drumier); Fifi Dupet (Marie Lavafre). Directed by Travers Vale.

Viscountess de Sallure, formerly Florence Safford, and her husband Paul, the Viscount de Sallure, have a hard time evading their creditors. To Paul's mind, Mrs. Safford, Florence's mother, is the only cloud on their conjugal happiness, despite the fact that she has paid their debts twice. She was shrewd enough to stipulate in her daughter's marriage settlement that the prodigal pair live on only the income from the money left by Florence's father.

Jean le Beau makes love to Florence. When Florence tells him of this, Paul decides to return to le Beau the two thousand francs he borrowed from him. He denounces le Beau as an ingrate, reminding him that he had given le Beau, the little actress, Fifi Dupet.

Paul goes to Mendoza, a usurer, to hunt up some money, but Mendoza refuses. Instead he goes to Paul's home and demands to see Florence's marriage settlement. Paul, eager to distract his mother-in-law's peace of mind, plans to raise a scandal. He leaves a compromising letter where she is sure to find it. He [illegible] it to Mlle. Fifi Dupet.

Mendoza finds a loophole in the marriage settlement, by which Florence can dispose of her dowry if she were a widow or single. He suggests a make-believe divorce, with an assumed infidelity on the part of the husband, as grounds. The husband and wife, very much in love with each other, at first refuse, but he persuades them. The letter Paul has written to Fifi comes into use, and he and his wife begin to act their respective parts for the benefit of the unsuspecting mother. Florence starts divorce proceedings.

Paul goes to a bachelor apartment, where Florence, heavily veiled, visits him three times a week. Going to the apartment, Mrs. Safford overhears the two young people congratulating themselves on the success of their little plan, and she begins to realize that she has been duped. The divorce proceedings are stopped, and their visions of money vanish.

Florence, seeking consolation, gives le Beau the letter her husband addressed to Fifi and when le Beau delivers it to the actress, she visits Paul at his apartment. He pleads with her to go, but she refuses to leave before having something to drink. She compels Paul to drink from her glass and then Florence arrives. She recognizes Fifi as the woman of her husband's letter and says she will get a real divorce. When she tells her mother that her husband has been deceiving her, Mrs. Safford thinks they are acting again, and refuses to believe that it is serious this time.

The next day, Florence is told by Mendoza that in order to make her mother understand the true state of affairs, she must commit a trifling indiscretion. She asks le Beau to scandalize and compromise her. He agrees to elope with her. They leave together. At a railroad crossing, their automobile is wrecked, and in jumping out of the machine Florence sprains her ankle. They go to a nearby farmhouse where they are given adjoining bedrooms.

Learning of his wife's elopement, Paul becomes jealous and with his father and Mrs. Safford he follows the eloping pair. He arrives at the farmhouse and enters Florence's bedroom just as le Beau is making love to her. Paul challenges le Beau to a duel the next morning.

At the duel, le Beau inflicts a slight wound on Paul. Fifi, having received a letter from le Beau which protests his never-ending love for her and informs her that he is to have a duel with Paul, comes on the field. Paul still believes Florence guilty of infidelity. Florence arrives on the field with Mendoza, who shows Paul a formal agreement drawn up by Florence in which she advises Mendoza that she is ready to play the part he had suggested.

Fully convinced that Florence does not really care for le Beau, Paul forgives and is forgiven. He explains his own seeming infidelity by informing his wife that Fifi was so jealous of le Beau's attentions to her (Florence) she tried to win le Beau back by making him jealous.

Later in the day, Mrs. Safford compels Mendoza to accept fifty per cent on the dollar for his loans to Paul, as well as all the other bills which he had bought up from the tradespeople. When she has paid the usurer, Paul offers to allow her to kiss both himself and her daughter. With a toss of the head, Mrs. Safford exits while Paul and Florence kiss.

THE GOLDEN LOTUS (Brady International—5 Parts—June 25). The cast: Leah (Regina Badet); Robert Verney (Martin Bradford); Martin Carrell (George Corday); Govanni (Guy Favieres); Reginald Ramsay (Paul Guide); Marquis de Merricourt (Paul Obrey); Justine Verney (Louise Sand). Directed by Louis Mercanton.

Leah, the lure and decoy of a gambling house run by Govanni, causes Martin Carrell to lose his fortune at the gaming tables. Reginald Ramsay comes to the hills to finish his novel "The Golden Lotus." Ignorant of Leah's identity, he falls in love with her. Reginald tells his friend, Robert Verney, an explorer, of his love for Leah. He shows Verney a jewel, a golden lotus, and says he will give her the jewel as a token of his love. Blinded by love and her desire to quit the old life, Leah accepts Reginald's proposal of marriage. She promises to go away with him the next day.

Verney sees Leah wearing the golden lotus which Reginald has given her, but when he tells Reginald that Leah is the mistress of a gambling house, he will not believe it. To be convinced, he follows Verney to the gambling house, where he sees Leah bending over Carrel's chair, while she gives signs to Govanni. Carrell loses all, and learning that Leah does not love him, he shoots himself. Reginald drags Leah down the stairway and hurls her across the dead body of Carrell. He accompanies Verney on an expedition to Africa.

A year later, the scandal of the suicide having blown over, Leah and Govanni return to the gambling house. She reads a newspaper account of the massacre by a hostile tribe of Reginald and the rest of the African expedition. Some days later Leah is injured in a motor accident which occurs near the home of the Marquis de Merricourt, a wealthy widower. Leah is taken to his home, where she is obliged to stay under the doctor's care. Govanni poses as Leah's chauffeur. On the road to recovery, Leah is urged by Govanni to play up to the Marquis, who is a millionaire. She looks on his plan with disfavor, and her natural charm begins to captivate the widower.

When the doctor announces her recovery, Leah goes to say goodbye to the Marquis. Conquered by his kindness and tired of her life of deception, she confesses her fraud. He offers her marriage, despite all. When Govanni calls, the Marquis pays him a huge sum of money to leave Leah alone.

One day, after the honeymoon, the Marquis gives Leah a book entitled "The Golden Lotus" to read. It was written by Reginald Ramsay. Shocked, Leah listens while the Marquis explains the story of the perfidy of the woman who had wrecked his son's life. After many months of captivity, Verney and Reginald escape from the tribe that has held them prisoners. Reginald writes his father that he will return to his home, after placing Verney, who is ill, in the home of his (Verney's) sister. The Marquis receives the news of his son's return with joy, but Leah is afraid of the consequences.

In Paris, Verney tells his sister, Justine, how Reginald saved his life. Reginald becomes interested in Justine. Returning home, Reginald is presented to Leah, and is filled with pity for his father. He impresses on Leah that no matter what happens, his father must never know that she is the woman who had almost ruined his life.

Govanni reads of Reginald's return, and of his relationship to the Marquis de Merricourt. Believing that Leah will find herself in deep waters, he comes to her. Wishing to get out of his father's home before the past comes to light, Reginald has Verney send him a telegram, recalling him to Paris. He leaves. He confides all to Verney

More in love with Reginald that ever before, Leah telegraphs him that if she does not find at the postoffice the reply from him which she expects, she will come to his apartment. She receives a letter saying that there can never again be anything between them, not even friendship. Learning of Leah's departure to go to Reginald, Govanni calls on the Marquis to give him information regarding the disappearance of Leah. For a consideration, he tells the Marquis that Leah has gone to Paris with Reginald.

In Paris, Leah calls on Reginald. He is pleading with her to leave, when his father is announced. She goes into an adjoining room. The Marquis goes to Reginald, asking for Leah. When his son denies that she has been there, the Marquis whips out a gun, and is about to shoot Reginald. While they struggle, Leah rushes in, tells the Marquis to kill her, and not his son, as she is to blame. She shows him Reginald's letter, in which he had urged her to give up all thought of him. The Marquis asks his son's forgiveness. Meanwhile Leah has obtained possession of the revolver. Hearing a shot the Marquis and Reginald rush into the next room where they find Leah dying from a self-inflicted shot. She has left her golden lotus as a gift to Justine, with a note, asking them to forgive and forget her. She passes away in the sight of the two men who had loved her.

THE GHOST OF OLD MORRO (Edison—Five Parts—June 25).—The cast: Mother Morro (Helen Strickland); Pastio, a smuggler (Herbert Prior); Capt. Jose (Robert Conness); Amadio (Bigelow Cooper); Rosetta (Dorothy Graham); Mercedes, Mother Morro's daughter (Mabel Trunnelle); Anetta (Marie La Corio). Written by James Oppenheim. Directed by Richard Ridgely.

Mother Morro is a disreputable innkeeper. The smugglers who deposit their goods with her, under the protection of Captain Jose of the revenue squad, hate her for the large percentage which she forces from them. For the captain, she victimizes Rosetta, daughter of an old fruit dealer, who seeks out the captain and denounces him.

Concealed in a convent, lives Mercedes, Mother Morro's daughter. Mercedes steals away one night and seeks her mother. Fearful that the girl may learn of her true mode of living, Mother Morro tries to hide Mercedes and to hurry her back, but Captain Jose has seen her. He follows her to the convent garden. Dazzled by him, she allows his advances.

Time passes and Mercedes becomes enamored of Jose. She steals from the convent to meet him. The smugglers see her and set upon a plan to win the captain's good graces. Knowing his love of women and at the same time, anxious to work harm upon Mother Morro, they decide to abduct the girl from the convent. Thus, Mercedes, gagged and veiled, is brought to the inn, where Mother Morro, in her ignorance of the girl's identity, serves them all with drinks. As Mercedes is being led from the inn, she drops her ivory crucifix. When Mother Morro discovers this, she realizes that her daughter is being taken to the captain. She rushes after the others, but the smugglers prevent her from reaching the captain. As the girl staggers out, she joins her mother, who swears vengeance. Mother Morro hires Amadio, an assassin, to make the captain expiate his sin. Thus, Annetta, Amado's sister, lures Jose to a lonely inn.

In spite of all that has happened, Mercedes' love for Jose persists. It is to kill this love that her mother allows Mercedes to watch through an open window of the old inn, Jose's love-making to Annetta. Mercedes overhears Rosetta begging Amadio not to murder the unsuspecting captain. Amaido insists that he must fulfill his contract and that Jose can be saved only by appearance of some other person who could be done away with and whose body could be passed in a sack to Mothor Morro as that of the captain. Thus it is, that Mercedes resolves to save Jose's life. Mercedes makes her way to Amadio's. As she is admitted into the room, the assassin's knife lays her low.

Mother Morro is waiting on the battlements of Morro Castle. Amadio appears with the sack and demands payment. Morbid curiosity prompts the old woman to take a last look at the body of her daughter's seducer, but the appearance of a soldier on the road deters her. Amadio seizes the opportunity of covering up the deception and hurls the sack into the sea. At this moment Captain Jose passes them on his way home from Amadio's inn. Mother Morro gazes over the battlements to find her daughter lying dead on the rocks. Her mind leaves her and with a last oath at Amadio, she flings herself into the sea to rest forever by her daughter's side. Nightly the ghost of Mother Morro is seen to rise and swiftly make its way up the battlements of the old castle.

THE MAN WHO WAS AFRAID (Essanay—4 Parts—July 2)—The cast: Benton Clune (Bryant Washburn); Colonel Cory (Ernest Maupain); Elsie Revere (Margaret Watts); Mrs. Clune (Frankie Raymond); Pod Fisher (Mark Elliston). Directed by Fred E. Wright.

Young Benton Clune is not a coward at heart. He is a victim of over-zealous mother love which has grown to exert too great an influence over him. When the President's call to arms comes, Clune's regiment of National Guard prepares. Mrs. Clune is terror-stricken. She induces Benton to resign from the unit. His comrades brand him a "slacker," and the girl he loves spurns him. The regiment moves off to war.

Lacerated by the taunts which greet him on all sides, Clune's manhood finally asserts itself, and he hastens to the front. He finds his regiment in a desperate plight. The enemy, in overwhelming numbers, is threatening to annihilate it. The colonel calls for a volunteer to make a perilous trip for reinforcements. Those who had jeered at Clune held back from what seemed inevitable death. The man they had called "slacker," steps forth. His trip through the enemy lines forms a series of hairbreadth escapes but proves successful in the end. Thus Benton redeems his honor and wins the girl he loves.

A PLACE IN THE SUN (Do Children Count?—Two Parts—July 4)—The Cast: Marion North (Little Mary McAlister); Frank North (John Cossar); Harriet North (Mabel Bardine); John Banning (Arthur Bates).

Frank North, out of employment, leaves his family and goes to another city to seek work. He is terribly injured and unable to notify his wife. Rapidly the North family approaches starvation. Little Marion, the daughter, finds a wallet on the street, dropped by Banning, a miser. Believing that the Lord had sent the money for her sick mother, the child utilizes it to purchase medicine and groceries. Banning causes Marion's arrest. She is arraigned in the Juvenile Court. However, the judge, after hearing her story, throws Banning out of court. A charitable society takes care of the family, locates North and aids him to recovery, then secures him a permanent position.

HIS FINAL BLOW OUT (Two Parts—June 25).—The cast: Country Boy (Hank Mann); The Girl (Peggy Prevost); Her Father (Max Asher); The spy (Joseph Swickard). Directed by Hank Mann.

In this, a stranger coming to town supplants Hank in the affections of a girl, is made leader of the Home Guards and becomes a factor in the village life. In truth, the man is a spy sent to disorganize the Home Guards—to blow them up, in fact Hank keeps on his trail and learns the stranger's secret.

The exposure comes at a bazaar held for the benefit of the Home Guards. In this there are a bomb and some fine action. Hank, through his superiority, heroically saves the Home Guard, chases the spy from the town, and, well, of course, he wins back the girl.

THE SIREN (5 Parts—June 25)—The cast: Vivian Courtney, known as Cherry Millard (Valeska Suratt); Derrick McClade (Clifford Bruce); Burt Hall (Robert Clugston); The Stranger (Curtis Benton); Rose Langdon (Isabel Rea); Armand (Armand Kalisz); Old Langdon (Cesare Gravina); Cherry's Maid (Rica Scott).

This is a drama of transgression centering around the life of Vivian Courtney, an adventuress, who later changes her name to Cherry Millard. Beginning as a vicitim of circumstances, Cherry becomes steeped in sin and her death is finally brought about by the man she loved.

There is a prologue reciting Cherry's intrigue with The Stranger, who is jailed through her unfaithfulness. Then she goes to the West and falls in with Burt Hall. She makes him help her in a scheme to exact money from Derrick McClade a young millionaire. In this she succeeds, but when she attempts to marry Derrick he discovers the truth.

The Stranger escapes from prison, sets out on a search for the woman who ruined his life, and finds her. Before he can be caught, he has slain her.

PATSY (5 Parts—July 1).—The cast: Patsy Prim (June Caprice); Dick Hewitt (Harry Hilliard); John Primmel, Patsy's Dad (John Smiley); Helene Arnold (Edna Munsey); Alice Hewitt (Ethyle Cooke); Patsy's French Maid (Alma Muller); Griggs (Fred Hearn); Janie (Jane Lee). Written by Joseph F. Poland. Directed by John G. Adolfi.

Patricia Primmel, better known as Patsy Prim, though born in the city, is brought up in the west, where her father has gone for his health. As Patsy grows older her father becomes concerned over her untamed nature and determines to send her to a friend in New York for education and contact with refinement. The friend to whom father sends Patsy has died and the letter is received by his son, Dick Hewitt. As Patsy is already on her way when Dick gets the letter he has to go to meet her. Little short of a revolution takes place in Dick's bachelor apartments on Patsy's arrival. A housekeeper is hired, also a maid. Between them and Patsy, Dick and his butler are taught new steps.

Dick's wild life leads him into the company of Helene Arnold, an adventuress. One night when not quite sober they are married. Contrasting the childish beauty of Patsy and the bold Helene sets Dick thinking. Patsy is already in love with him. He is soon in the same fix. The unexpected arrival of Dick's sister Alice adds to Dick's troubles. At first she misunderstands Patsy's presence in the bachelor's apartments. Then, on seeing the lady, she urges her wild brother to marry Patsy as she's "just the kind of girl to make him settle down." Although Dick would like to he can't because of his wedding with Helene.

Patsy's sentimental maid fills her with the art of love making. She tells her a man must marry a girl if he is out late at night with her alone. When Alice invites Patsy and Dick to a house party Patsy puts a hole in the gasoline tank. They are stalled on the road and arrive at the house at midnight. Alice rakes Dick over the coals and tells him he must marry Patsy. To make matters worse the hired entertainers for the party are Helene and a man. She threatens to expose Dick if he doesn't pay her $10,000 hush money he had promised. Dick refuses.

Next evening Helene tells the guests she has an important announcement to make. Just as she is to expose Dick his butler appears in the door. Helene gasps and says she is going to Europe as a Red Cross nurse. She rushes from the house. Dick asks his butler why he so affected Helene. He tells him she is his wife who abandoned him several years ago. This nullifies Dick's marriage to Helene and he tells his sister he thinks she is right on the subject of marrying Patsy, who also likes the proposition and all ends happily.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

THE MAGNIFICENT MEDDLER (5 Parts—June 4).—The cast: Jess Roth (Mary Anderson); Monty Emerson (Antonio Moreno); Bob Gill (Otto Lederer); Big Joe Roth (George Kunkel; Pete Marillo (Leon D. Kent). Directed by William Wolbert.

Monty Emerson buys the Sentinel in Horizon. With Bob Gill, a cartoonist, who had been his pal on an Eastern paper, he goes to Horizon. Monty starts in at once to uplift the town, and his first bit of "meddling" is to brand Ike Cherry, Horizon's "bad man," as an undesirable citizen. Ike then goes to the Sentinel office, levels two guns at Monty and grants him two minutes to start out of town.

Monty learns that Lewiston, a neighboring town, has been trying to annex the corrupt but contented Horizon. After a conference with the Mayor of Lewiston, Monty begin to shriek for consolidation. This brings him afoul of Big Joe Roth, political boss.

Monty, meantime, meets Jess Roth, daughter of the boss, and they fall in love. After taking a flashlight picture showing Marillo, a Mexican, paying Roth his share of the profits from vice in the town, Roth organizes a gang and starts after Monty, while Marillo organizes a band of Mexicans to rob Roth's house.

The young editor evades his pursuers. Shortly afterward Marillo and his outlaws come along the road with Jess Roth a kidnapped captive. Monty drops onto the horse bearing Jess and gallops away, the Mexicans in pursuit. They reach the Sentinel office. Soon Roth's men appear and open fire on the place. A battle follows. Roth then breaks into the newspaper office and his men set fire to the place.

The girl escapes, but is again captured by

Marillo, who returns to the attack at the [illegible] office. A force of cowboys come to the rescue and Marillo flees with Jess a prisoner. Monty overtakes them, knocks Marillo out and rides away with the girl. Roth and a force of cowpunchers arrive at this juncture and escort the pair to the Palace dance hall. Roth, still incensed at Monty, tries to drag the girl away with him but she denounces her father and forces him to consent to her wedding with the meddler.

Roth's capitulation is complete. He not only surrenders his daughter to Monty, but gives up his opposition to the consolidation proposition and orders his followers to vote for it.

THE MAELSTROM (Five Parts—June 18)—The cast: Jimmie Hallet (Earle Williams); Peggy Greye-Stratton (Dorothy Kelly); Stewart Rowden Ling (Denton Vane); Chief Menzies (John Robertson); Gwennie Lyne (Julia Swayne Gordon); Cincinnati Red (Gordon Gray); Dago Sam (Bernard Siegel); Sergeant Congreve (Robert Gaillard). Directed by Paul Scardon.

Jimmie Hallet steps from his club into a fog-blanketed night and stops under an electrolier to light a cigarette. As he does so, a girl thrusts a package of papers into his hand and vanishes in the fog, but not before Hallet gets a glimpse of her features.

The papers left with Hallet include a bundle of cancelled checks and an envelope giving a street address. He goes to the address. As Hallet enters the house, he is felled by two burglars who previously had killed Mr. Greye-Stratton, owner of the house. When Hallet regains consciousness he calls police headquarters. The murder of Greye-Stratton is a mystery, but Chief Menzies suspects the slain man's profligate son.

Peggy Greye-Stratton, who left her father's roof because of his oppression of herself and her brother, visits headquarters to learn if they have captured the murderer. Hallet arrives and the girl is sent into an anteroom. Later she is put in the identification line and Hallet recognizes in her the girl of the fog. He pretends not to know her, but as she starts from the building he stops her, revives old acquaintance and leaves with her.

Returning to headquarters, Hallet learns that Peggy is the wife of a criminal named Ling, and Menzies expresses the belief that she is shielding her brother, a member of Ling's gang. Hallet goes to his apartment and there receives a note from Peggy, begging him to go to her aid.

Hallet is admitted to the house by a woman, Gwennie Lyne, chief aid of Ling. She springs a trap and Hallet is plunged into a cellar. Menzies enters the house and meets the same fate. When he finds Hallet, the latter is bound and gagged. They escape from the cellar, but not before the gang has fled. The police begin a round-up of his gang. Two, "Dago Sam" and Cincinnati Red, are arrested.

Red leads the police to a house, but Ling, suspecting treachery, makes him a prisoner. The police enter and Ling opens fire on them. He escapes over the roof tops and goes to another house where Hallet has gone to meet Peggy. She has just shown Hallet her brother dying when Ling enters the room. There is a fight and Hallet fells Ling with a chair. He then flees the house.

The police learn Ling's new hiding place and the fact that he is wounded. They get into the house, but while they are searching upstairs Ling sets fire to the building and escapes with Gwennie, who had been acting as housekeeper and guard over Peggy. The two seek refuge in a Chinese den. Menzies and Hallet force their way into the opium den and after a fight overpower Ling.

Ling, Gwennie and "Dago Sam" are brought together at headquarters. Finally the gun with which Greye-Stratton was killed is flashed and Sam admits that he fired the shot. This clears up the mystery. Peggy tells Hallet she had married Ling to prevent him from exposing a former crime of her brother's, but Menzies reveals the fact that she was not really Ling's wife, because he has another wife living. Then Peggy and Hallet, their romance born in the maelstrom of mystery, are free to wed.

A SON OF THE HILLS (Six Parts—June 25).—The cast: Sandy Morley (Antonio Moreno); Martin Morley (Robert Gaillard); Ann Walden (Julia Swayne Gordon); Cynthia Starr (Belle Bruce); Marcia Lowe (Florence Radinoff); Jeff Crothers (William Balfour). Written by Harriet T. Comstock. Directed by Harry Davenport.

Sandy Morley, a chore boy of seventeen, is ambitious to do something worth while for the downtrodden people among whom he lives, and with this end in view, secretly plans to obtain a college education. His playmate, Cynthia Starr, is a member of an aristocratic family.

Unable to stand the tyranny of a cruel stepmother, Sandy finally runs away from home, but he falls ill from exhaustion and hunger and is taken into the house of John Markham, a northern capitalist temporarily in the South in search of a factory site. The boy wins the affection of his new friend and when Lansing Hartford, Markham's nephew, declines a proposal that he work a year in the shops of Markham's factory up north preparatory to entering college, Sandy eagerly embraces the opportunity.

The boy works faithfully for a year and further endears himself to his friend. At college he continues to show his worth and finally is graduated with high honors. Markham's faith in Sandy becomes stronger than ever and he despatches him to Lost Hollow to superintend the building and operation of a modern factory, designed to prove work for the poor hill dwellers under healthful conditions.

Shortly after this, Cynthia's aunt dies and the girl is taken in charge by Marcia Lowe, a physician, who is a cousin of Cynthia, although the latter does not know it. Marcia informs Cynthia that she was not a waif, as she had supposed, but the daughter of her aunt Ann's sister and Dr. Starr, both of whom had died when she was a baby. About the time of Sandy's return to Lost Hollow, Lansing also returns to the South. Cynthia is impressed by the polished Lansing, who, during his college days, had a secret affair with a woman.

He confers with Crothers, telling him that Sandy's factory will mean Crothers' ruin, and the slave driver fires his own workers to a high pitch of resentment against Sandy. A mob goes to Sandy's office, intending to drive him out of the country, but Sandy turns the people against Crothers by telling them of Crothers' cruelty, low wages, and other crimes against him. He wins their confidence by telling them of his plans to better their conditions. Thereupon the mob vents its anger on Crothers and he is forced to flee the region.

Lansing takes Cynthia out for a drive and on their way they are caught in a rainstorm. They seek shelter in an abandoned cabin and remain there all night. In the morning, Lansing convinces the girl that she will be the victim of unjustified scandal and she agrees to marry him at once. They are married and return home. When Sandy learns of it, he compels Lansing to promise that he will not exercise his rights as a husband until Cynthia learns the meaning of marriage.

Lansing and Cynthia go north, she to live with his aunt, he to live away from her. She is introduced as his sister. Shortly after their arrival, Marion Spaulding, the woman with whom Lansing had had his affair, appears on the scene with a baby she credits to Lansing. She explains to Cynthia that her husband is dead and she has returned to Lansing. The latter, summoned, by Cynthia, gets a divorce. He marries Marion, and Cynthia, suddenly realizing that she really loves Sandy, returns to him.

In the last episode, Mary Kennedy learned that Margaret Warner, the young magazine writer, was the other woman in her husband's life, while Kennedy became insanely jealous of Norwood's attentions to Margaret.

He remonstrates with Norwood, stating that as her attorney he knows that Margaret is bound to another, and advises him that he should stop forcing his attentions upon her. Norwood informs Kennedy that Margaret is the one to judge their friendship, and not he. Kennedy visits Margaret, and begs her to give Norwood up and to promise him that she will not see him again. "What right have you to deny me friends?" the girl asks. Angry, Kennedy leaves.

Kennedy receives the nomination to run for Congressman against Bull Brady, a powerful political boss. His supporters assure him that he will be elected, due to the fact that his reputation is clean. Doyle and his band of crooked backers determine to elect Brady.

Kennedy begins his campaign, and while speaking, his eyes fall upon the unscrupulous Doyle. Doyle starts a panic among the crowd. Seeing this, Kennedy jumps down from the speaker's platform and starts after his bitter enemy. A free-for-all-fight ensues. Kennedy is struck in the head with a sandbag. Falling, he is rushed to an automobile by two gangsters, who place him in Doyle's care. Margaret and Norwood pursue Doyle's machine. Seeing that Norwood is close upon him, Doyle escapes, throwing Kennedy's limp body on the road. Kennedy, slowly coming to, finds himself in Margaret's arms. Norwood returning after his fruitless search for Doyle finds Margaret and Kennedy close together in one another's arms. Staring down dazedly, half unbelieving, he mutters, 'Kennedy, the other man!"

THE WOMAN IN WHITE—(Thanhouser—5 Parts—July 1).—The cast. Laura Fairlie, the heiress, and Ann Catherick, the Woman in White (Florence La Badie); Sir Percival Glyde (Richard R. Neill); Marian Halcomb, Laura's half sister (Gertrude Dallas); Count Fosco (Arthur Bower); Walter Hartridge (Wayne Arey). Directed by Ernest C. Warde.

Because of her father's last request, Laura Fairle was duty bound to marry Sir Lord Percival. She was in love with Walter Hartridge, a young artist, who had been engaged as her drawing master. Marian informed Walter that Laura was engaged. He resigned his position and went back to the city. On his way back Walter met a mysterious woman in white. She informed him "that Glyde was about to ruin his life, and that he was not all that he seemed." Fearing for Laura, Walter wrote to warn her. Laura never received the letter, because it was intercepted by a servant of Glyde's and the nobelman suppressed the message. Fearing that Walter knew something of his past, Glyde secretly secured him a position with an exploring party that was going to Central America, and sent one of his men along, slyly hinting that news of Walter's death would be followed by a handsome reward. Shortly afterwards they were married. After a short trip they returned home. Accompanying them was one Count Fosco, a friend of Glyde, whose mission was to assist him gain control of Laura's fortune. Marian, Laura's half sister, was to live with her, as they were very devoted to one another.

Ann Catherick, the woman in white, Walter had met, finally managed to meet Lady Glyde, and was in the midst of an accusation against Glyde when the unexpected arrival of the nobleman caused her to flee. As the unhappy wife returned she found to her horror that Fosco had been spying upon her. Marian having heard Laura's story determined to keep a close watch on the man. Stealing out on the porch above them, Marian heard Fosco mention that Ann Catherick greatly resembled Lady Glyde. A sudden storm arose, and before Marian could return to her room, Glyde had entered Laura's room, and she was unable to move. Due to exposure, Marian became seriously ill and was confined to her bed. This was their chance. Laura was told by Glyde that Marion was away for a few days. Learning that the mysterious woman had just died, and knowing that she had escaped from an insane asylum, Glyde determines to bring her body to his home and bring Lady Glyde back as the insane fugitive. Due to the great resemblance their plan worked successfully. Marian recuperated and learned the terrible news. It seemed impossible. She determined to investigate. Will Laura suffer for the Woman in White?

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

"Trained lightning" is the very life's blood of the moving picture industry. J. H. Hallberg has contributed a great deal to the particular kind of "training" which has adapted this "life's blood" to the use of presenting photographic images on the screen.

"MOTION PICTURE ELECTRICITY" gives its readers a comprehensive knowledge of this important subject and enables the manager and operator not only to get the best possible results from the equipment he is using but to save money while he is using it.

When the Lights are Out

Your theatre may be tastefully and expensively decorated, but the audience neither sees nor thinks of its appearance when the lights are out.

Every one has his attention concentrated on the screen. If the pictures are not clear, many patrons will drift into the habit of going to other theatres.

Hold your patrons and attract new ones by using a projection lens, which insures the clearest possible pictures. You cannot invest in any other article which will give as valuable returns in proportion to its cost.

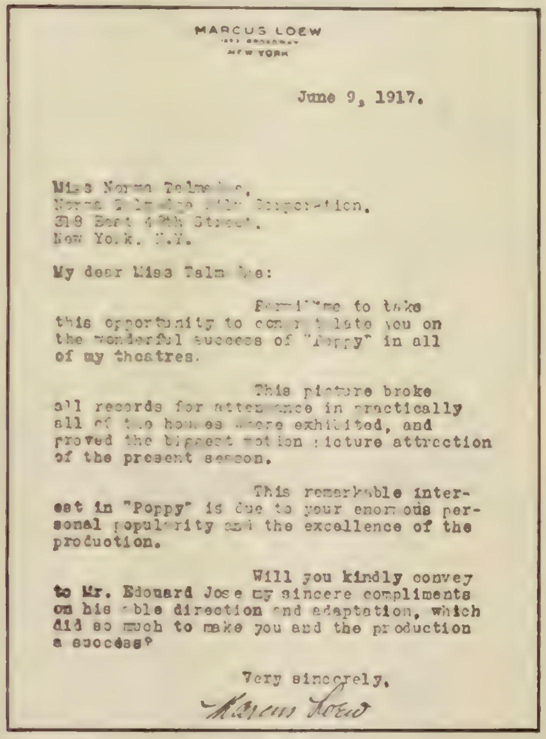
"POPPY" BREAKS RECORDS

Norma Talmadge Congratulated by Marcus Loew on Picture's Wonderful Success.

LAUDS EDWARD JOSE, THE DIRECTOR, FOR ADAPTATION AND PRODUCTION

A Letter That Tells a Story



MARCUS LOEW
NEW YORK

June 9, 1917.

Miss Norma Talmadge,
Norma Talmadge Film Corporation,
318 East 48th Street,
New York, N.Y.

My dear Miss Talmadge:

Permit me to take this opportunity to congratulate you on the wonderful success of "Poppy" in all of my theatres.

This picture broke all records for attendance in practically all of the houses where exhibited, and proved the biggest motion picture attraction of the present season.

This remarkable interest in "Poppy" is due to your enormous personal popularity and the excellence of the production.

Will you kindly convey to Mr. Edouard Jose my sincere compliments on his able direction and adaptation, which did so much to make you and the production a success?

Very sincerely,

Marcus Loew

Where Fire Means a Double Loss

INTERRUPTED business and disappointed exhibitors—to say nothing of the destruction of films worth thousands of dollars—that's the result of a few minutes delay—or even a few seconds—in smothering a fire in your exchange.

A film-fire spreads like lightning—once fairly started the damage is done. With Johns-Manville Fire Extinguishers right on hand, you can quickly smother all incipient fires, and save not only your film stock, but your place of business and goodwill among the trade.

You may do all your pumping with a few quick strokes in the open, and with the air pressure thus stored you can smother a fire in the tightest corner by simply opening the nozzle and shooting the stream accurately at the base of the flames. But if you have room, the extinguisher may also be discharged by pumping—and remember that this "two-way" method is exclusive with the Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher.

Approved and labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., under the direction of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

It's false economy to take chances where the risk is so great. The Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher insures protection—and you may need it tonight.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Published by the

Preface by the Author

In the preparation of this volume on "Modern Theatre Construction" no claim is made that this is a wholly original work. The book is merely a compilation of the best obtainable data on the subject, interspersed with original ideas. Nor has any attempt been made to produce a technical treatise on the subject. This is rather a hand-book of practical suggestions intended primarily for the general reader, which may serve as a guide and reference for prospective owners, managers, architects or builders in search of reliable information on this type of structure.

The collection of the necessary matter for proper presentation has entailed a considerable amount of painstaking labor, and the author has often found it desirable to adopt the matured thought and in some instances even the very expression of thought of competent writers. To these authorities grateful and appreciative thanks are extended.

The absence of any serious or exhaustive published treatment of this important topic within the past quarter of a century, coupled with the present general tendency toward architectural uplift throughout this country, which aims at a simpler and truer form of art, renders the occasion opportune for the publication of such a volume as this.

In illustrating or citing the work of other architects the writer disclaims any malicious intention in pointing out faulty features. He simply offers them as examples of defective construction to be avoided.

April, 1917. EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA.

"The Call to Arms" now running at the Globe Theatre, New York has been the big feature of all New York attractions during the past week. There has been good reason for this.

The other three features of the Benjamin Chapin Cycle of Lincoln photoplays—"My Mother," "My Father" and "Myself"—are being presented also and have been bringing laughs and tears in abundance, but it has seemed especially appropriate that "The Call to Arms" should be featured at the time our American boys arrived in France.

The great body of American people love amusement, even in time of a great national struggle. Do the great body of American people understand what the war is for? They know our rights have been violated and unspeakable outrages upon humanity have been committed. The right of liberty and the pursuit of happiness are principles depicted in Benjamin Chapin's wonderful pictures. Anyone seeing these visualized traits of the human heart must realize that war will cease only when humanity is ready for peace.

The great emotion to which the nation has been stirred has led us to announce the release of the Lincoln Cycle pictures at as early a date as the territories can prepare for this release.

This decision has just been reached today, June 28th, upon reading of the arrival of the American army in France.

Now, if you are interested as a Stateright Buyer, or as an Exhibitor, send in any information or inquiry that may help us to prepare your territory for these pictures as quickly as possible, and to make the picture the most valuable service possible.

These pictures show the joy of living and why the American boys are the greatest boys in the world.

The four features of the Lincoln Cycle are still running at the Globe Theatre, New York. If you are an Exhibitor, a Stateright Buyer, or in any way vitally interested in the moving picture business from a commercial, artistic or purely amusement standpoint, then wire some friend in New York to see these pictures at once and report to you. Address: Charter Feature Corporation, Benjamin Chapin, President, Globe Theatre, New York.

"Land of Long Shadows"

Screen time 65 minutes

"THE RANGE BOSS," taken from the famous novel by Charles Alden Seltzer, is a thrilling story of the great West; in which a cow-puncher foils a plot to rob an Eastern girl of her holdings. He wins her admiration by his pluck and daring, and then her love.

"LAND of LONG SHADOWS," written and directed by W. S. Van Dyke, depicts the rugged life of the Canadian Northwest. A trapper, wrongly accused of crime, refuses to surrender to the mounted police. Barricaded in his cabin he holds them at bay until after "the great event" happens to his wife.

Universal Releases

For the Week of July 23d Offer a Wide Choice of Subjects — Representing the Highest Class of Moving Picture Entertainment.

THE releases offered by the Universal for the week of July 23 exceed in quality and quantity those of all competition combined. Competition is no part of the Universal Policy. That is for the other fellow. If he is or thinks he is capable of producing pictures that actually compete with Universal Releases, let him do so. The Universal will continue to progress; to take and maintain the lead in the production of pictures and of subjects that will prove popular with the fans and profitable to the Exhibitor. Look over the list below and you will readily see the reason for the assertions made here. You will find the sort of pictures that your patrons demand. You will find novelties and comedies such as you need to strengthen your program, or to bolster up a weak feature. No matter what sort of a show you are giving you need selections from the Universal's Short Subject Releases. Book through your nearest Universal Exchange, or direct from the Home Office.

As a brother Exhibitor of yours tersely puts it: "What my patrons want, they get in Universal Pictures. Short subjects, strong features, new films, and a good show always. That's why my patronage is constantly growing." Art S. Hamly, Mgr Yale Theatre, Pauls Valley, Okla.

World-Wide Activities Permanently Recorded in "Current Events."

READING in your newspaper about the thrilling events that are daily taking place all over the world is dry stuff compared to seeing the actual happenings at their most dramatic moment. That is why the moving picture lovers all over the world are so keen for the live news pictures shown every week in Universal Current Events. The picture given here of a scene at the great reception which New York City officially accorded the Italian War Mission is from a subject that is of interest to every man, woman and child in the land. Every week Current Events shows similarly important "doings," with the result that the demand for prints is growing by leaps and bounds. If you want a live one, book Current Events through your nearest Universal Exchange.

"Going strong," is the nation-wide verdict regarding the Universal Mystery Serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which was filmed from the popular novel of the same name, written by Eustace Hale Ball. In the mazes of the fascinating plot Stuart Paton, the director, and Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, who played the leads, found opportunities for the best work of their careers, and the public has shown its appreciation in thousands of theatres. Many Exhibitors have already begun to plan for repeat bookings, deciding to take advantage of the tremendous popularity of the combination of a strong serial with popular stars, unusually well produced.

LIVE TIPS

News Notes for Shrewd Exhibitors

"Seven Cutey Pups," the novelty animated cartoon, is being widely booked. It is so different from the average comic cartoon that shrewd Exhibitors are playing it up strongly as a feature. Everyone knows Vincent Colby's post card pups, and all are eager to see them brought to life on the screen. Book this strong single reel today.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, the popular stars of the great serial, "The Purple Mask," are known abroad by the names of the characters which they played in "Lucille Love." The fascinating Grace is known as Lucille, and Francis and his side whiskers is always referred to as Hugo. It is such popularity as this, together with the cleverly concealed mystery of "The Purple Mask," that has made the repeat bookings for this Universal multi-reel drama exceed all similar records.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have an exceedingly funny comedy in "Seeing Things," the current Nestor release. Eddie and Edith (Roberts), engaged, quarrel. Eddie takes his colored servant (Lee) to a lonesome house in the country to nurse his grouch. Unknown to him a band of counterfeiters are making illicit use of the cellar, and some of the strange happenings which the crooks stage to frighten their visitors away are such as to bring Lee's sense of comedy to the front in a series of screamingly funny situations.

"The Sign of the Cucumber," the current L-KO release, has some of those novel and comical stunts for which the L-KO comedians and directors are famous. Did you every see a donkey and its rider sailing over the housetops, with only an umbrella for a parachute? You can see it in this laff-provoker, and it's one of the funniest effects ever screened.

What do you think about Mary Fuller returning to Universal pictures? They're so good that they are being called Mary Fuller Pictures, too. That's their regular brand name. The first one is "The Beautiful Impostor," and will be released on July 26. It is a two-reel society drama, and every woman will go crazy about it. All the latest styles.

Novelties in Infinite Variety on the Universal Screen Magazine.

"This World is so full of a number of things,
I am sure we should all be as happy as kings."

So sings the poet. But—if millions upon millions of the good citizens and their wives and sons and daughters have no opportunity of seeing these "number of things," it is clearly the fault of no one but themselves. The Universal Screen Magazine is showing them every week to the delight and entertainment of millions of ardent movie fans. This week we announce No. 29 of this fascinating magazine "movie," and in it are some of the things that every one is reading, talking, or wondering about. For instance, the illustration shows the building of the U. S. Submarine Chasers, part of the plan to sweep these terrors from the seas. Such live topics from week to week are the things that pull the crowds even on your traditional "dull day." Book through any Universal Exchange.

"A REAL SERVICE"

Hippodrome Circuit Manager Lauds Animated Weekly.

"I REALLY believe you are rendering the public a real service through your Animated Weekly. I feel that I am not only passing on the good work, but I know that I am profiting by so doing. MY PATRONS ARE VERY FOND OF THE WEEKLY, AND NEVER MISS A SINGLE ONE, SO THAT IT ENABLES ME TO BUILD UP MY PATRONAGE AND HOLD IT. This, I consider, is very good business. Just as long as the Universal Animated Weekly continues to get the real live news, as it now does, it will convince me that I POSITIVELY CANNOT AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT IT EVERY WEEK. CANNED CANNIBALS

Screen Comedy Shows Wild Life As It Is NOT.

CANNED lobster will taste all the sweeter to you after you have seen William Franey "Canning the Cannibal King." The "kink" had a sweet little wife who took a strong liking to William, when she saw him emerging like Moses from the bulrushes, and William, having floated on a raft for twelve days without food or water, and having nothing else to do that morning, was mighty glad to have made such a deep impression on the queen. But life on the cannibal island was pretty strenuous and it was a very important question which one should be canned—Franey or the Queen's husband. That's what makes "Canning a Cannibal King" such a funny little Joker.

Russell B. Proctor, New York World:
"Realism in every foot."

Steve Rathbun, New York Eve. Sun:
"The plot? Tut, tut. It's there, so why worry? Come through yourself."

Jos. C. Reddy, New York Morning Telegraph:
"With a punch and a dash that should make it a success."

Victor Watson, New York American:
"The melodrama thrills; there is a veritable murrain of events."

Robert G. Welsh, New York Eve. Telegram:
"The latest and best crook play of the film."

"Zit," New York Journal:
"Remarkably thrilling . . . wonderfully entertaining . . . The best suspense drama New York has had for years."

"Come Through" is that master of melodrama—George Bronson Howard—at his best. It captured Broadway on the opening night and continued to play to capacity. It is not only extremely novel in plot, but it is directed and acted with much more than unusual skill.

"Come Through" is the only film play shown on Broadway this year that has received the enthusiastic and unqualified endorsement of every critic in Greater New York.

"Come Through" is the best State Rights opportunity on the market today. Positive record proof of its pulling power is your assurance of the way YOU can present this marvelous picture to the Exhibitors in your territory. Choice open territory awaiting negotiations. Don't be the last to apply. All communications answered in the order of their receipt. For Direct Bookings apply to any Universal Exchange. For State Rights address State Rights Department.

The Promise

Paramount Pictures Corporation announces today the titles of the first photoplays in each of the new star-series to be released on and after

August 5th, 1917

On that date will commence Paramount's new distributing plan of selective star-series booking.

Paramount Pictures are made in the four greatest studios in the world under the direction of an expert organization, backed by five years' experience in superlative picture-making.

By concentrating on the productions of each star, fitting to each the kind of photoplay in which the public most desires to see its favorite—a new era of exhibitors' prosperity is in sight.

The stars and titles on the opposite page compel attention.

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

JULY 14, 1917

ALBERT CAPELLANI ENGAGED TO DIRECT JULIA SANDERSON

ALBERT CAPELLANI has been engaged by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to direct Miss Julia Sanderson. Mr. Capellani is recognized as one of the world's foremost directors of motion pictures. The productions which he stages for Miss Sanderson will be made at the studios of the Empire All-Star Corporation and will be released through Mutual Exchanges everywhere.

Brilliant Career.

The career of Albert Capellani has been a brilliant one. Born and brought up in France he was artistic by nature, and early in life found the stage as a means of expression. His motion picture work began in the studios of Pathe Freres in Paris, where he was first assistant to a cameraman, later himself acted as cameraman and then rose to the post of director. In all he spent seven years in directing feature productions abroad, five of which were devoted to Pathe productions. Some three years ago he came to the United States and entered the World studios in New York as producing director. While here he made such notable pictures as "Camille," "The Face in the Moonlight," "The Flash of an Emerald" and "The Impostor." When Clara Kimball Young headed a company of her own, Mr. Capellani was engaged as her director, and he staged both "The Common Law" and "The Foolish Virgin." And now he feels that in Julia Sanderson, one of the latest of the Charles Frohman stars to be selected for screen work with the Empire All-Star Corporation, he has even more wonderful opportunities than have been offered him in the past.

Already at Work.

Mr. Capellani and Miss Sanderson are both now at work on the first of the big features to be released through Mutual Exchanges. The title and release date of the initial photoplay starring Miss Sanderson will be announced in due time. In the meanwhile exhibitors can make reservations at their nearest Mutual Exchange.

Captain Peacocke Will Act With Jackie Saunders

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, widely known as a short story writer, scenario editor, poet and playwright, will play an important role in the next Jackie Saunders Mutual release. He will appear as Jackie's millionaire father in the photoplay entitled "Betty Be Good," which is scheduled for release through Mutual Exchanges during the month of July.

WILLIAM RUSSELL CAST AS PUGILIST IN NEXT PHOTOPLAY

Those who enjoy seeing William Russell in roles of the sort in which he can display to the full his marvelous physique and real brawn will be delighted in the announcement that Mr. Russell will be cast as a pugilist in his next Mutual Picture. "Pride and the Man" is the title of the subject. In it Russell enacts the role of "Handsome Jack" Bronson, champion heavyweight and idol of the ring. The whole play fairly bristles with big scenes and action of the fastest sort. There is one prize fight scene that will give Russell fans a chance to behold their favorite in an actual ring battle. Supporting Mr. Russell in the production now in the making at the American studios at Santa Barbara are Francelia Billington, as the society girl who persuades the fighter to give up his ring career; Clarence Burton, George Fischer, Paul Weigil and Antrim Short. Bookings on the entire Russell Series of Mutual "Big Stars Only" Pictures can be made at Mutual Exchanges.

Exhibitors Praise "Railroad Raiders"

In the "What the Picture Did for Me" department of the June 30th issue of Motography, K. H. Sink, Pastime Theatre, Greenville, Ohio, says of "The Railroad Raiders"—"This is a sure-fire box office attraction and any exhibitor desiring to cash in should not overlook this bet. I consider the acting, story, directing, photography and settings first class." In the same publication W. C. Sutton, Bijou Theatre, Xenia, Ohio, says: "This serial has more than met our expectations. It is not only pleasing the fans in acting, story, direction, photography and settings, but also proving satisfactory financially. It is a No. 1 box office attraction."

MARJORIE RAMBEAU HAS SPLENDID ROLE IN "MARY MORELAND"

MARJORIE RAMBEAU, star of the Frank Powell productions released through Mutual Film Exchanges, has a splendid role in her newest offering. "Mary Moreland" is the title, and throughout the five acts of the drama Miss Rambeau is seen at her very best. The picture is released the week beginning July 9th.

A Harper's Bazaar Novel.

"Mary Moreland" is an adaptation of the Marie Van Vorst novel of the same name which was published serially in Harper's Bazaar. In its serial form the story was read by thousands of women the country over. As a book it sold even better than previous Van Vorst novels, and this celebrated author invariably finds her works among the "best sellers." Now in film form the exhibitor is enabled to appeal to the great number of readers of the serial or the book. For surely everyone who has read the story will be eager to see the pictured version of the same tale.

The story is a highly dramatic one, dealing with a love affair in the business world. Miss Rambeau is cast as Mary Moreland, the stenographer of Thomas Maugham, a broker. Maugham in dictating a letter to a friend in Boston reveals the unhappiness in his own home—the fact that he and his wife are not congenial. Mary sympathizes with him and suddenly finds herself overwhelmed by love for him. Accordingly when he seizes her in his arms she submits to his embrace. He suggests that she elope with him and makes all arrangements to meet her at the depot. A wire calls him unexpectedly to Boston, and from there Mary is summoned to join him. Before she departs Mary discovers that Mrs. Maugham really loves her husband and that there is every reason to believe the two can be reconciled. What then shall she do—go on with her affair—or send him back to his wife? Grimly dramatic are the scenes in which she makes her decision.

Released Week of July 9th.

"Mary Moreland" is released through Mutual Exchanges everywhere the week of July 9th. It is the sixth Marjorie Rambeau release. Now playing are "The Greater Woman," "Motherhood," "The Debt," "The Mirror" and "The Dazzling Miss Davison."

Exhibitors playing the Mutual Weekly will find views of unusual interest in No. 130, which pictures the first American troops leaving Paris for service at the front. These scenes can easily be made the feature attraction at any theatre on account of their popular appeal.

ARTCRAFT PICTURES

New York Press Reviews "Wild and Woolly"

No other actor so completely typifies the vim, dash and athletic prowess of rough outdoor life and adventure. And none is so independent of mawkish sensation to lend excitement to his feats.—N. Y. World.

With Douglas Fairbanks in the title role nothing could seem dull or slow. For the "movie fan" who appreciates good, snappy acting it is sure to have a strong appeal.—N. Y. Herald.

One needs no Palm Beach suit to derive the fullest pleasure watching him in warm weather—it makes one cool to see the way he breezes around.—The N. Y. Sun.

The story is a Western comedy-thriller, full of cowboys, Indians, bucking bronchos and six-shooters—tho needless to say the comedy portion of the story far outweighs the drama of it.—N. Y. American.

Douglas Fairbanks will appear at the Rialto this week and the program will be made up of musical and pictorial numbers selected for their special excellence and their ability to stand comparison with "Wild and Woolly," the picture in which he makes his second appearance as an Artcraft star.—Evening Telegram.

To say that this picture is entertaining is putting it mildly, but it is difficult to find words in which to fittingly describe Fairbanks' performance. If one did not know this popular comedian one would declare that the pictures were faked, for it seems impossible that any human being could do what Douglas does. The picture is undoubtedly the best thing he ever has done, altho one thinks that of each new offering. The humorous situations in it are delicious and frequent.—N. Y. Tribune.

New York's leading papers have acclaimed Douglas Fairbanks' second Artcraft picture. Great credit for this masterpiece of action, situation and comedy is also due John Emerson, who directed the picture; Anita Loos, who adapted the photoplay; and H. B. Capenter, who wrote the story.

Goldwyn Pictures for the Clean-Minded Millions

GOLDWYN PICTURES will be seen by millions of women and children with enjoyment instead of shame. They are censured in advance of production by clean-minded producers who have never on screen or stage catered to the lower or cheaper tastes.

They are the type of pictures that every organization of watchful men and women guarding against impurities or indecencies on the screen can indorse without a single reservation or exception.

They are stories of love and laughter, of honor and refinement, built to appeal to the mental and internal finenesses of the wholesome American people.

Goldwyn has recognized the necessity for screen betterments and staked a fortune upon its ability to gauge intelligently the desires and requirements of an enormous public throughout the world—the kind of a public we are most anxious to serve.

"ROSE O' PARADISE"

By GRACE MILLER WHITE

With her fiddle and a pail of kittens, "Jinnie" enters the world's arena.

Life's grime, its coarseness, its grisly passions cannot tarnish her faith in God's creatures.

Those twisted in spirit, those broken in body, are hers to love.

She gathers unto her faith a lame cobbler, a little blind boy, a murderous libertine, and a broken nosed puppy.

She initiates them in "The Happy in Spite" club.

She plays the song of God's faith on her fiddle and works the miracle of his love among halt humanity in life's backyard.

Says "Jinnie": "All you have to do to become a member of my club is to be "happy in spite", and believe everythin' happenin' is for the best."

The stars whose faces and names you see on this page have a proven box office value. They give to a distinction, a character, and a value that exhibitors and public alike appreciate.

"Pearl White is a favorite with our public."—T. R. Conlon, m'g'r Hippodrome, Portland, Ore.

"Pearl White has been on the Schindler screen for nearly 100 weeks. She has proven herself to be the greatest drawing star in my houses."—Ludwig Schindler, Manager Chicago M. P. Exposition, a well known exhibitor.

"Considering the many excellent actors and the many excellent pictures it is quite an achievement when a little girl of six or so can be placed on an equal plane with them. Baby Marie Osborne is the little girl under discussion and no amount of praise would be sufficient to describe the excellence of her latest vehicle 'Told at Twilight'."—Des Moines Capital.

"Those who witnessed the Baby Marie Osborne picture at the Princess Theatre yesterday were thoroughly delighted and the baby is now endeared in the hearts of many Charlestonians. Very enthusiastic over the attendance and the many complimentary remarks the management announces the determination to book all of such plays."—Charleston, S. C. American.

"All Los Angeles is discussing Florence LaBadie's superb characterization of Mary Murdock in 'Her Life and His', now playing at the Superba."—Los Angeles Examiner.

THE LAST OF THE CARNABYS

an intense dramatic production that is above par. If you have never played Miss Hulette you owe it to your box office to book her. By force of merit she has come to the front.

"The Gladys Hulette and Baby Osborne features are without exception the best we show as our box office statement shows. If all pictures were as clean as they are censorship would be a thing of the past.—"

Facts and Comments

JUST a word to the Chicago exhibitors who are finding fault with us because we will not champion their movement to form a petty independent organization. Once more let us say that the cause is greater than the individual. It is not the province of this paper to advocate the candidacy of anyone nor to suggest to the exhibitors whom they should elect to any office. It is our right to criticise the actions of any who may have sought office and has failed to meet the most ordinary requirements of the office or who may have sought and used the office for personal motives. That we are opposed to those that you may be opposed to does not mean that we must indorse your every act. There have been several withdrawals of city and state locals from the National League, every one of which we have deplored. Some of these locals have realized their mistake and have again returned to fight for the common cause of the exhibitor in the only way that they can effectively fight, viz., alongside of their brother exhibitors who are organized at least to some extent. Stay in the trenches—you can't do anything on the outside!

Reports that are pretty well authenticated are current through the trade in regard to deals, proposals and counter proposals on the part of some of the aspirants for the League presidency. Petty politics and wire pulling worthy of gangsters is not the sort of thing that is likely to inspire confidence and respect for the exhibitor or his end of the industry. The pity of it all is to see the only nucleus of organization among exhibitors in the country made the plaything, the stepping stone, the football of self-seekers after personal power and profit. The few men who have the interests of exhibitors genuinely at heart, who think of the exhibitors as a whole first, last and all the time, seem to be sadly in the minority. Right and equity and honesty will win eventually in this as in all things else we trust, but will it win this year? That's the question.

Gag rule with a vengeance and such as we venture to assert was never dreamed of by Joe Cannon or "Czar" Reed is exemplified in the following editorial paragraph from the self-styled organ of the Exhibitors' League. It surely will stand as one of the choice editorial efforts of a trimmer. Read it slowly and thoughtfully, please:

> The very moment a member of an organization takes his grievances, BE THEY JUST OR UNJUST, into the public prints, he commits an act of disloyalty. The organization in self-defense must punish such an offense with immediate expulsion of the offender

Ye gods and little fishes! If words do not fail to express our admiration, or ecstasy, our uncontrollable exuberance of spirit at such a gem of infinite wisdom. Talk about the deliverances of Portia; what would Gratiano have said to this? And this is what is to lead the exhibitors of America to—what did you call it, at Chicago. How can it fail?

Our readers will pardon reference to another quotation we read a week ago, which ran as follows:

> It must have been noticeable even to the simple minded that there are certain forces at work seeking to disrupt the exhibitors' organization. In this treacherous work weak and disloyal members are being used as tools by men who, for reasons best known to themselves, are afraid of a strong and united exhibitors' body.

Now let's see how this fits! It is just about a year ago that we had an election of officers of the Exhibitors' League at Chicago. Interests prominently connected with the publicity departments of one of our manufacturing and distributing concerns took a most active part in working for the election of the present President. What was their interest? To launch a new paper, under the prestige of the League president, nothing more and nothing less, and these same interests are strongly represented on the paper along with the League's president to this day. Was this looking out for the exhibitors' interest? Again, has it not been established beyond the shadow of a doubt and dare not be denied that the plans for launching this paper were already well under way long before the convention last year and that the present incumbent sought the office primarily if not solely in the interest of the personal scheme of himself and his friends. And some of the henchmen who helped elect him were already slated as future members of the staff of the paper, despite denials galore. Was this in the interest of the exhibitors of the country?

Our last questions are simply these: are these same men likely to have the interests of the exhibitor any more at heart today? Who has been guilty of the really treacherous and disloyal work to the cause of the exhibitors' organization?

The Outlook

By Louis Reeves Harrison

Listen to the man who has been stung!
He will tell you there is to be trouble
All along the line in this business,
Because people have been deeply stirred
And the country is engaged in war.
This self-same prophecy has been made
In years gone by for other reasons.
Hundreds of men have lost money
By going into the new art wrongly,
But never was opportunity wider,
Bigger, better and more certain
Of large reward than at present.
The art has been misrepresented,
Especially in the productive end,
By men not content with the eggs
Of gold laid patiently day by day.
They must kill the goose and get all.
They wanted too much at one time.
They paid themselves big salaries,
Ran up knockout overhead charges,
Indulged in elaborate publicity,
Put up a front in swell offices,
And milked profits dry in advance.
The only economy they exercised
Was to pay as little as possible
For that first and foremost essential
Of success, the story to be visualized.
There has never yet been a failure
To make profits on a very large scale.
Where great care was shown in artistry,
If the story itself was a good one,
And was suited to screen presentation.
This truth has been strongly illustrated
In the case of three well-known companies
Now completely gone out of existence.
It is impossible to give accurate data,
But enough of their inside circumstances
Is known to reach true conclusions.
All three had plenty of good money,
For immediate operations, with reserves
To draw upon in unexpected emergencies.
All three were started in good faith,
With sincerity of purpose and principle.
All three were conducted by honest men
And contained others of tried experience.
All three reached fine organization
In office and factory and in studio.
All three engaged the best of actors,
The best directors and the best cameramen.
All three had the brightest of prospects.
But—and here lies the secret of failure—
All three disregarded the importance
Of an evenly balanced composition.
Supposedly engaged in the production
Of moving pictures, a law to themselves,
These concerns reflected theatricalism.
It was a case of this star or that play
Of some past success on Broadway.
Often of times gone by and forgotten.
Some very exceptional performers
Have come to us from the theaters,
And the backbone of studio companies
Is stiffened by thorough stage training.
Acknowledging all that can be claimed
For good actors of every description,
And giving most thoughtful consideration
To the importance of strong personality,
Those actors were accustomed to utterance.
Some of them were entirely dependent
On uttered sentiment and voice intonation.
A stage role of tremendous opportunity
May hinge on brilliant conversation,
A struggle of wits or of passion.
Those same actors might do equally well
If given true motion picture opportunity
When called upon for screen performance,
But they were usually asked for repetition
And pure reflection of stage ideals.
Their old medium was handed to a novice
For highly unintelligent transformation
With a miserable hodge-podge resultant.
The actor really lost reputation
From sheer lack of suitable occasion
To express himself as he would like to.
He was not given the right medium.
And the audience was not given a good story.
In all three of the beforenamed companies
There were rare and profitable exceptions,
Stories written with full comprehension
Of audience demand and screen requirement,
And in every case these paid handsomely.
There was not an exception to this rule.
Profits by tens of thousands of dollars
Rolled in when the thing was done rightly
With a balance in all parts of production.
In not a single case was it recognized
That the highest artistic interpretation
May fall down when applied to the trivial.
Thus was good capital and energy wasted.
Right there was the secret of failure.
All three companies should have profited
By a very obvious and pointed lesson,
But in no case could they see it clearly.
There were other causes of these failures,
But the main one could have been obviated.
So when a man talks about this business
As one not having the best of prospects,
He is one who does not understand it.
He would be a failure if he was in it.
It is an art of personal interpretation
Of stories both vital and interesting,
Well composed for screen presentation
By creative and constructive authorship.
That is strongly shown in recent examples.
Look back of every paying proposition
And you will find there has been skill
Shown in all three of the departments,
Authorship, directing and in personality.
It is a question of composite artistry.
Production has been without system.
Thousands of feet taken uselessly,
Mere waste of film and of salaries,
Which could have been easily avoided.
There has been an era of weak extravagance
Which has contributed to business failure.
Those soreheads who are using the megaphone
To denounce present business conditions
Simply publish their own incompetency.
The outlook is just as it has been,
Always good for productions of merit.
But the highest artistic production
May fall down when applied to the trivial.

Everything Set for the Convention

By Sam Spedon

YOU have read of the different shifts and changes of the stars, directors and many other aspects of the industry; all matters of news and nine day wonders. Keep your ears to the ground, there are rumblings of approaching surprises already on their way, this business is full of them. We have written columns already on the Chicago convention and it is now only one week away; by the time some of our far distant readers peruse these pages it will be well under way. Everything is set for the great pow-wow and it will soon be a thing of the past. Everything will be over but the shouting. We don't know who is going to be elected president of the National League; we hope somebody will, who will do big things, do them right and for the best interests of the whole industry. We don't know what the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is going to do. We will be there and watch all the proceedings with great interest and you will get a full report of them in the Moving Picture World during the conventions, supplemented by our views after it is over. We say conventions because the exhibitors, the National Association F. I. L. M. clubs and the Association of Motion Picture Engineers will all convene within the same week, July 14 to 22. We will be there and we hope to meet everybody else there. If you can possibly go, don't wish you had gone. It will be well worth the time and money.

Better Theaters.

To the contrary notwithstanding we believe that the general tendency of the exhibitors who can do it is to build larger, more commodious and elegant theaters, with every convenience and up to date improvements. This applies to every community that has the patronage to support such theaters even in smaller places, where there is a possibility of securing the patronage in opposition to a competing house which is lacking in the comforts, such as ventilation, well upholstered and roomy seats, stage setting, music, retiring rooms, etc., etc. There is no use deceiving ourselves or being deceived; we are face to face with an increasing demand for better theaters and every exhibitor has got to realize it sooner or later or be eliminated by the man who is on the job and can secure the where-with-all to keep apace with the times. Every place we go and every issue of the trade papers bring before us news of large and larger theaters that are being built or planned for erection. These are only the signs of the times in conformity with the popular demand and the development of motion pictures. Unquestionably this is the result of the better pictures and their growing popularity that have bettered the class of people who are now attending the theaters. Everything is keeping apace with the character of the productions

Chains of Theaters.

In almost every city today we find certain exhibitors who are owners of a chain of theaters embracing from six to twelve and in many cases there are many more, including links in different cities. In almost every instance these places of amusement are, in exterior and interior architecture, an attraction and a credit to the communities where they are located. We are convinced that this chain system is only another indication of a more stabilized phase of the industry developed by serious minded business men.

Publicity Promoters.

The film industry has evolved many new occupations. The most remarkable is the publicity promoter who makes a specialty of securing publicity for actors and actresses who would shine prominently or more brilliantly in the firmament of constellated film stars. The publicity promoter charges the aspirants ten dollars a week and up to procure free publicity in different publications, for which he receives weekly sums from his several clients. He makes the publications part of his plant and pays nothing for it and says: "See what a smart boy am I." In other words, the publications make it possible for the promoter to do business and he gives nothing for it.

What of Your Old Negatives?

IN view of the vast amount of motion picture production during the past few years and of the comparatively small percentage of reprints it would be interesting to know what may have become of the countless thousands of feet of negatives after the prints were made and distributed. It seems probable that a large percentage of finished negatives has been destroyed as having no further value from a reprint standpoint. On the other hand, negatives of many notable productions have been kept intact with a view to their future usefulness. This will also apply to negatives portraying scenes and incidents of a personal nature which in many instances it is impossible to duplicate. Under these circumstances it would be of interest to learn what care and methods of prevention have been adopted to insure with reasonable certainty that, when required, fresh prints may be reproduced.

The making of photographic images on nitro cellulose base is of comparatively recent origin, and for this reason there are no long standing records to act as precedent in establishing physical and chemical stability such as would be required where intrinsic value may be endangered as a result of deterioration.

A study of old photographs where the image is impressed on paper proves that the permanency of the image depends on the skill and care exercised in the various manipulations which it has to undergo, but whether the image is on plates, paper or film, thorough fixing together with the removal of the hyposulphite of soda by careful washing is absolutely necessary.

The same statement holds good with amateur snapshot negatives which are basically the same as motion picture film and receive practically the same general treatment, with the exception that while amateur film negatives are usually preserved in envelopes or albums made for the purpose, motion picture negatives are rolled in solid mass and stored, frequently without particular attention, in a vault or safe where atmospheric conditions may be directly contrary to their physical requirements.

It seems reasonable to infer that a portion at least of the millions of feet of negatives used has not received the care necessary to promote permanency, and also that insufficient attention has been given to the best possible methods of storage.

In view of these uncertainties which may prove to be detrimental to the preservation of valuable negatives, occasional examination would be advisable, and if evidence of deterioration is present, copies should at once be made and every attention given to detail in the fixing, washing and storing, in order as far as possible to insure the life and durability for future requirements.

Herrington a Candidate for President

WE have been expecting this announcement, although it was not until this past week that Mr. Herrington openly said he would run for the presidency of the League. He was elected president of the National League at San Francisco in July, 1915, where the organization was representative by only a handful of delegates; in fact it was a remnant of what had once been the National Exhibitors' League of America. He took the reins of office and in July, 1916, handed his gavel to the present incumbent to control one of the largest, or possibly the largest representations of the league that ever assembled in convention during its history.

Fred J. Herrington.

Mr. Herrington also left the league with a surplus in its treasury, free from debt and an exposition which netted it $26,000, only $5,000 of which amount was turned over to the national treasurer, the balance being misappropriated by private individuals after Herrington had been superseded by the present officers. At the last convention, July, 1916, Mr. Herrington was appointed National Organizer and has succeeded in bringing into the national body many new states and all of the states which had seceded or had become disorganized. Mr. Herrington says he presents himself as a candidate on his record and achievements, believing that actions speak louder than words, and more than this he sayeth not.

Why Turn the Screen Theater Into a Lecture Room

By Edward Weitzel.

AN important but far from settled question relative to the art of the moving picture is proper nomenclature descriptive of its many forms. We speak of the screen in exact comparison to the stage, but this is an error. The stage means a place where plays are performed—the home of the drama. We use the word screen as the place where the photoplay is shown, but the screen is not restricted to the silent drama alone. No matter what class of subject, it is presented to the spectator by the same medium. In the same way, whether upon the stage or the platform or in the pulpit, the message of the actor, the theme of the lecturer or the theology of the divine is conveyed by the spoken word—the power of speech.

The sooner the moving picture is as clearly defined and names are found to designate its several functions, and the photodrama is put in a class by itself, the better for the art. At the present time, that which is a lecture or a sermon when delivered by word of mouth is shown on the screen under the name of photoplay.

The time unquestionably is coming when eminent professors will diffuse their scientific knowledge and reformers their propaganda by means of a screen set up in the lecture room. Eloquent spiritual lessons will also be seen in churches given over to the silent sermon, and the screen theater will be left to its highest and best mission—to amuse, to entertain, to recreate.

Any one familiar with the history of the spoken stage knows the battle it has been forced continually to wage to free itself of the dead weight that many serious-minded but mistaken individuals think it should carry. If left to themselves they would have the laughter, the wit and the simulation of the tragic muse relegated to the background, and would serve the same mental fare as that provided by the pulpit and the platform. The result would be acute cerebral indigestion brought on by overfeeding under improper conditions. Fortunately, there have always been sufficient wellwishers of the stage whose clearness of vision recognize the harm consequent upon thus perverting one of the most healthful diversions given to man and robbing it of its highest benefit.

To amuse, to entertain, to recreate; that is the mission of the stage. It is also the mission of the screen theater. Whatever of instruction may be derived from the photoplay, it should not be delivered in the form of a preachment or a bald statement of facts that do not stimulate the imagination, that merely numb it with the drab side of life.

Going in the Discard

ANNOUNCEMENT was made in the columns of the Moving Picture World for July 7 that the K-E-S-E service had definitely abolished the practice of demanding advance deposits from exhibitors as a guarantee of payment of film service. In keeping with this announcement it was further stated that all moneys held on deposit had been returned to exhibitors.

Under existing conditions K-E-S-E and its executive head, George Kleine, are entitled to commendation for the courage required to take such a step. There are certain aspects of the deposit system that make it attractive to exhibitor and manufacturer alike and are calculated to give the concern which continues the practice an advantage in the competitive field of motion pictures. On the other hand, the deposit system gave birth to a species of unfair competition, or, rather, served to stifle fair competition by enabling those exhibitors who could afford to tie up large sums of money in the form of deposits to create a monopoly of the best pictures.

Naturally, this condition caused great dissatisfaction among the exhibitors.

There were also grave abuses of the advance deposit system. Concerns formed to make pictures had not sufficient capital and made up their deficits from the sums obtained from exhibitors as advance deposits. This method of hypothecating deposits was dangerous in the extreme, for while there is no record of any producing company defaulting, the method of doing business is not a sound one and smacks too much of wildcat speculating.

It was when the exhibitors began to realize that there was great danger of losing their deposit money that they woke up and began to demand that the system be abolished.

The outcry has been great, until now it looks that serious consequences might result if the practice complained of is not generally abandoned by the manufacturers and distributors. Mr. Kleine realizes that contented patrons are to be preferred to contentious ones, even though it places him at the material disadvantage of demanding cash in advance for each separate item of service supplied his patrons if they come under the class not entitled to unlimited credit.

The exhibitor's business with his patrons is on a cash basis, so there is no reason why he should not do a cash business with his exchange. It is the system originally in vogue and it is timely to return to it now. Mr. Kleine deserves credit in being the first to take the step in that direction.

Let advance deposits go into the discard.

"Tay Pay" Talks of Film Censorship

Noted Publicist and President of the British Board Explains His Views to World Readers

T. P. O'CONNOR ("Tay Pay"), Nationalist leader in Parliament and president of the British Board of Film Censors, has taken the opportunity of his present visit to the United States to explain to the film trade of this country the way in which film censorship is done in Great Britain. Mr. O'Connor is a friendly man, tall, robust, and of untiring energy. He receives hordes of visitors daily and is anxious to do all he can for everyone. Although his mission here is a political one, he wishes also to meet the film men who manufacture 95 per cent. of the films exhibited in Great Britain.

With this high percentage of American films on the British market, the fate of the American film in Great Britain cannot be called tragic. But it is important that American film manufacturers understand the principles governing the British Board of Film Censors. This board, at the beginning of the present year, reviewed about 60 per cent. of all the films exhibited in Great Britain. But this percentage has rapidly increased since.

T. P. ("Tay Pay") O'Connor.

"The British Board of Film Censors is managed by a committee appointed by the three branches of the film industry: the manufacturers, the exhibitors, and the renters, or middlemen, as you would call them here," said Mr. O'Connor to a reporter for the Moving Picture World. "The functions of the board, of course, are to examine the films and pass or reject those brought before them.

"The practical work is done by four examiners. I was elected president, I may say, without in any way applying for the place, by a unanimous vote of all the branches of the trade, and I started my work about the middle of January of this year. My appointment is only for one year, both at the desire of the trade as well as of myself.

"The four examiners sit in a room in the office of the board. All films that are to be examined must be brought to this room. There are two screens. Two examiners sit before each screen so that two films are examined simultaneously. Films are not usually passed without the unanimity of the examiners.

"My function begins when a question of principle is to be decided, and in all cases where there is either a difference of opinion among the four examiners or some doubt or hesitation in their minds as to the course they should adopt.

"I am appealed to frequently. My office is by no means a sinecure. The work of the film censor is by no means as agreeable as it appears on the surface. For, you have to consider every particular case and the principle which is involved in the case. For instance, you pass on certain figures, of, say, rather scanty attire. You are apt to be flooded with pictures carrying that feature to the greatest extremes. The result of it is that our judgment has to be arrived at not merely on the basis of the subject filmed; we must have regard to a certain set of general principles.

"But, on the other hand, it is impossible to lay down, even in the most carefully chosen language, general principles which cannot be proved inconsistent.

"For instance, one of the first things I did was to make the restrictions much more severe concerning what has become known as the 'crook' film. The principle I laid down, and which had already been laid down, was that crime should not be shown, although it is inevitably a part of human life, except as it was a part of the society in which it occurred; that it should be episodic, that is to say, as it took place in life, in the life of society, as an incident, not as a representation of the whole of life. Further, that we were to exclude altogether the representation of crime in its more horrible aspects; that is, such representation as was outside the realm of true art, and besides calculated to demoralize and lower the standard. Finally, we excluded all 'crook' films in which the sympathy was for the criminal, unless it could be shown either that he was the victim of unfortunate environment, or that by his long repentance and restitution, he had purged himself of his crime.

"The film trade was generally unanimous in its assent to these rulings. And yet an incident occurred which illustrates that the censorship of films is not so simple as it appears. I got an admirably written letter which told a story which, under the rulings I have just set forth, would apparently have to be excluded. The letter told a story that had as its dramatis personae a trainer of thieves, several thieves, a burglar, and a murderer. It was simply a cleverly disguised version of 'Oliver Twist,' which, of course, has been produced hundreds of times in the films, and which I would never think of rejecting. My answer was that the rules laid down by the censors were not the same as statute law, which, whatever the results, must be interpreted literally. Statute law has to be interpreted according to the exact phraseology, no matter what the original purpose of the law was. But the rules the censors lay down are subject to the interpretation of the men who make them, and that interpretation, of course, must be in a broad and rational spirit.

"I do not wish to mention the names of the examiners because they are men who wish to avoid all publicity. They are known to the film trade. They are all modest men who want to do their work in silence. I may say, however, that one of these men is a University graduate and a man of very high intelligence. Another is a man who was a high official in a bank for many years. He has a pension and has taken up the work of the board more or less to escape the effects of being idle after so many years of active work. The third man is a very prominent and intelligent man; and the fourth has been associated with me for forty years and is a very conscientious man. I cannot speak too highly of the industry and patience and conscientiousness of these men. They sit from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 or 6 in the evening every day, year in and year out, to properly perform their duties.

"Exhibitors do not as a rule appear in behalf of their pictures. They have a right to appear, if they wish. Of course, also, if an exhibitor desires to consult me on any question I am always at his service. I am glad to say that sometimes, I think, I have managed to be of some use to the exhibitor by making suggestions to those who have offered their films for criticism before being passed upon.

"I need not say that when a great film is presented to me in which vast sums of money have been sunk—although I cannot allow even that fact to influence me in my judgment—I try to make suggestions that will help to pass it. One film, for instance, I saw five times, each time occupying three and one-half hours. I am glad to say changes I suggested were adopted and the film is now a great success.

"The trade does not question our judgment in any way whatever. I can remember that they have come to the board over and over again asking the board to act as a dictator. They trust in our judgment. We have the responsibility and they in no way desire to weaken it."

Ince Goes to Art-Craft-Paramount

Producer Will Continue to Work in California—To Have Full Rein Over His Productions.

THOMAS H. INCE, well known director and producer, whose resignation from Triangle Film Corporation was reported two weeks ago, has completed arrangements with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation whereby all Thomas H. Ince productions will henceforth be released by Artcraft and Paramount. This deal involves the entire Ince organization, which has long held the reputation of being one of the most highly organized units in the motion picture industry.

Thomas H. Ince Signing Up With Artcraft-Paramount.

By the terms of the agreement, which was entered into with Mr. Ince by Adolph Zukor, Hiram Abrams and Walter E. Greene for Famous Players-Lasky, Paramount and Artcraft respectively, all productions which Mr. Ince supervises personally will be released by Artcraft and all others by Paramount.

Mr. Ince will continue to make his producing headquarters in California and expects to return to the coast in short time to begin active work on productions under the new releasing arrangement.

"My association with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes as the result of careful deliberation and of a painstaking study of motion picture conditions," declared Mr. Ince in discussing his new affiliation. "I have reached a point where a few dollars more or less do not mean as much to me as happiness in my business relations and to know that my efforts for the industry are in sympathy with the most progressive and lasting policies. It was the outsider's viewpoint which I sought, plus that of the enlightened exhibitor."

Mr. Zukor paid a high compliment to Mr. Ince in the few brief remarks which he made concerning this important transaction.

"As a producer and as a man Thomas Ince has always commanded my highest admiration and respect," declared Mr. Zukor. "There is an individuality stamped upon every one of his productions which gives it a flavor all its own. They are full of vitality and of real American manhood—the pictures with a punch which the red-blooded American likes to see. That is why we proffered the tremendous facilities of our distributing organization to Mr. Ince when we learned that he was free to make new distributing arrangements.

"The well-recognized genius of Mr. Ince will be untrammeled in the production of his pictures and he will have full rein over his own extremely efficient organization. We may therefore look to Mr. Ince for the best of which he is capable, with his exceptional personality and genius finding complete expression in every production that bears his name."

Sennett, Too, Goes With Paramount.

MACK SENNETT, known throughout the world as producer of Keystone comedies, completed arrangements Friday, June 29, with Paramount Pictures Corporation for the release of all his future productions through Paramount. Mr. Sennett the previous week had severed his connection with the Triangle Film Corporation and there had been much conjecture as to his future plans. Mr. Sennett is to produce independently, and will issue a two-reel comedy through Paramount every other week.

For several days Mr. Sennett and Charles O. Bauman, business associate with Mr. Sennett in his new enterprises, and formerly vice-president of the New York Motion Pictures Corporation, had been in conference in New York with Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation. Arthur Butler Graham was Mr. Sennett's attorney in the transaction.

Mr. Sennett stated that he will leave for the Pacific Coast next week and will produce his pictures in Edendale, Cal. In his announcement regarding his new association with Paramount Mr. Sennett did not refer to the players who will appear in his company.

Coming directly after the announcement that Thomas H. Ince will also produce for Paramount and Artcraft, the statement of Mr. Sennett's association with Famous Players-Lasky created considerable comment in motion picture circles.

Mack Sennett is the creator of the style of comedies he produces—pictures which have created laughs the world over.

Thomas Ince, who on June 28 announced that he had decided to release productions through Artcraft and Paramount, lost no time in getting busy. Less than twenty-four hours after the deal had been consummated, Ince had packed bag and baggage and was headed for the balmy climes of California without knowing exactly where he will produce. Several California towns have offered to build a studio for Ince, without cost to him, provided he will locate in their locality. It is certain that Ince's studio will be built near Los Angeles, the film-producing center of the United States.

Triangle Issues a Statement.

The following statement was issued from the offices of the Triangle Distributing Corporation on June 28 to all exhibitors:

"During the past few weeks there have been carried in the trade papers and motion picture journals many rumors about the future of the Triangle. At first we felt it would be best not to comment on these one way or the other; but, after due consideration, we feel that the exhibitors are entitled to know the true status of conditions.

"For this reason, we take great pleasure in announcing to you and to every other exhibitor that the future of Triangle was never more assured than it is at present. A complete reorganization and consolidation of the producing plants has made it possible to bring the production of a picture down to a scientific business basis. All waste is eliminated, making it possible to spend a specified amount of money for each picture, wherein the entire value goes into the production of the picture itself, a plan that has heretofore not been followed.

"The direction of all productions will be in the hands of the best directors that can possibly be secured—the plan of organization making it possible for these directors to work almost as one on the production of any picture. In this way, full advantage is given to the exhibitor of every dollar spent upon each production.

"After productions have been made they will all undergo the most rigid criticism by people capable of passing on the merits of a production, and when any picture falls below the standard it will not be released but another will be substituted in its place, assuring every exhibitor of a consistent program of the highest quality at all times.

"There will be Stars in future productions such as have been on Triangle productions in the past; but it will be the intent to help the exhibitor advertise pictures and service at the same time that he is advertising such Stars.

"We are perfectly willing to submit our future business policies to the business men in the exhibiting end and we do not think that we will suffer by the final analysis. Our service will not be excelled by any distributing organization today. It will be our desire to co-operate and assist and help the exhibitor to make the Triangle Program an asset to his house. Our pictures will be made from well-known plays that carry an advertising value at all times."

Chaplin Signs With Exhibitors' Circuit

Famous Comedian To Receive $1,075,000—Will Produce Eight Pictures at Rate of One Every Two Months.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN has contracted with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to produce eight pictures. He is to receive a salary of $1,000,000 and a bonus of $75,000. Chaplin will produce one comedy every two months. He will begin work on the first as soon as he has completed his present work as his last Mutual release.

Official announcement of the signing of Chaplin has not yet been made by the Exhibitors' Circuit. Los Angeles despatches state that the comedian made the announcement of his new affiliation on Saturday, June 30. This intelligence followed that of Friday from Chicago, which was to the effect that representatives of the Circuit had held a meeting in the Congress Hotel there, but had given no information as to the purpose of the meeting. It was learned, however, that Chaplin had been signed before the Chicago meeting and that that meeting had been held mostly for the discussion of the distribution of the new Chaplin pictures.

In this connection much significance is attached to the fact that Lewis J. Selznick, head of the Selznick Enterprises, Inc., and Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, were in Chicago and in the Congress Hotel during the meeting of the Circuit men. Mr. Selznick and Mr. Zukor did not attend the meeting. That the presence of Mr. Selznick and Mr. Zukor in Chicago during the meeting had something to do with the signing of Chaplin by the Circuit is the belief of well-informed film men. This is especially credible in view of the fact that the Exhibitors' Circuit have had an option on Chaplin's service for some time and that one of the big factors to be decided before announcing the acquisition of the comedian was to come to a decision on a method of distribution of the pictures. Mr. Selznick controls many of his own exchanges and some others and Mr. Zukor's control of Paramount, through his position with Famous Players-Lasky, is well known.

These members of the Exhibitors' Circuit in attendance at the meeting in Chicago on Friday were S. L. Rothapfel, president, and J. D. Williams, general manager, of New York; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; F. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; Thomas Saxe and J. E. Saxe, Milwaukee; Harry Schwalke, Philadelphia; William Sievers, St. Louis; Al Gilligham, Detroit; N. H. Gordon, Boston; Mr Gattstein, Seattle; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas; Harry Troll, St. Louis; T. L. Tally, Los Angeles, and Aaron J. Jones, Nate Ascher and Adolph Linick, Chicago.

The meeting on Friday was preceded by a luncheon on Thursday.

Chaplin is to have a free hand in the production of his pictures, he was given to understand. Each picture will be two reels in length, and he will have sixteen months to make them—one every two months; but no arbitrary release date. Chaplin, it is stated, will especially aim at making his pictures of a higher and better quality than any yet turned out by him. Every one of the pictures he makes for the Exhibitors' Circuit will be as high class in every respect as he can make it. In the event that a picture is finished and finally is believed not up to the required standard, Chaplin will destroy it and immediately begin over again. It is the comedian's avowed intention, with this series of eight pictures, to establish an artistic reputation rather than amass more money.

The salary paid Chaplin—$1,075,000—is the highest ever paid a man in any walk of life for a like period of time. Under his Mutual Contract Chaplin receives $670,000 a year for twelve pictures. Recently Mutual offered him $1,000,000 for twelve pictures, but he turned down the proposition.

Each of the twenty-five members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be taxed a pro-rata sum to pay Chaplin's salary.

President Wilson Calls Upon Film Industry

William A. Brady, Responding for Associates, Declares Every Co-operation Will Be Extended.

Washington, D. C., July 2.

THE motion picture industry of the United States has been requested to step up and "do its bit" in much the same manner as the newspapers, and it is President Wilson who has made the request. In a letter addressed to William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the President states that the film has come to rank as the very high medium for the dissemination of public intelligence, and, since it speaks a universal language, it lends itself importantly to the presentation of America's plans and purposes.

This is perhaps the first time in its history that the motion picture industry has been so officially acknowledged. It puts it on the plane with the newspaper and the magazine, or perhaps slightly above either of these in some respects, in that it speaks a universal language. The invitation to the industry and the appointment of Mr. Brady as chairman of the motion picture committee to bring about the many things that can be accomplished by the utilization of the motion picture screens, as well as Mr. Brady's reply, are contained in the following letters:

Washington, 28 June, 1917.

Mr. William A. Brady, New York City.

It is in my mind not only to bring the motion picture industry into fullest and most effective contact with the nation's needs, but to give some measure of official recognition to an increasingly important factor in the development of our national life. The film has come to rank as the very high medium for the dissemination of public intelligence, and since it speaks a universal language it lends itself importantly to the presentation of America's plans and purposes.

May I ask you, as chairman by my appointment, to organize the motion picture industry in such manner as to establish direct and authoritative co-operation with the Committee on Public Information, of which Mr. George Creel is chairman?

It is much to ask, but my knowledge of the patriotic service already rendered by you and your associates make me count upon your generous assistance.

Cordially and sincerely yours,
WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. Brady's reply is as follows:

New York, June 30, 1917.

The President of the United States, the White House, Washington, D. C.
Dear Mr. President:

I am in receipt of your highly esteemed favor of June 28 requesting me as chairman by your appointment to organize the motion picture industry in such manner as to establish direct and authoritative co-operation with the Committee on Public Information of which Mr. George Creel is chairman. In the full appreciation of all that is entailed in bringing about the desired conditions under which the motion picture industry will throw its weight to the last ounce into the task confronting the American people I accept your commission with enthusiasm. The devoted men and women of the motion picture world have already shown their eager loyalty to the country's cause with a spontaneous fervor entirely beyond words, and in speaking thus for them I but feebly reflect the [illegible] sentiments which fill their hearts. I hereby assure you of the undivided conscientious and patriotic support of the entire industry in America. I have the honor to be

Your obedient servant,
WILLIAM A. BRADY.
President National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of America.

Universal Shows Pershing in France

Scenes of General's Greeting at Sea Port and in Paris Arouse Great Enthusiasm at Rialto.

THE value of the motion picture screen as a medium for the dissemination of news is demonstrated by the release last week of a special edition of a moving picture weekly.

The Universal has issued a film 650 feet long showing the arrival of General Pershing in France and his reception there. This film came across on the same ship which brought the still photographs published in the daily papers. It was shown at the Rialto on Thursday night without sub-titles. On Friday afternoon it was exhibited to the trade press with all its sub-titles complete. It was at the White House on Friday night. By that time 150 copies were in circulation covering the length and breadth of the country.

The picture shows the arrival of General Pershing in France and his reception there by French and English military officers. Then we see him board the train for Paris, leave the train at Paris, and driven through the streets followed by immense throngs to his hotel. And we see him address a few words to the multitude from the balcony of the hotel.

The scenes are clear. There are as many as half a dozen close-ups of General Pershing. These are the only close-ups of the general, it is reported, that have been obtained for the screen. None were taken while the troops were at the Mexican border. General Pershing would not allow a moving picture photographer to travel with the troops.

The picture will be offered to the Federal Government. It may be used by the Public Information Committee which is planning to have four-minute speeches delivered each night in practically every motion picture theatre in the United States by a corps of fifteen thousand volunteer speakers. To provide for the use of the picture in such a program titles have been written to bring out the patriotic significance of the scenes shown. Some of the titles are strained and forced, but on the whole they are satisfactory.

When this picture was shown at the Rialto enthusiasm ran high. Applause was continuous throughout the picture. It was broken only by the laughter provoked when General Pershing rubbed his nose vigorously as he was leaving the ship.

Pennsylvania Holds Sixth Convention

John O'Donnell of Philadelphia Elected President—G. W. Sahner Is National Vice-President.

THE sixth annual state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, opened promptly at 10:30 A. M., on Monday, June 25, in the auditorium of the American Photoplayer Company, on the eighth floor of the Parkway Building. G. W. Sahner, president, and F. J. Herrington, national organizer, were the principal speakers and struck the important topic of censorship. They said that it had proved a farce so far as regulation was concerned and that it had worked harm to the moving picture business. The prediction was made that the censorship would soon pass away.

E. J. Cattell, who represented Mayor Smith, delivered an address of welcome. The response was made by John O'Donnell, president of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League.

The report by the registration committee showed that nearly forty out-of-town members had arrived on the first day.

At 1:30 P. M. the doors of the main exhibition room were thrown open to the public and presented a most inspiring sight. American flags were in evidence everywhere and the exchange booths and exhibitions were made up in a very attractive manner.

B. Amsterdam, chairman and treasurer; C. H. Goodwin, secretary; S. B. Blatt, master of ceremonies, and John O'Donnell and B. Shindler, general exposition committee, had done their part well and every detail was worked out in clock-work style. Every available bit of floor space was sold. Among the handsomest of the exchange booths were Pathe, where Pearl White on Tuesday night gave out hundreds of carnations to a large crowd of admirers.

J. Milder of the Selznick Corporation had a handsome booth, as did the George Kleine Poster Company, World Film Corporation, Peerless Feature Film Exchange, the Ideal, the Supreme, the American Fotoplayer, the Bluebird and Universal, Airsweet, Metro, Fox and Mutual.

The first night brought immense crowds. The public swarmed in, and for a time everything loose at the booths was being grabbed by the souvenir hunters. H. Osborne, of Pathe, gave out pretty souvenirs, pincushions and puzzles. At the Bluebird booth V. R. Carrick and Allen May were busily engaged in holding the crowd in check, while Violet Mersereau, the Bluebird star, read palms and told fortunes for the benefit of the Red Cross. The sum of $41.50 was collected and turned over to the society. Over at the World Film booth, Alice Brady, Caryle Blackwell, Harley Knoles, the director, and Madge Evans were the center of attraction and received many admiring glances from the movie fans.

Dancing, motion pictures and refreshments kept everybody in good humor, and there seemed to be nothing lacking for a general good time. In addition souvenirs were distributed to all visitors at the booths and an especially appointed ladies' committee distributed flowers and patriotic emblems. On this committee were Mrs. J. O'Donnell, Mrs. C. H. Goodwin, Mrs. B. Amsterdam, Mrs. E. Greenberg, Miss M. Reeves and Miss M. Strain. The ladies' committee also arranged automobile tours for the wives and relatives of the delegates.

Tuesday's Session.

The main feature of Tuesday's meeting was the discussion by Mr. Sahner of another pending bill of a tax of a cent a foot on moving pictures and the subject of barring children under sixteen years of age from attending the picture theaters unaccompanied. Sam Spedon, of the Moving Picture World, delivered an interesting speech upon the public's relations to the silent drama. W. Stephen Bush also spoke.

On Tuesday night the grand banquet was held at the Adelphia Roof, where a large number of exhibitors and exchange men with their friends and families were brought together.

The special guests of the evening were Miss Pearl White of Pathe, who made a speech and later enjoyed several dances with a few lucky boys; Gertrude Hoffman, C. R. Seeley and W. A. S. Douglas. The Vitagraph visitors were Marion Fouche and William Dunn. All of these guests attracted considerable admiration and held the attention of everyone.

After the usual photographic stunt the orchestra opened the ceremonies with "The Star Spangled Banner." In addition to the tenor, Thomas Murray, there was home talent—J. Heenan of the Vitagraph, and Allen May of the Bluebird, who sang well.

J. O'Donnell acted as toastmaster. He introduced George W. Sahner, the president, for the initial speech. Then followed Pearl White and C. R. Seeley. During Mr. Seeley's speech he made an impressive point concerning the future welfare of the exhibitors. The other speakers of the evening were Fred Herrington, John Clark, manager of Paramount, G. Meeker of World, George Denbow of Fox, Harvey Dey

The winners of the Liberty Bond, awarded to the best dancing couple of the evening, were Mr. and Mrs. J. O'Donnell. The prize was awarded by the committee, consisting of Pearl White, George Denbow, George Meeker and A. Osborne.

Wednesday's Session.

An important meeting was held on Wednesday morning when the following nominations were made and elections held for the following offices.

For state president, John O'Donnell, Philadelphia; first vice-president, Charles O. Baird of Portage, Pa.; second vice-president, A. H. Myer, Quakertown, Pa.; secretary, Charles H. Goodwin, Philadelphia; treasurer, H. C. Klein of Pittsburg. All of the officers were elected for the ensuing year.

G. W. Sahner was elected national vice-president.

The three delegates elected to the national convention in Chicago were John O'Donnell, Charles Goodwin, of Philadelphia and M. Fetler.

About fifty out-of-town exhibitors were present.

Red Cross Booth Popular with Players

Articles for Raffling Are Pouring In on Manager Schindler—Fifteen New States Will Be Represented at Seventh National Convention.

MANAGER LUDWIG SCHINDLER, of the Seventh National Exposition at Chicago, reports that letters are arriving in bunches daily at league headquarters in the Masonic Temple evidencing the intense interest taken by exhibitors throughout the country in this year's convention and exposition.

North Carolina will send eight delegates and eight alternates, and the delegates and exhibitors from Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina have already made arrangements for an Exhibitors' League special which will have two Pullmans and a diner.

The following delegates will represent Mississippi: P. J. Schilling, Greenwood; E. M. Clark, Natchez; A. B. Cook, Jackson; M. Cupero, Canton; Will Isenberg, Greenvile, and Miss M. E. Rollins, Grenada. Messrs. Schilling, Clark and Isenberg, accompanied by their wives, will make the trip in automobiles, leaving their respective cities to meet at Memphis, Tenn., thence they will motor to Chicago in a body. It is hoped that they will give themselves sufficient time in order to discount any mishaps on the way, so that they will arrive in Chicago on time for the opening of the Convention.

Exhibitors of the Northwest have promised to send the following delegates: James Gilosky, Joseph Friedman and Charles Campbell, St. Paul; C. H. Hitchcock, Ed Hinz, M. A. Hoppenrath, D. G. Rodgers, H. P. Greene, William H. Deeth, C. E. Van Duzee and D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis; Thomas Furniss, Duluth; Tom Foster, Stanley, and C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; also the following alternates: Oliver A. Rowe, J. B. Reisman, Bert Goldman, Mr. Cameron, R. G. Foster, C. L. Graham, E. U. Carter and Henry Breilein, St. Paul; William A. Steffes, Billy B. Watson, O. C. Stelzner, James Keough and F. W. Thayer, Minneapolis; Archie Miller, Devil's Lake, S. D., and Tom Foster, Stanley, Wis.

Prominent moving picture players have already begun to send in articles for the Red Cross booth. The very first article was received from dainty little Mary Miles Minter. Like little Mary herself, the article is dainty and pretty, and is something that the women will crave to possess. A note accompanying the package reads, "To be sold at Red Cross booth, Motion Picture Exposition, for our dear boys in the trenches. God bless them!"

Marguerite Clark has also answered the call and has announced that she will send one of her gowns for the contest, in addition to another article.

Anita Stewart has magnanimously tendered her "Goddess Gown," or any other special gown that the league might request. In addition, she will aiso send other articles to be raffled in support of the Red Cross organization.

This is a good beginning, and Manager Schindler is eagerly awaiting a rush of articles from other prominent players. All the proceeds resulting from the raffling of the articles will be devoted to the Red Cross. The Red Cross booth will be in charge of J. W. Champion, executive secretary, Chicago chapter, American Red Cross.

Estes & Estes, two patriotic exhibitors of Brooklyn, Mich., have donated 200 copies of the song, "Stars and Stripes Were Waving," in aid of the Red Cross booth at the exposition. This is an excellent donation, as it will serve to excite enthusiasm.

The program of the Exposition will be completed during the week ending Saturday, June 30, Manager Schindler announces.

The opening day, Saturday, July 14, has been assigned to Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Mae Marsh and other Goldwyn stars will be present.

Sunday, July 15, will be Pathe day, with Pearl White, Mrs. Vernon Castle, Florence Reed and other Pathe stars in attendance.

Tuesday, July 17, will be Butterfly day (Universal), with Violet Mersereau as the featured star.

Wednesday, July 18, will be World Pictures, Brady-Made day, with Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Madge Evans, Carlyle Blackwell and Montagu Love as the representative players.

The closing day has been assigned to Metro, which has promised to have present Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Edith Storey, Viola Dana and Harold Lockwood.

The Exposition opens Saturday morning, July 14, and the convention will be opened Tuesday, July 17, at ten o'clock a. m.

The Hotel Morrison has been chosen as the official headquarters of the Seventh National Convention, and delegates are requested to write for reservations in advance, in order to be assigned the best and coolest rooms. It has 1,000 rooms, every one of which has a bath.

Manager Schindler requests all visiting delegates to apply at the league headquarters in the Hotel Morrison, early on Monday, July 16, with their credentials, to receive their official badges.

One more new state has been added to the fourteen new states mentioned in the last article, which have entered the league since the convention of 1916—making fifteen new states in all.

Airdomes Can't Open Until 9 P. M.

That's What "Daylight Saving" Means, Exhibitor Crandall of Washington Again Points Out.

Washington, D. C., June 29.

"I THINK the moving picture interests of the country have overlooked a great big bet," said Harry M. Crandall, when informed by the Moving Picture World correspondent of the passage of the Calder bill, commonly known as the "daylight saving" bill. "I think that the moving picture people are making a grave mistake when they do not make some sort of an organized protest against the measure that will perhaps wipe some of the smaller men clean out of existence. As I told you before," continued Mr. Crandall, "our first evening show will be wiped out and the second show will take its place. Everybody knows what that means. At its best, the first show of the evening does not produce much in the way of box office receipts. We are dependent entirely on our second shows.

"There are many among us who doubtlessly have not taken the time to figure out just how the bill is going to affect the moving picture business. We open our shows at 6:30 and run them an hour and a half. The second show commences at 8 o'clock and runs until 9:30, and the next one begins at 9:30 and runs until 11 o'clock. As I said before, the first show of the evening is not very well patronized. People do not want to go into a closed theater until it is dark. The open air theater cannot begin business until darkness descends and at this time of the year in Washington it is about 8 o'clock. Putting the clock forward an hour is only fooling the people. They are not getting anything, the only saving being possibly in electricity, and that is doubtful when compared to the enormous loss that will be suffered by the moving picture industry. Now, next summer 6:30 will become 5:30, and it will be 9 o'clock before it is dark. The people have to get up an hour earlier in the morning and naturally they are going to bed an hour earlier at night. The 11 o'clock of today will be the 10 o'clock of this same day next year and if the people are accustomed to going to bed at 11 o'clock they are going to go to bed at 10 o'clock. Now, it is true that these figures are very confusing, but figure it out yourself. Take a piece of paper and pencil and you will see where your first show will be a 9 o'clock show and that first show will also be your last show. You will also find that your receipts will be more than cut in half. That will be a most serious result, particularly in view of the fact that your normal attendance will dwindle after the Government starts raising its big army for service in France.

"Uncle Sam looks to us to pay taxes, buy Liberty bonds, to make contributions to the Red Cross. I do not think that there is any business that pays more along this line than the moving picture industry. I do not think that if our members of Congress were properly informed of this condition of affairs they would want to put a millstone around the neck of the industry and choke it out of existence. But if we do not tell them we cannot expect to gain their aid."

When Mr. Crandall was further informed by the Moving Picture World correspondent that the bill was still pending in the House of Representatives, that Congressman William C. Adamson, chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which committee the bill would rightfully go, was opposed to the measure, he suggested that the various members of Congress be promptly informed of the situation. He also suggested that a letter be sent from the various leagues throughout the country to Chairman Adamson and also to Representative Edwin Y. Webb, of North Carolina, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, voicing the opposition of the business to the Calder bill.

Oklahoma Elects Chicago Delegates

Members Vote to Defray Expenses of President and Secretary to Convention.

ON June 19 the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oklahoma held a special meeting in Oklahoma City to elect delegates to the Chicago convention. Fred Herrington, national organizer, was present. An enthusiastic gathering of forty of the leading exhibitors of the state voted to send the following delegates to the Chicago convention, uninstructed:

President A. B. Moonand of Shawnee, Secretary L. W. Brophy of Muskogee, S. H. Jones of Altus, John Feeney of Okmulgee, Thomas H. Boland of Oklahoma City, J. L. Olive of Chickasha, John Slocum of Mangum. Alternates: J. H. Molder of Sapulpa, Maurice Lowenstein of Oklahoma City, J. S. Clayman of Cushing, J. L. Carr of Kingfisher, H. W. McCall of Oklahoma City. All of the delegates elected agreed to attend the convention.

This meeting marks the opening of a greater Oklahoma league, as the members voted to pay all expenses of their president and secretary to the Chicago convention. This is the first instance where the Oklahoma league has paid the expenses of its officers to attend the national convention.

All of the leading cities of the state were represented. Resolution were passed commending our Senators at Washington; also P. W. Wells, president of the North Carolina League; C. W. Meighan, president of the Oregon League; G. C. Varner, president of the South Carolina League; Mr Sams, attorney for the North Carolina League; also William Fox of New York, for the very efficient work they performed in having the war tax set aside and leaving the poor man's amusement, the motion picture theater, to escape further taxation.

L. W. BROPHY, Secretary.

OREGON LEAGUE AIDS RED CROSS.

At a special meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, June 18, it was voted the league would co-operate in every way with the Red Cross in its campaign in Portland. Teams of speakers were permitted to plead the Red Cross cause in the picture theaters. A considerable sum over that required of Portland was raised. As evidence of the part played by the picture theaters in the campaign, the league has the following letter, addressed to Abraham Nelson, business manager.

"On behalf of the speakers' committee of the Red Cross campaign please let me express to you our sincere appreciation of the hearty co-operation our speakers have met at the various theaters. It was only today when the teams were reporting that one of the captains said he believed one of the reasons the raising of money for this cause was comparatively easy was due to the wide publicity given in the motion picture houses. We want you to feel that your organzation's efforts are appreciated, and that you are doing much to make our campaign a success.

"ROBERT H. STRONG, Campaign Manager."

MARITIME EXHIBITORS SOON TO MEET.

Since the formation of the Exhibitors' League of the Martime Provinces in September last, there has been no general meeting of the members. A convention to be held in the last of August or first of September is now being arranged. St. John, N. B., will be the place. Walter H. Golding, the president, with S. C. Hurley, the secretary, have their heads together regarding plans for entertainment.

EXECUTIVE MEETING OF NEW YORK LOCAL NO. 1.

The fortnightly executive meeting of the New York Exhibitors' League, local No. 1, was held at its headquarters on Wednesday, June 20, with all the officers at their respective stations. There were not more than fifteen members present and the business transacted was of the usual routine, making it one of the most harmonious sessions ever held. A representative of the Department of Public Information made an address requesting the co-operation of the exhibitors by granting permission to the "four-minute men" of the department to deliver four-minute speeches of national importance in their theaters. Upon motion the league voted unanimously to comply with the request.

Sydney Asher reported he was summoned on complaint of the Society of Musical Authors, Composers and Publishers to appear before the United States District Attorney. He was accused of using copyrighted music without a license from the society. The case was decided in favor of the defendant for lack of evidence.

NORTHWESTERNERS GOING TO CONVENTION.

Interest in the coming Chicago moving picture convention and exposition is keen around Minneapolis, Minn., and it is expected a record delegation of film men will go to Chicago from Minneapolis and St. Paul. The Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation will send down fourteen delegates and alternates and the exchangemen will also turn out in force if present plans carry.

Among those who anticipate being at the convention are Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Gilosky, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Campbell, Julius B. Reisman, Morton Nathan, Joseph Friedman and Henry J. and Mrs. Breilien of St. Paul; W. K. Howard, Ralph E. Bradford, Harry A. Sherman, Frank A. McInerny, James A. Keough, John R. Elliott, A. A. Hixon, Manie Gottlieb, J. George Feinberg, E. Oddy Freedman, Benjamin Friedman, Clyde Hitchcock, Max Hoppenrath, William Deeth, E. G. True, David G. Rodgers, S. A. Louis, S. N. Robinson, D. W. Chamberlain, C. E. Van Duzee, Harry A. Rathner, A. A. Engler, T. J. Hamlin, J. L. Johnston, William A. Lochren, Harry Graham, Julius Bernheim, Joseph Schwartzbine, Billy W. Watson, C. L. Peavey and Henry P. Greene.

MICHIGAN DELEGATES TO CHICAGO.

The following exhibitors have been elected by the Michigan Exhibitors' League to represent the association at the Chicago convention in July: W. S. McLaren, Jackson; W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; S. A. Moran, Ann Arbor; King Perry, Detroit; Steve Springett, Jackson; C. E. Momand, Saginaw, and Claude B. Cady, Lansing.

Mr. Cady, who is the new secretary of the Michigan Exhibitors' League, says that the executive committee will meet in the near future, at which time plans will be taken up for a vigorous and active campaign to increase the membership. "We must have a larger membership," writes Mr. Cady. "We will have to devise some method to procure them, because we can't make progress nor can we do the things we have in mind unless we have more members." Mr. Cady has the right spirit and we hope he will be successful.

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGEMEN STILL AT ODDS.

Nothing further has developed in the controversy in Iowa between the exchangemen and the Exhibitors' League of Iowa. Many of the exhibitors are still holding out for the formation of an exhibitors' body solely under the guidance of N. C. Rice and Louis Rosenfield, two prominent Iowa exhibitors. No steps have been taken by the industry and no list of committees can be secured, in fact, affairs are no further advanced than the mere laying of plans.

It might be only fair to the exchangemen to place emphasis on the fact that while they really forced their way into the exhibitors' association, they all refused to hold any office or any chairmanship in any committee. They left the management of the industry in the hands of the exhibitors, simply reserving the right to vote as full fledged members.

FAY TINCHER IN NEW YORK.

Fay Tincher, one of the bright particular comedy stars from the coast, who has been working under D. W. Griffith for the past three years, is now in New York, "freshening up."

"But I'm homesick to be back in California," Miss Tincher declares. "I miss the roses and the mountains, the sunshine and the sea. I've lost my taste for the East, I find."

Fox Announces Plans for Year

Manufacturer Will Present Annette Kellermann in a New Sub-Sea Spectacle—"Jack and the Beanstalk" Coming.

WILLIAM FOX, who has just returned from his California studios, announces plans for an auspicious twelve months of moving pictures beginning next September. The Fox organization has in the last year created a distributing organization that encircles the globe. The Fox agencies are located in twenty-seven cities of the United States, six in Canada, six in South America, five in Australia and Far East, ten in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and offices in every other civilized country in the world

In this connection it is worthy of mention that "Carmen," produced by Mr. Fox with artificial Spanish scenery in Fort Lee, N. J., was shown in Seville, Spain, and was well received in Madrid

Likewise "Romeo and Juliet," staged in the little New Jersey town with the costumes of the Shakespearean period, was shown on the screen in Stratford-on-Avon, England, during the recent Shakespearean festival.

"It is recognized in every foreign country that American films excel and have a worldwide appeal in theme, action and story," said Mr. Fox. "The American producers, competing with the best brain and the wonderful scenic locations of France, Italy and other European countries, have defied all foreign competition

"The war conditions have not permitted the foreign producers to stage as elaborately or expensively as we in this country, but I believe that the greatest imagination, biggest themes and most elabotate cinema creations will continue to be staged by American producers for the future

"For the season 1917-18 I will present Annette Kellermann in a new sub-sea picture of which George Bronson Howard is the author. The director is John G. Adolfi. Scenes at the bottom of the ocean by means of a patented submarine apparatus will inaugurate a new angle of entertainment

"The assistance of the Smithsonian Institute of Washington and the British Museum are acknowledged in connection with Miss Kellermann's new film, also the co-operation of the United States Fisheries Commission. This picture is yet unnamed but the new film will be more elaborate but totally different in story and action than "A Daughter of the Gods" It will be shown in New York this autumn.

"In response to a general demand throughout the country from women's clubs, editors, educators and others interested in the welfare of the young I have staged a series of children's fairy tales. The first, 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' will be shown at a Broadway theater not later than September In the children's pictures all parts will be enacted by juvenile artists selected with great care, and the plays are intended for young and old. 'Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp,' 'Treasure Island' and 'Babes in the Wood' are among the children's pictures already staged

"William Farnum will appear at a Broadway theater in 'The Conqueror,' which is the life story of Sam Houston, and depicts the early political life of Texas I believe this play will point the way to educational filming of American history, yet giving the necessary dramatic action. Mr. Farnum will also appear in 'When a Man Sees Red,' by Larry Evans, and 'The Doctor,' by Ralph Connor, the Canadian author

"Miss Theda Bara will make her initial appearance on Broadway in a picture version of Cleopatra

"'The Honor System,' dealing with American social conditions, will be shown in September throughout the United States

"Among the authors whose works I will produce during the coming fall are George Scarborough, Larry Evans, Randolph Lewis, Adrian Johnson, George Bronson Howard, F. McGrew Willis, Rupert Hughes. During the coming season in new films there will appear under my direction Virginia Pearson, George Walsh, Gladys Brockwell, Jane and Katherine Lee, Miriam Cooper, Valeska Suratt, June Caprice and others

"Dustin Farnum, who has been absent from the screen as well as the speaking stage for the last ten months, will be seen in 'The Scarlet Pimpernel,' by Baroness D'Orcy; 'Durand of the Bad Lands,' by Maibelle Heikes Justice; 'North of Fifty-three,' by Bertrand Sinclair, and 'The Spy,' by George Bronson Howard.

"R. A. Walsh has written and staged a remarkable American story, 'The Innocent Sinner.' In this play Miriam Cooper is the star. I will also stage a series of comedy pictures and farces.

"Detail of the New York engagements of these films will be announced shortly, as well as the name of the Broadway theaters in which they will be presented."

Mr. Fox has completed arrangements with the British and French war offices, as well as the British Admiralty, for showing films to soldiers and sailors in the European war zones. He has also made a similar offer to the War and Navy departments at Washington.

Moreno to Support Mrs. Castle

ACCORDING to an announcement issued last week by Pathe, Mrs. Vernon Castle will have as her leading man in her third Pathe feature Antonio Moreno, one of the popular male stars of the screen.

Work on this picture has just begun at the special studio in Fort Lee, engaged for the exclusive use of the organization built for the production of the Castle Pathe pictures, under direction of George Fitzmaurice. The scenario is by Philip Bartholomae, and it is made from one of Carolyn Wells' most successful books. Mr. Bartholomae is the author of a number of successful stage plays, and his first Astra Pathe feature "The Cigarette Girl," has just been enthusiastically greeted by the tradepaper critics

Mr. Bartholomae is also the author of Mrs. Vernon Castle's first feature, a thrilling detective play, and a number of other Astra features, soon to be released

In addition to Mrs. Castle and Antonio Moreno, the cast selected includes John Sainpolis as the "heavy" and W. H. Gilmour in an important role.

Antonio Moreno has become very popular. "The Island of Regeneration," "Kennedy Square" and other pictures owe much of their success to his work. He has played on the stage with Mrs. Leslie Carter, Constance Collier, Tyrone Power, William Hautrey and Wilton Lackay. Some of the plays in which he appeared were "C. O. D.," "The Man From Cook's," and "Thais."

Antonio Moreno.

The photoplay in which this splendid company of players will support Mrs. Castle is described as a thrilling one with a compelling murder mystery. It is expected that this picture will prove one of the most successful of the entire Castle series.

PRESIDENT ROY LIKES KING LEAR.

V. L. Roy, president of the Louisiana State Normal School, has written to Pathe's New Orleans branch as follows: "We were very much pleased with the Pathe 'King Lear' photoplay last week. In fact, we have had few moving picture shows that have enlisted more favorable comment than did 'King Lear.' I wish to inquire, therefore, whether we can arrange with you to lease other reels."

ART DRAMA TRADE MARK SELECTED.

The prize for the best design for an Art Dramas trade mark has been won by J. L. McCurdy, of Cincinnati Mr. McCurdy's drawing was selected out of over 14,000 submitted in the month during which the contest ran.

The successful trade mark is simple, distinctive and original.

PENNYBAKER IS MUTUAL'S MEMPHIS CHIEF.

L. L. Pennybaker, formerly bookkeeper at the New Orleans branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the Memphis branch, effective June 18, succeeding E. L. Rife, who resigned June 16.

Inter-Ocean Ready for More Business

Concern Headed by Brock and Cromelin Prepared to Transact Film Business in Any Part of the World.

THE Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, of which Henry J. Brock and Paul H. Cromelin are the heads, is about to invite the products of important film manufacturers for dissemination in all foreign markets. The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in celebrating its first year of existence announces a notable accomplishment, namely, the disposal of the entire output of the World Film Corporation for the forthcoming year in nearly every country in the world.

This is an unusual accomplishment. Under the existing conditions, with more than the usual number of obstacles placed in the way of shipping facilities, freight embargoes and U-boat activities, the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, after contracting for the World Film products in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, France, Spain, Portugal, Norway Sweden, Russia, Denmark, India Ceylon, Burmah, Australia, New Zealand, Brazil, Argentine, Paraguay, Uruguay, Chile, Mexico and the West Indies Islands, have made shipments to all these points without loss to any client or themselves, owing to the insurance arrangements covering all consignments, which is handled by a special department within the Inter-Ocean Film concern itself.

In addition to the numberless other films sold throughout the world by the Brock organization, that concern also controls the now happily plentiful Speer Carbons throughout the foreign markets, and its success in landing their films abroad has been equally efficient in so far as the greatly required carbons are concerned.

An unusual organization characterizes the Inter-Ocean. The distribution of films to the most distant point does not require any greater outlay, as handled, than does the marketing of a film right in this country. For a year now Mr. Brock has concentrated upon establishing his organization abroad so substantially that now his recommendation for a film play in almost any country, by cable, is the best selling talk that can be given. In other words, he has maintained a set principle, that of keeping faith with distant buyers, to such an extent that his harvest is the complete confidence of his buyers and the foreign market in general, and it is this that Mr. Brock, through the Inter-Ocean, is placing at the disposal of manufacturers.

Not a spot on earth but that the Inter-Ocean is in communication with, either by cable or personal visits of their American representative. Interpreters, translators and agents familiar with conditions in every clime and country are contingent employes, and in one day the private projection room at the offices, 220 West Forty-second street, seven buyers from seven different countries were shown film plays and heard their own languages spoken.

The accompanying illustrations show portions of the Inter-Ocean offices. The photograph in the center is that of Henry J. Brock, founder and president of the organization, while that on the left is Paul H. Cromelin, vice president, but recently returned from England, where he established the British office with John H. Taylor in charge and C. Parfrey as assistant.

"We are now safely established in every country in the world," said Mr. Brock, "and now that we have the confidence of our buyers, are open to the film world to give their productions the distribution in other lands that good quality pictures justify."

The Inter-Ocean organization as it stands can absorb at least four times the product it is at present handling.

Shipping, retitling, reassembling and renaming the picture to fit each one for its field in each territory is all handled through various translatory offices in New York.

In no few instances productions made for the American market have been slightly modified or intensified under the direction of one of the Inter-Ocean foreign agents and made especially attractive to foreign buyers. This, together with other innovations established by Mr. Brock, makes the advent of the Inter-Ocean into the field of foreign distributors of more than usual importance to the industry in general and to those manufacturers in particular who at present have none or at least unsatisfactory foreign distribution.

Ida May Park, Director

DURING the eighteen months Bluebird's program has been progressing there has always been a woman director concerned in the picturemaking for that firm —and in that time only two women have held the position. Lois Weber was a great factor in promptly establishing Bluebirds, and when she decided to begin producing on her own account Ida May Park was assigned to the work of directing Dorothy Phillips, thus keeping a woman's hand in the Bluebird game.

Miss Park had been associated with her husband, Joseph De Grasse, in producing Bluebirds, starting early in the series. She prepared scenarios for his productions and assisted him materially in the manifold details of directing features. It was Mr. De Grasse who brought Louise Lovely to Bluebirds and was also Mr. De Grasse who introduced Dorothy Phillips to the series When Miss Phillips developed the capacity for work she has demonstrated in her monthly and oftener appearances among Bluebirds the assignment of Miss Park as an additional director for the energetic star was decided upon.

Ida May Park.

Starting with "The Flashlight" Miss Park has alternated with her husband in preparing Bluebirds with Miss Phillips the star. Her first picture was largely acted out-of-doors and Miss Park climbed mountains and waded streams with all the facility and disregard for obstructions that any man might demonstrate. The surging mob scenes in "Fires of Rebellion" were expertly handled, and in directing "The Rescue" the woman director fitted to a nicety, because the July 23 Bluebird is distinctively a "woman's feature," with society scenes and fine gowns dominating incidentals to the problem-plot.

Thus has Miss Park fitted into her niche—made for herself an essential place, equal to that of most men in creating features for a program of the first class. As Miss Phillips and Miss Park are under long contract, exhibitors and their public may look forward to repeated evidences of the artistry and skill in "team work" possessed by these talented women.

Film Export Notes

By F. G. Ortega.

TWO well-known photoplays released during the past six months furnish an excellent example of the importance attached to Spanish tilting. We refer to "Joan the Woman" and "The Bar Sinister," both productions of unusual merit. If the titles of these films were literally translated into Spanish or any of the other Romance languages both would lose dramatic power and create an unfavorable impression.

The original titles of "Joan the Woman" are at loggerheads with the prevalent historical conception of the subject existing outside of Anglo-Saxon countries. According to them, England had overrun and was practically mistress of the greater part of France, while the ordinary Frenchman or Spaniard regards England, at that particular epoch, as a nation conquered by a French potentate, whose descendants, knights and soldiers, who were mostly French, talked French and had imposed this language on the Britons, were fighting for supremacy against another French potentate

In "The Bar Sinister," a wonderful photoplay of unique intensity, there is, from the foreigner's viewpoint, a bewildering amount of prejudice permeating each and every title, and a thrilling climax spoilt by Puritanic conventionality. In Latin countries (or anywhere else for that matter, as the half-breeds will bear us out) when a man loves a woman he marries her whether she is a Caucasian thoroughbred or happens to have a strain—be it black, yellow or blue

Of course, it is immaterial to us whether the mediæval rumpus was between England and France or between a French potentate and his liege lord; and we realize that the race problem is a factor that cannot be overlooked in this country with financial impunity. But motion pictures are made to entertain, a function that cannot be performed when a feeling of antagonism develops in the spectator. And such would be the result in these two cases if the titles were simply translated and not properly adapted.

Under the producing methods employed today, Spanish scenarios and American actors and directors do not mix well together. The actors are not to blame. Photoplays based on Spanish novels or dramas—and we mean all of those that have been released to date—should not be shown before any audience familiar with the stories they are supposed to depict or with the national dress and manners of the people, if the producer cares anything for his reputation. Pictures dealing with modern American life are the best for export.

The Carranza Government has prohibited the exhibition, within the territory of the Republic, of any films in which Mexicans are systematically held up to ridicule. It is a wonder that this step has not been taken before and it would not surprise us in the least if similar measures were put in force by other Latin-American countries. These pictures do harm enough in this country, as they tend to promote race prejudice and ignorant hatred, but why any American company should persist in sending them to Mexico is past all comprehension. Even if the "pelaos" were as depraved as some of us like to paint them, there is no reason why they should enjoy paying good money to see their fake countrymen beaten up in every scene and hanged for horse-thieving in the last act.

The impression prevails among certain producers and novel exporters that unsavory moving picture themes are in demand in Latin America. This may have been caused by the foolish publicity given in the daily press and trade papers to the pornographic wave that swept through Cuba five or six years ago, or by the Spanish habit of calling a spade by its right name. Some of the critics that did most of the writing at that time about conditions in Havana could not see any difference between the regular theaters and those flourishing in the old "zone of tolerance," and this gives a clue to their discernment. Then again, if a Spanish empresario happens to buy a picture with nothing else in the shape of a plot than the symetrical proportions of a lady, he will call it "The Naked Woman" and let it go at that, to the consternation of the producer who has spent valuable time and labor in devising a highly moral title.

No; pictures of this kind are not wanted in Spanish-speaking markets. It makes no difference whether they are indorsed by welfare societies or by Jack Johnson. The foreign buyer only sees in them a very tame performance for an "hombres solos" theater and something that he would not dare to show in the regular motion picture houses.

The various film exchanges established in Cuba buy annually from Europe about $40,000 worth of new films, and more than $100,000 in second hand material from both America and Europe. This does not include the pictures imported by the Universal direct from its New York office.

British Tax Hits Cheap Seat Hardest

By J. B. Sutcliffe

One Estimate Says 130 Small Exhibitors Will Cancel Their Bookings on July 1—Other Interesting News from London

TO describe the budget increase of the amusement tax, recently announced, as meeting with the approval of the trade would be grossly untrue. In the first place the increase—nearly double the present imposition—hits hardest at the cheap seats of the house and incidentally those upon which the exhibitor depends for his income. With the exception of London and perhaps a dozen provincial cities, war conditions have rendered admission charges for more than a shilling impracticable. An aggravation to the impost is the date of its introduction, July 1, absolutely the worst time of the year for the exhibitor. Charles Hawtrey states that no less than 130 small exhibitors have canceled their programs after that date in anticipation of a heavy slump. The increase does not impose any addition to the present tax upon seats to the value of 3d. It begins with the middle class seat, the fourpenny seat of the artisan, the mainstay of every picture theater that confines itself to showing pictures without high aspirations in furnishings. The fourpenny seat after July 1 will be sixpence, the sixpenny seat eightpence, and so on; just double the present tax. As is to be expected, the exhibitors' association has not been idle. A deputation visited the treasury a few days ago in company with members of the theatrical profession with a strong case for the suspension of the new tax. Their joint representations are under consideration. Should no reduction in the tax be forthcoming there is a strong feeling among exhibitors in favor of abolishing the cheaper seats; sixpence as a minimum has been suggested. But meanwhile the case for reduction will be pressed to the utmost and it is not unlikely that exhibitors will conscript their screens for the first time into the service of their own cause.

The final sitting of the commission appointed by the National Council of Public Morals to investigate charges recently decided against moving pictures was held last week. The principal witness was A. E. Newbould, chairman of the Exhibitors' Association, the Kinematograph Trade Council and a director of one of our most important exhibiting undertakings. Something like 90 per cent. of the films shown in this country, he said, came from abroad. There was a large public demand for British films, but it was not articulate. British manufacturers had great difficulty in selling their productions in America, but the setting up of some central sales organization for the handling of British-made films in America would quickly result in at least 50 per cent. of films shown in this country being of British origin. Mr. Newbould spoke also upon censorship, the best solution of which he considered the present voluntary system, with the addition of an advisory and appeal committee to which arbitrary decision could be referred. Such a committee could be appointed by the National Council of Public Morals in consultation with the home office. Details of a novel experiment were given before the commission by Dr. C. W. Kimmins, chief inspector of the London County Council Schools. In one of these schools thirty girls promised their teacher in 1914 they would not visit a moving picture exhibition during the war. The girls who had kept their promise (he didn't say how many) were, with one exception, able to give good accounts of films seen more than two years ago. The moral of this, pointed out the inspector, shows the value of the film as a stimulant to concentrated attention.

Following upon the last meeting of the Kinema Commission comes the news from Paris that the French Government has appointed a body to hold similar inquiry into moving picture affairs on the other side of the channel.

The new Essanay-Linder features are, generally speaking, the subject of most favorable notice. One well-known daily newspaper printed a special article on the Linder type of humor, contending that, as distinct from slap-stick, refined comedy of this type will materially uplift the kinema. Information is just to hand of the French comedian's illness out west. That everyone in the British trade wishes him a speedy recovery goes without saying, for Max has lived with us since the inception of Flicker Alley. Following letter has been sent out to Max from a wounded Tommy in a Manchester hospital and will cheer him in his convalescence:

"Sir: On behalf of the matron and convalescent patients at this hospital I feel it my duty to send an acknowledgment of your entertainment given to us at Deansgate Picture House this morning. When I last saw you it was in that pretty little village of Guillemont, out on the Somme, where you were so good in helping me to take cover and giving me first aid, thus saving my life. It was but a few minutes after you left me that I was on my way to dear old England after fighting by the side of you and your fellow comrades for two years. I am commanded by the matron to send together our best wishes for your success, health and happiness in the noble career you have chosen. We are still comrades-in-arms.

"Sergt. A. Whiting,

The conversion of the Exhibitors' Association into a registered trade union is wellnigh complete. The change is to be regarded as a constitutional one only, the aims and objects of the organization remaining the same. The new formation will enable the Exhibitors' Union to rank with the other powerful industrial unions in the country and in the event of litigation it will not be confronted with charges of acting in restraint of trade as is usually the case with unregistered trade combines. The welding of the exhibiting interests in Great Britain into a single, solid body with a status conferred by the Government will furthermore dissipate some of the frivolous rulings of local magistrates in regard to licensing conditions. A trade union savors too strongly of democracy to be needlessly tempted into combat by our most arbitrary authorities. One of the first things to be done by the union will be the compilation of a "whitelist." A "whitelist" is the opposite of a "blacklist," that is to say, all members of the new union will have their names printed on the list, which will be sent out to different licensing and perodical authorities in the kingdom. Should the union give any bond or pledge to a licensing authority that authority would be able to see if any exhibitor infringing a condition was a member or not of the union. The secretary of the union frankly admits his dislike of publishing a "blacklist" of exhibitors outside the union and has adopted the above plan as an effective alternative.

The arrival of a destroyer flotilla of the United States navy off the coast brought forth a smart piece of topical work by those responsible for the taking of our official war films. The Admiralty announcement of the arrival was only made on Wednesday, but by Friday afternoon a full reel topical showing the flotilla entering Queenstown harbor, the landing and reception of the officers, and an excellent portrait of Vice Admiral Sims was included in the program of war pictures at the London Scala theater. There is another topical picture, by the way, which would enjoy a great vogue in America. It is now being shown in France and Switzerland, despite the chagrin and many attempts of suppression by the German Government. It is only a few feet in length, yet quite sufficient to clearly and unmistakably show the U-boat Deutschland being towed by two French cruisers.

Two of the best American films ever imported to this country have been shown to the trade during the week. At the Alhambra on Friday the Fox Company presented William Farnum in "A Tale of Two Cities," and although this is the fourth adaptation of the Dickens story offered to exhibitors, it only proves once again that careful production is the first essential in film making and one that every time outweighs so-called originality of plot. The other subject, also unspooled for the first time at the Alhambra, is the Frohman Amusement Corporation's psychological drama, "The Witching Hour." The new Bolton-Stewart enterprise is handling the production here and the appearance of C. Aubrey Smith (lead) in "Daddy Long Legs" at the Duke of York's theater imparts an added interest to the film.

The suggested absorption of the censoring body of the British industry, the British Board of Film Censors, by the Kinematograph Trade Council along the lines recapitulated in my last letter does not meet with the approval of some members of the present council, the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association. At last week's council meeting Will Barker, of Barker Motion Photography, while agreeing it was desirable that the expenses of censorship should be borne in proportion by manufacturer, exchangeman and exhibitor, argued that it was not fair to expect the British Board of Film Censors to hand over its responsibilities and undertakings on a purely speculative basis and one solely dependent upon the willingness of the exhibitor to pay up. At the previous meeting of the Trade Council, at which the proposed absorption was first mentioned, the exchangemen present anticipated difficulties in collecting from the exhibitors their proportion of censorship charges. To overcome this Mr. Barker suggested the issue of books of sixpenny and shilling stamps to exchanges at an agreeed discount. These stamps would be the renter's authority to collect from the exhibitor his proper share and could be affixed to film invoices. If after a year's trial a reasonable sum had been collected, the Trade Council should enter into negotiations with the board for its adoption. But he thought the Trade Council should have some tangible guarantee that funds would be forthcoming before seeking to dislocate the existing British Board of Film censors.

William Larkin, the Irish reformer, was tried in Dublin last week on a charge of damaging the screen and furnishings at the Pillar Picture House during the showing of the Fox picture, "The Soul of Broadway." He was adjudged guilty by the jury, but was acquitted by the recorder. The film in question had been approved by the Dublin Corporation censors, and as the recorder's action creates for the industry a disastrous precedent I hear there is every possibility of the matter being taken up by Irish exhibitors.

D. W. Griffith has been spending the latter part of his first visit to Europe in France, where he has taken several scenes on the war front for inclusion in his next superproduction.

LEON BARY WEDS MARIE F. CROUSAZ.

Leon Bary, hero of the great Pathe serial, "Mystery of the Double Cross," was married on May 28, his bride being Mlle. Marie F. Crousaz, of Paris. Their romance began at the time when Mr. Bary was playing as Mme. Bernhardt's leading man.

At the outbreak of the present war, Mr. Bary hurried to the front. Subsequently, he was wounded, and through the long months of his convalescence Mlle. Crousaz nursed him.

Upon his recovery he was engaged by Pathe to play the male lead in their serials. They are now settled in their new home at Grantwood, N. J.

MISS MACPHERSON WROTE PICKFORD PHOTOPLAY.

A wire from Cecil B. De Mille, received at the headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, gives sole credit for the story of Mary Pickford's new patriotic photoplay, "The Little American," to Jeanie Macpherson. Although the general impression has been that Mr. De Mille was co-author of this scenario, the director announces that Miss Macpherson was entirely responsible for what is expected to prove the greatest patriotic story ever written for the screen.

Lease Building to Write Scenarios

John B. Clymer and Harry O. Hoyt, Expert Scenarioists, Will Specialize in Big Features.

JOHN B. CLYMER and Harry O. Hoyt, known as writers for the screen, have leased the building at 125 West Fortieth street, New York City. Reinforced by assistants and stenographers, this organization will specialize on the writing of big feature stories, working scripts and titling of pictures. Both men have seen service as editors and staff writers with various big producing companies.

Better stories and craftsman scenarios of a higher order have marked their initial efforts in combination. With a limited number of accounts the organization will contract for a general service, after the example of the successful organizations in all other lines of business.

Clymer and Hoyt believe that their interest in a picture does not end with the payment for the story or scenario. It is to their credit if the picture proves good. It is a black eye if it is bad. Thus they stand ready to assist in casting, cutting and titling.

Ivan to Feature Grace Valentine

IN THE forthcoming Ivan-Humphrey production of "Babbling Tongues," Grace Valentine will be seen as the featured leading woman. Miss Valentine is quite as well known in the picture world as on the legitimate stage, and during the past two years has forged rapidly to the front rank of picture favorites in many co-starring ventures with Lionel Barrymore and other prominent stars.

Grace Valentine.

Miss Valentine's name has long been well known on the legitimate stage, and her work before the camera is backed by twelve years of stage experience, during which time she has played a wide variety of parts. She was identified with such well known stage hits as "Seven Days," "The Yellow Jacket" and "The Greyhound." She has played many long and successful stock engagements and enjoyed a solid year with the Morosco Producing company in Los Angeles, where she created many parts in new productions, among these being "Help Wanted" in which she appeared in the leading role for eight months during the run of this play at the Cort theater Chicago.

Her performance in this play won her many picture offers and she then appeared for nearly a year before the camera. With the production of the farce, "Johnny, Get Your Gun," at the Criterion theater, Miss Valentine again turned her efforts to the legitimate stage and played the leading female role for many weeks, after which she created one of the chief roles in the Shubert's production in Boston of the farce, "He Said and She Believed Him," which is scheduled for a Broadway hearing next September.

A RARE PICTURE.

Alpine phenomena which may not happen once in a thousand years has just been recorded with a moving picture camera by Frederick Burlingham, the Alpine photographer. Burlingham and his party were ascending the notorious Blumlisalf ice climb. At the summit he posed the guides along an ice ledge to record their arrival. Hardly had he started turning the handle when the overhanging ledge cracked and almost instantaneously hundreds of tons of ice was precipitated into the chasm below. The guides had a narrow escape, but Burlingham managed to secure the incident in magnificent detail.

ART DRAMAS COMPLETES HALF YEAR.

Film Merchant in Cossack Garb

John Dored, Russian Soldier, Member General Skobeleff's Committee on Relief, Here to Sell War Subjects.

JOHN DORED, whose arrival in the United States was noted in the Los Angeles letter in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, is in New York, making his headquarters at the Imperial Hotel. Mr. Dored is garbed in the dress uniform of the Cossack, which denotes his official mission. That mission is to dispose of forty thousand feet of Russian subjects for the benefit of the Skobeleff committee on relief.

The subjects comprise many scenes photographed at the front—the committee under government authority being the only authorized agency permitted to take these pictures; military dramas having relation to the present war, as well as a production founded on the life of the late Grand Duke Constantine Constantinovitch, a free translation of the original title of which would be "For His Country's Sake."

The Skobeleff committee, which is supported by the people at large as distinguished from government maintenance, has been in existence for eleven years and has done much charitable work. It possesses among other agencies of activity a publicity committee and a moving picture committee. Following the recent revolution there was a reorganization, all of the new officers being in sympathy with the democratic ideas of the people. The exclusive rights of the committee to take pictures at the front were continued.

Soldiers in health as well as those invalided who had had motion picture experience were assigned to the laboratories in Moscow. The publicity and moving picture divisions of the Skobeleff committee were transferred to the Department of Public Instruction. The significance of this movement is that the productions of the motion picture committee will be employed in the schools of Russia for the education of the children in the principles of the new democracy. Mr. Dored said these pictures would be sent into the most remote corners of the country.

The special representative of the Russian government will be in the United States about a month. He said he was prepared to dispose of the subjects in his possession for North and South America, for the Philippines and for France and England. He will return to Russia by way of the Pacific. While here he is anxious to receive circulars from manufacturers of projection machines designed for use in schools and assemblies. The Skobeleff committee is making wide preparations for its educational propaganda. Mr. Dored also will engage an American representative to act for the committee after his departure.

Mr. Dored pointed out that the work of the Skobeleff committee was public in the largest sense—that all receipts were applied to the maintenance of its educational activities and for the support and care of wounded soldiers and the upkeep of institutions devoted to their care.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY BOND RECORD.

When the books were closed to subscriptions to the Liberty Loan on June 15, office records of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, together with reports from the studios and Paramount exchanges, showed that a total of $580,000 had been subscribed by the organization and its employees. It is a source of pride to the corporation that every one of its employees has taken at least one Liberty Bond following the action of the company itself in appropriating $100,000 for this purpose. The total of subscriptions entered at the home office of the corporation was $275,000, which includes those taken by both the Fort Lee and Famous Players studio in Fifty-sixth street.

NEW YORK CITY FILM CLUB NOTES.

The Film Club, at its last meeting, decided to hold its first annual outing and President Saunders appointed several committees to make the necessary arrangements.

Congratulations were extended to Mr. Gemond of Triangle on his promotion. His successor to the management of the New York City office, C. B. Price, received a warm welcome at his first meeting with the club.

I. M. Schmertz, manager of the Variety Films Corporation, reported having had a very successful and pleasant business trip through the Western States.

WEEKLIES TO CO-OPERATE WITH GOVERNMENT

At the suggestion of the Committee on Public Information at Washington the principal news photographers have formed an organization that will deal as an authorized body with the committee in that city. A meeting of the representatives of the leading illustrated news bureaus, syndicates and others was called a few days ago by Kendall Banning, director of the division of pictures. Plans were made for co-operative action between the news photographers and the Committee on Public Information for handling both official and unofficial photographs during the war on a basis that will provide equitable opportunities and privileges for the large and small syndicates, photographers and dealers alike. E. B. Hatrick, of the International Film Service is a member of the board of representatives, the governing committee.

John Zanft, Managing Director.

IT'S a wise exhibitor who pays as much attention to the arrangement of the program for his photoplayhouse and to the staging of pictures as he does to his booking, declares John Zanft. Mr. Zanft is known as managing director of the Academy of Music in New York. Mr. Zanft also supervises the presentation of the programs throughout the entire circuit of William Fox theaters in his capacity as general representative.

"The same importance attaches to the arrangement of a bill in motion picture houses as to vaudeville," says Mr. Zanft. "The exhibitor who takes pride in his work will be surprised at the attractiveness added to his program by careful staging. For the man who shows first-run features, scrupulous attention to lighting, lobby display, picture projection, musical accompaniment and a score of other details, is imperative to effective screening."

John Zanft.

Mr. Zanft's knowledge of conditions in this field is the product of the long experience at the Academy of Music, which has made him an expert. The Academy is the prerelease house for William Fox films in New York City and is recognized as one of the foremost photoplay theaters in the country. Much of its success in showing nightly to its record seating capacity of 3,400 is due to the artistic methods in stagecraft which Mr. Zanft is constantly dislpaying. Mr. Zanft and J. S. Stebbins, the house manager, see in the Academy's private projection room every inch of every subject booked prior to its production before the audience.

At last year's Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace the Fox Film Corporation was represented by a booth which was artistic and genuinely attractive. The judges were so impressed with the display that they awarded it the first prize—a handsome silver cup. Mr. Zanft designed and arranged it.

LUBIN AND SAWYER TO HANDLE STARS.

After an absence of two years from Broadway, during which time he had been in Canada exploiting Metro pictures, A. H. Sawyer, the original "Zone" man of the motion picture business, has returned to the White Lights accompanied by Herbert Lubin, a Canadian financier. Mr. Lubin originally bought and installed in Canada the Metro program, and together with Mr. Sawyer established an organization and offices from Halifax to Vancouver. After successfully instituting the program, they have just disposed of most of their Canadian interests and are now engaged in exploiting special film productions in the States and also intend exploiting several of the better known stars.

Mr. Lubin has also sold the rights for Western Canada for the Bushman-Bayne serial, "The Great Secret," to the General Film Company of Canada.

Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Lubin, in addition to looking after the business interests of some of the stars, intend immediately to place in work two well-known novels with well-known stars, the films to be each seven reels in length.

Grinding the Crank

With Thornton Fisher.

Our own little review with profound apologies to regular reviewers.

"THE Man With Six Fingers." A gripping, grasping, five-reel picture of life in the zoo. Full of pathos and comedy. Undoubtedly one of the drollest bits of comedy ever shown is when little Oscar, three years old, drops the kitchen range on his father's unsuspecting head. One of the big tense moments grip one when Waldon, the sixteen-year-old son meets his mother for the first time, she having grown too old to spend any more years from home playing bridge. The Duke of Discount is a heavy part ably played by Albert Spink, one of the heaviest men on the screen. A big surprise is put over when the Duke removes his false jerrys and shows a nick on his chin revealing him to be the heir to his grandfather's old socks. The leading lady is a trifle too fat to play the boarding school girl, who is deported to that institution because she painted landscapes on papa's dress shirt. However, all ends happily at the "fade out." The titles are acceptable the direction is as good as could be expected of the man directing it, and the picture ought to prove very inspiring to bridge workers and pie manufacturers.

BACK to prolong life" is what I always say when in from Broadway and the lure of the theaters. A week in old New York means so much if one knows how to utilize time and make short calls. Well, I made ten in one day and that was going some! Found William L. Sherrill in his new quarters in the Times Building and in a genial frame of mind. While telling me of the success of "God's Man" and of his coming releases his son Jack bounded into the office, much to my delight, for we fans like him tremendously and will not forget his clever work in "The Witching Hour." Upstairs I found the Arrow Film office, only to learn that an old friend, Howell Hansell, who directed "The Deemster" and other remarkable pictures, was ill at his home in New Rochelle. Then I went up Broadway to call on Lynde Denig.

Going over to 729 Seventh avenue I found other friends, like Louis Selznick, a member of the Boston Film Club. He was alive with news and talked prosperity. Over his sumptuous offices a greeting awaited me from the Artcraft publicity man, Pete J. Schmid, from whom I gathered information of value. Returning hotelward I found Stanley Hand ensconced in his new office with the World Film folks and congratulated him on his promotion. Then upstairs to see that prince of publicity men, Leander Richardson. Around the corner I ran into Royal Byron, of stage and screen fame, on his way for a rehearsal with the Edison company—the play, "The Lady of the Photograph." Passing Loew's I dropped in to see Nance O'Neil in "The Final Payment," rather gruesome, but well acted and some good sea stuff. Too tragic for these days and not to be commended.

At the Triangle office I found the very approachable manager, who in turn put me in touch with Mrs. Toby, the capable publicity woman, with C. H. Bristol, who made my call one long to be remembered. There was the "glad hand' at Paramount headquarters and an atmosphere of hospitality everywhere there.

Time prevented visiting studios this trip—a pleasure deferred. Saw "Peter Ibbetson" and was glad to again hear the voices of the Barrymore brothers, Constance Collier and Laura Hope Crews, all of whom so adorn the screen. Great play, which I predict will become one for the screen later. I forgot to mention one of the treats of my visit, and that was in witnessing Chapin's wonderful impersonation of Lincoln at the Globe theater. Have already written of the private view here of two reels and how we all appreciated it. This is a play for children to see, as kiddies play an important part all through. To advertise it as historical or educational alone is a mistake. It is these and far more—an intensely human play picturing actual scenes in the life of America's great martyr.

"That evening," as they say on the titles, I dropped into Georgie Cohan's theater to see "Redemption" and rather liked it on the whole. Can readily see why it grips the house because of the mother love and the fine support they have given Evelyn Nesbit, who really does good work, though badly made up. Charles Wellesley, who is in many pictures here of late, was capital. The play was clean, had a big underlying theme and ended just right. It ought to go anywhere. Let it stand on merit and serve its purpose.

Of course, a trip to the metropolis would be incomplete without a visit to the Rialto, which I found in summer dress and with a staff of picturesque ushers. I saw the Lasky film, "The Jaguar's Claws," and didn't like it a little bit. No time for Mexican bandit stuff, featuring immortality at that. It was bad in a big spot and Hayakawa deserved better. Yes, the outdoor scenery is great if one hankers for Mexico. Monday I had the taste taken out on seeing "On Trial," now on here for a run, I hope. The Globe Feature Film Company was enterprising enough to secure it and I am sending fans to see it. This was the first offering of Mr. Rothapfel under the new league of which he is president, and it is a credit to the Essanay company. We have in this several old favorites and some who have participated in the Ade fables.

Have seen a few pictures since returning. "The Stolen Paradise," a strong play with Ethel Clayton doing her best work this season, is one. Edward Langford served to fill the bill, but we wanted to horsewhip him at one stage of the game. His impersonation of the man physically gone blind was well done, but the author made him blind in other ways. "Oliver Twist" called out the literary set and all lovers of Dickens to the Exeter theater, which gives us "Tales of Two Cities" this week. "Romance of the Redwoods" was thoroughly enjoyable and full of punch. Certainly Artcraft is giving us some fine close-ups of Mary Pickford and Elliott Dexter in this. "The Man Who Made Good" gave opportunity for Jack Devereux, who is a local favorite. The play had new touches and some twists which ought to make it popular. "The Silent Partner" showed further skill on the part of Marshall Neilan and was a fair Lasky offering, though not up to the standard. "Happiness" (from Triangle) was the best in a long time for its domestic and college touches and also its illustrating snobbery vs. democracy. Enid Bennett has some part and caught the house from the time she winked at uncle who supposed her a snob (thanks to yellow journalism). "The Auction of Virtue" in spite of its misleading title went well, for we rather like Naomi Childers and the Art Drama productions generally. There was a refreshing absence of sex business and a good lesson told without cant.

Well, "The Masque of Life" is some picture and held the audience spellbound at the Park theater, where it ran a week, placed there by the American Feature Film Company, Louis Mayer, president. All New York picture playgoers saw it, doubtless, and experienced the same thrills. I wonder if such pictures are necessary for our entertainment, involving as this did some loss of life and cruelty to animals in the making, to say nothing of that wonderful scene on the chimney top with a real baby. Women about me hid their eyes fearing a tragedy. We must take our hats off to Italian courage in acting in this picture and to that wonderful monkey. One quite agrees with Darwin on seeing such an exhibition as this. On the whole, the picture, though gruesome in spots, is most artistic in detail, the coloring fine and the players well cast. One missed the close-ups and wanted some on Hamilton Revelle and Rita Jolivet, who did the Pierrot and Pierette stunts so well. The picture is great from any standpoint for those who revel in sensations, and it does have the happy ending so dear to all in this era of democracy and hoped for downfall of monarchy.

This summer I am going to visit picture houses outside of the Hub, and began at Great Barrington, this state, en route to New York. Here I found a commodious theater, seating 1,000, managed by a live-wire young man, Earl B. Faifstanger, who is giving patrons Paramount, Pathe, World and other good pictures. What they need in that conservative town is a live newspaper—one to interest, arouse and amuse the people and to give space to entertainments worth while, such as this young man is seeking to do with little encouragement from his public.

Here is a title that jars: "Mrs. Mayor Mitchel." Pretty bad English for a Hearst-Pathe reel, yet I saw it three times here and in New York preceding the picture of the Union Square battleship. "Mrs. Doctor" and "Mrs. General" we get once in a while. Give us a censor on title editors.

The Hub is "de-lighted" to know that Julian Eltinge is to be screened, for here he made his first hit as an amateur actor and we are proud of him. We congratulate the Laskys and anticipate the first picture.

TWO DIRECTORS FOR FAIRBANKS.

The demand from Artcraft Pictures Corporation for an increased number of Douglas Fairbanks pictures has compelled the actor to give thought to the possibilities of employing two directors. With two directors on the job, it will mean an increased amount of work on his part, but yet each picture will be in keeping with his high standard and contain the same detailed treatment given his previous films. The second director has not been selected.

HUMPHREY TO COVER NORTHERN INDIANA.

J. A. Humphrey has been engaged by Sidney Abel, Chicago manager for V-L-S-E. as a salesman to cover the northern section of Indiana. Manager Abel also has secured J. H. Cohen to cover Southeastern Illinois.

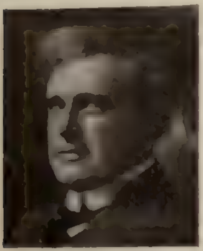
MANSFIELD, Martha. Born in New York City. English parentage. Is five feet, four inches tall and weighs 125 pounds. Light complexion, golden hair and blue eyes. When Max Linder came to Essanay to resume his comedy career, it was announced that he was going to surround himself with the prettiest girls to be coaxed into pictures—and you do not have to coax very hard to get any girl into the studios. Miss Mansfield was selected from the bevy of beauties to be his leading woman and she made her debut as a lead in Max Comes Across—and you could not blame Max for trying so hard to win that kiss. She also played the leads in the other Linder comedies. She has had rather a brief stage career, making her debut at the Century theater, New York, in 1915. She likes outdoor amusements but her favorite sport is horseback riding.

Martha Mansfield

QUIRK, William A. (Billy). Born in Jersey City, N. J. Irish parentage. Is five feet, six inches tall and weighs 142 pounds. Blond hair, blue eyes, light complexion. Mr. Quirk made his stage debut in August, 1896. He has played in stock, with repertoire companies, in vaudeville and with some of the noted producers and productions, including David Belasco (in The Rose of the Rancho), Connors and Dillingham, in The Top O' the World, with James J. Corbett and others. Ten years later, in June, 1906, he made his debut as a screen actor with the Biograph, his first appearance being in The Renunciation with Mary Pickford. He played in the Muggsey series with Biograph. He has also played with Solax, Pathe, Universal and Vitagraph and at present is directing the Black Diamond comedies. Some of his best liked plays have been Billy's Shoes, Billy's Board Bill, and other "Bill" stories.

Billy Quirk



CURRAN, Thomas A. Born in Australia. English parentage. Is five feet, nine inches tall and weighs 155 pounds. Grey hair, dark blue eyes, fair complexion. Mr. Curran, though born in Australia, obtained his stage training in the United States, making his debut in San Francisco in 1897. After some years in vaudeville and stock on the Pacific coast, he returned to Australia and played for several years in Australasia, mostly in musical comedies. He returned to the States in 1912, opening in vaudeville in a dramatic sketch but changing over to the tour of Oh, Oh, Delphine, and later did the Englishman in Excuse Me. In 1913 he turned his attention to motion pictures and has played engagements with Solax, Universal and Metro, but found his best opening in the Thanhouser company, for which he played among other roles the artist in Inspiration, and Geoffrey in Silas Marner with Frederick Warde.

Thos A. Curran

RUEBENS, Alma. Born in San Francisco, Calif. Her father was French and her mother American. Is five feet, seven inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Dark complexion, black hair and dark eyes. Miss Ruebens has had no stage experience, her debut being made in Reggie Mixes In, a Triangle, in February, 1915. She has also appeared in The Half Breed, The Americano, Truthful Tulliver and A Woman's Awakening. The Ince employment has been her only studio engagement and she has no long record of previous studio connections. She runs true to form in that she is a leading woman, but she goes all wrong on stating her fads and avocations. She does not like "all outdoor sports" and she does not pick out half a dozen of the most fashionable and specialize in these. What do you suppose she does when she is not playing leads? She studies domestic science! That's another name for efficiency housekeeping.

Alma Rueben

LA MONT, Alice. Born in New York City, French parentage. Is five feet, two inches tall and weighs 115 pounds. Dark complexion. Dark brown hair and eyes. Miss La Mont has had considerable stage experience in stock, working up to leads; and stock with its constantly changing roles is about the best practical experience for picture work. In pictures she has also had a wide experience, for she has played with William S. Hart, Richard Garrick and Ed. Lawrence, and you can find out a lot about screen work from those three experts, and for that matter she has played in a wide range of characters, from those of the untamed west to the effetest sort of east, and she has played leads, at that, though she is still some distance from the point where she will stop having birthdays. To keep in trim for her work she goes in for outdoor sports and swims and rides.

By Clarence E. Sinn.

EXAMPLE 29½ shows new dominant 7ths produced by lowering other notes in our diminished 7th. Notice the first line (marked 1). We start with the dominant 7th of the key of F. Diminish it by sharpening the lower note (C). Now let us lower the second note from the top (G to G flat). We now have the dominant 7th of the key of C flat. (The C sharp is now converted to D flat—an enharmonic change.)

Or we can lower the note G to F sharp—the same thing—and get a dominant 7th of B natural—which sounds the same as C flat. In the second line of Example 29½ (the one marked 2) we lower the note E a half tone (E to E flat). This gives us the dominant 7th chord of A flat (our C sharp being converted to D flat).

(G to G♭)
Dominant 7th (Diminished 7th) Dom't 7th of C♭. (or.) B major. (minor)
(2.) (E to E♭)
Diminished 7th
Dom't 7th of A♭ major. (minor.)
(3.) (C♯ to C♮)
(Dim 7th)
F.maj. (minor.)

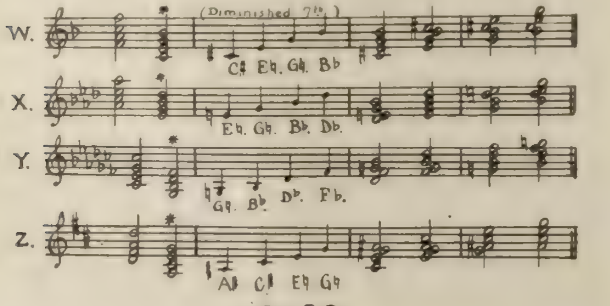
Ex. 29½.

The part marked 3 shows the note C sharp lowered a half tone, which gives us the dominant 7th of F—the key we started from.

Enharmonic Changes.

In two instances above we said C sharp is converted to D flat. On the piano and organ these two notes are identical; they are played on the same key, and sound the same. The only difference is in its relation to a chord, or in the manner in which it is written. When you get used to thinking of the dominant 7th chord in every key and how it resolves to its own tonic chord, you cannot help but think of the exact notes in the chord. In example 29½, line 2, we have lowered our E to E flat. We now have a chord which sounds all right, but does not resemble any things we have so far seen. However, when we think of the note C sharp as D flat, we at once recognize the chord as the dominant 7th of the key of A flat.

Example 30 may make this plainer. It shows four different keys, viz., the key of F, the key of A flat, of C flat and of D. These are marked respectively W, X, Y and Z. Each shows first the tonic chord, then the dominant 7th of its particular key (F, A flat, C flat or D).



Ex. 30.

The first line (marked W) we have seen before in preceding examples. The second line, X, is in the key of A flat. Dominant 7th built on E flat. Raising this note to E natural produces chord of the diminished 7th. Examples Y and Z are similar. The diminished 7th chords are shown, first in separate notes, then in chords in all four positions. Compare the last two measures of each line (the chords in half notes), play them together, study them well and you will understand how one may be converted to the other—mentally—while playing.

VICTROLA IN LOBBY HOLDS BUSINESS.

The Alhambra theater of Cleveland, Ohio, placed a very handsome victrola in the lobby of the theater for the entertainment of the huge crowds that were kept standing in the lobby awaiting the second show.

Did it pay?

"It certainly did," said the manager, "and it was a case of traceable returns, too. People are not fond of standing up for an hour or so under any circumstances, and our greatest problem was to hold the people who came to the theater until we could get them seated. It is very poor business to spend a lot of money in advertising to draw people to your theater and then let them go elsewhere because you cannot seat them."

"ONE LAW FOR BOTH."

The musical accompaniment to the film drama, "One Law for Both," while composed of many of the best classics, is not arranged as to build up a greater support for each climax. Therein lies the art of arranging for the moving picture, to employ music solely to accentuate the effect of the picture.

The Rachmaninoff Prelude in C sharp minor is used as an overture, which is followed by the opening theme of the Tschaikowski, March Slave, an excellent theme for such a picture but in coupling this theme with the Old English melody, "The Lass with a Delicate Air," played both in the major and minor, the beauty of the former theme is lost and the favorite Arne melody is for a time shorn of its beauty.

Among other numbers used in this score are: Waltz of the Flowers from the Nutcracker Suite of Tschaikowski, Night Song, Schumann; Rapsody No. 2, Liszt Overture to the Merry Wives of Windsor, Nicolai, and Elysium by Oley Speaks.

F. E. KNEELAND.

FAIRBANKS CONTEMPLATING TOUR ABROAD.

Douglas Fairbanks is entertaining the thought of touring around the world next summer provided war conditions do not interfere with his present plans. It is his intention to do a series of five-reel plays for release through the Artcraft, dealing with an American touring abroad, whose romance takes him to the various foreign countries. He will be accompanied on this trip by Director John Emerson and four prominent players. Director John Emerson has purchased a theme upon which will be based these European releases. The combined dramatic and educational value of these Artcraft pictures should create a tremendous demand for them from exhibitors.

DAZEY MOVES TO SANTA BARBARA.

Charles T. Dazy has severed his connection with the Lasky Company and has moved himself to Santa Barbara, where he will henceforth write for the American Film Company. Mr. Dazey, it will be remembered, was known for his plays "In Old Kentucky" and "Home Folks" before he began writing for the screen. Some of his latest successes are "Manhattan Madness," "Wolf Lowry," "The Flower of Faith," etc. Mr. Dazey's son Frank will collaborate with him in writing for the American.

Advertising for Exhibitors

House Fronts.

EVIDENTLY Brother Richardson is not too busy swinging round the circuit and [illegible] the operators to remember the rest of us. He sends in a photograph he took down in Texas and opines it will serve as a text for an article on poster advertising. It is not alone the foundation but the first story. Look at the picture. If you had money in your clothes, your best girl on your arm and common sense, which of these two houses do you think would stand the best chance of getting your money? To be fair, we'll reverse the question. Would the larger house get your amusement appropriation if it were all smeared up with eight sheets? Can you have any respect for a place that hides its shamed face behind a mass of dirty, messy looking posters? Can you have any confidence in the sort of performance you will be apt to get? Would you look for new films, comfortable seats, good projection and proper music back of a flash like that? It is very evident that the little house is trying to get patrons from the big one by making a louder noise, but we do not think the scheme works well. People are wise these days and they have scant respect for the house all plastered with [illegible] bills. They know that the better the front the more likely they are to see a good show inside because the man who has sense enough to keep his eight sheets on the billboards and his ones in brass frames also has sense enough to pick a good program and run it properly in clean decent and light conditions.

Too Many Caps.

A. Kuchs, of the Empire, Maryville, Mo., sends in a couple of one sheet programs that would be better if the printer could experience a change of heart. The copy and layout are all right, but the printer seems to have no small display faces and uses too much all capital Roman. There is no variety. You look at the sheet and it is all the same. It is most all twelve point and too much caps. The reproduction shows something of the style and the boxed days and prices but the days should be dated, as the only date is a twelve point date hidden under an ornament at the top. It would be better to drop to an eight point lower case for the smaller lines and use the full face for titles if the printer can dig nothing else, but even in a small town a printer should have a few pounds of twelve point display type. If he has not, he should at least avoid too many all cap lines. He can do that much. The heading carries the times of performance, which is a good plan. The type page is six inches wide and from ten to eleven deep according to the copy.

Ruff Stuff.

Here are a couple of specimens from Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty, Spokane. Ruff is not going in for the undressed drama. It just happened that way. Each is four columns wide and the full depth of the page, Sunday issues. The letters of "She" in the left hand example are made of rule, apparently and the corner pieces seem to be some letter reversed and printed face down. The bottom shows how the cuts recently reproduced in the department work in. And here's a hint for hustlers. The Liberty, Seattle, ran that cut for Her Nature Dance, on the right, a week before Ruff did, so he obtained a mat from Gordon (100%) Fullerton and saved the cost of artists work and engraving, merely casting the cut. There are a number of good points in these two ads. Note in the Hart advertisement the "Starting today, stopping Wednesday Night." That fixes the date like a recent "Now—right now." The small portrait is of a new organist, Frank Monroe, and the underline is "Music you take home in your feet." Note too, the "This time" in the box beside Hart's portrait. That is better than "The story" or some equivalent. An advertisement not reproduced announces a news feature and adds 'You'll see more than if you had been there." This is a line that means something, for the cameras get the best and most varied viewpoints.

Too Large.

A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., wants a comment on his programs, be they "weak or rotten, good, bad or indifferent." He knows that criticism sometimes helps more than praise. The program was started with the new year and the editor of the local paper, who prints the issue expressed doubt as to Mr. Middleton's ability to make it pay, but he points out that it is still going and growing. The sheet is a four page eight by eleven, three columns to the page with a little more than one page of advertising. It is set in twelve point and here is the chief objection. The twelve point type on a thirteen em slug look too large. Undoubtedly it brings results, yet it is probable that even those who read it feel that it doesn't look quite right. They would not realize the difference if the paper were set in a ten or eight point, but they would have greater confidence in what was said because then the sheet would look more like a paper and less like a herald. An eight point would mean a lot more work and a greater expense, but it might be possible to get another column of advertising and get the money back if the paper were more like a publication and less like an advertisement. The front page of the issue to hand is given to a tabulation of the weekly program; not the program for the week, but the run of the program every week, by brands. The announcement by dated days follows, taking slightly more than two pages, and the rest is given to house talk and news. There is one convincing article on road shows of the sort that make De Queen. We recently said something along the same lines, but it will bear repetition. Here it is:

"You know that feeling of falling fram a dizzy height as in a dream? Yes. That's exactly the feeling one experiences when seeing a big picture production such as is offered at the Queen Theater daily, with real actors and actresses, with all its scenic beauty, and immediately following it to see the ordinary repertoire company, as seen by our patrons last week. $35.00 leading ladies and $10.00 a week support, St. Elmo and East Lynn companies at 35c top are a thing of the past. The big plays and big stars can be seen for so little money in pictures and what's better, we don't have to go to New York to see them. Who was it asked us to book a road attraction? Who was it?"

And there is another angle to this road show proposition. It breaks the run of regular patronage. For one thing it means a difference in price, an inferior attraction at an increased admission. It takes in one night money that would last two or three nights at usual prices, it causes a reaction against amusements if the show is not a good one, and unsettles the clientele generally. Mr. Middleton did not send his operator to Mr. Richardson's Fort Worth meeting, but says both he and the operator are getting great good from the Richardson reports of the meetings and house investigations. His operator is also the local photographer and sign painter as well, the Queen running only in the evening. If he will take his camera to the theater and shoot some of his sign work we'll be glad to see it. We'll be still more glad to see Mr. Livingston cut down to an eight point when price permits, for he will then be able to say more and say it more effectively. As it stands we think the size of the type is about the only thing against the program.

More Like It.

The Stanley, Philadelphia, has come out with a regular program at last instead of the four pager the house has used for so long. It is sixteen pages and cover, and with twenty pages at command it is not easy to understand why the program itself is so very poorly laid. Out of twenty pages surely the house could have afforded two whole pages for the real program but evidently the outside advertising loomed larger than the real purpose of the issue as these two pages will show. That schedule of prices and phone call should have gone to some other page and the better plan would have been to have put this and similar material on the first inside page with the program on the double middle and nothing else on those pages even if some advertisers are willing to pay a couple of dollars more for that preferred space. The Stanley Circuit is too large and important to run around chasing ten cent pieces and dropping dollars in the chase. The other pages carry two twelve em columns of advertising and an eleven em column of talk of varying sorts. The issue is a better recommendation for the advertising solicitor that it is for the editor, but at least it is a start. The Stanley has always been years and miles behind the leaders in its advertising. Now it has at least made a start, though it has a long way to go to catch up.

Catchlines.

Looking through a recent issue of the paper we came upon the advertisement of the Globe ventilators. The advertisement is nicely laid, taking less than one fourth of the space for the announcement and using the white paper as an attractor, but the top line is the gem of the layout. It reads "It takes more wind to blow out a match than to operate Globe ventilators." That is not merely smart. It is genuinely clever. We cannot imagine any phrase that will convey a better suggestion of extreme ease of operation. It is not possible always to hit upon such a happy line, but it is worth studying a lot to get a phrase for your own advertising that says much in little space. It doesn't say that Globe ventilators are the best in just those words because each advertiser's wares are the best. It conveys the same idea in a simple yet striking word picture. Do the same with your house catchlines.

G. G. G. G.

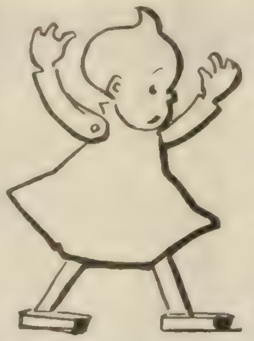
A gay, gingery geyser of giggles, guaranteed to goad any grouch into gracious grimace.

Sounds as though Rff used to be with a circus, what! But it's a good line of alliteration.

Great Cico.

You might as well get acquainted with Cico Toodles first as last, so be among the first to write his parents for information. He may be addressed in care of the Cahill-Igoe Company, of Chicago (117 West Harrison street), and he is old in experience though young in age. He is a born advertising hustler and a credit to his creators. The Cahill-Igoe Company has created a number of capital advertising devices, including post cards in colors and similar advertising, but young Cico promises to become the star of the lot, and he is worth while finding out about. As a rule we do not care for ready made publicity ideas, for it is seldom that a general scheme has a definite and particular appeal in all localities, but this idea promises a ready-made publicity stunt that is inexpensive and yet which should pull business in a place of any size. Of course, the smaller the town the more intensive can your work be made, but Cico can work the big time or the one nighters and hold his own with the best of them. Ask about him. It will pay you.



Getting It All.

The Southern Electrical Co., San Diego, Cal., believes in getting all that is coming. It has a motion picture supply department along with its other branches. This is under the management of Claude D. Seaman. Since theater equipment is so largely electrical there is no reason why a theater department should not be made a part of the general enterprise, and every good reason why it should. Mr. Seaman sends in the first issue of a new house organ, a six page railroad covering the entire business. To win a welcome the little publication carries a pictorial supplement, one of the Water Color Company's artist's series, and promises to give one with each issue. There is no advertising on this save a trade mark seal, printed in gold, about the size of a ten cent piece. The gold stands out surprisingly well against the brown of the print—a hint to others who use either these, the Kraus program covers or the issues of the Triangle in rotogravure. Wherever you go this is the age of getting and keeping in touch with the public. Once a house organ was a rarity in any line. Now most public utility companies realize the value of this form of advertising to get into sympathetic touch with the public. It costs money but rightly done nothing is more valuable or yields a larger return for the investment. And the real answer is that you must give them something besides advertisement. Make them want to read it, make them look for it, and then what you have to say on your own behalf will have double and even triple force.

Night Displays.

The Midwest Photoplay Corporation, of Kansas City, sends in two interesting flashlights of night displays for their attractions. The first of these is for "The Argyle Case" and was done by the Regent, of Kansas City. We do not like that flag, strung from the electric feed wire, though it does not cover up the light sign as much as would seem from the picture, since the flag is strung to the wire which runs at the curb. In the photograph it seems almost to rest against the electric sign and cover it. The objection is that the hanging of the flag over the sidewalk is makeshif and undignified. If nothing better offered, it should have been draped from the top of the building, but it would be comparatively little trouble to raise a staff on the sign itself, above the house name, and fly the flag from that, or the staff could have projected from the awning, even at the cost of covering up the banner. The house is lighted so tastefully in other ways that the hanging of the flag emphasizes itself. As a matter of fact, if persons are interested in "The Argyle Case," or any other film, they will go to see the picture whether the flag flies or not. If they are not interested, the flag will not pull them in. If it is desired to fly the flag, it should properly float from a staff on top of the building. The other flashlight shows the Twelfth Street theater, also in Kansas City, advertising Nazimova in "War Brides." Here the picture was taken while the house was in, and a better look at the general display is given. Note the picture frames at the right of the picture, and note that as many persons are interested in these as in the work of the photographers. The frames are well away from the box office and exit. It looks as though they were on a screen about the entrance door. If this is the fact it is an excellent idea, since it affords protection to the doorman and to the patron as well, helps to cut down house draughts in winter and gives a certain finish to the lobby. It will be noticed that not much paper is displayed, photographs being given preference in the lobby. That awning space seems going to waste. It would probably pay to remove the "Motion Pictures," replace it with sheets of opal glass and letter in the attraction in oils. It would not be unduly expensive and it would make a fine display.

English Publicity.

We have received a batch of interesting Triangle material from the London office handling that brand. The last we heard Philip Wright Whitcombe was giving his attention to this publicity. If it is not he whoever it is has followed his lead nicely. Most of the exhibits are booklets, of which there are three issues, for comedies, for dramas and for dramas not released on the regular program. Both comedies and dramas are released in "sets" of eight on regular program, and for each a special booklet is gotten out. Each release offers "phrases for bills," which we would call catchlines, "program sentences," the stars to bill, what they do, who they are, the story, and "what to tell your patrons." In the latter the big advertising point is given as "Tell them they ought to see the taxi which is blown up sky-high and lands on a tree top," or "Tell them they should see Fay Tincher, disguised as a man, smoking a big cigar." The books are all four by six inches, a handy pocket size which gives them their name of pocket books, and they are full of advertising suggestions, and information made up with the cuts which will be rented for [illegible] cents a week each, while a set of stills can be hired for fifty cents, with paper at six and seven cents a sheet. More is put into small space than is carried in many of our campaign books, and it is given in such a manner that the exhibitor does not have to wade through a mass of puffery to get at the facts. They give the facts and trust to the helpfulness of these to make the sale, backed up by the general advertising. We reproduce a pair of the pages. The trade mark and cut captions are in red, the remainder being in black. It is a pity we cannot reproduce one of the cards also used to advertise the "eights," but these are all on colored stock that will not reproduce. The front carries a general announcement and the back the details in a form much like the Emanuel program style recently reproduced, but with inset dates, which is something we hope Emanuel will come to now that he is married and settled down. There is more real help for the exhibitor in the twenty-eight pages of one of these booklets than we get over here in a year, and twenty-eight pages covers eight releases, at that. It is one of the things a real open market has done for the British exhibitor. He can go where he can get the greatest assistance in making money, and all hustle to give him aid. Apart from the programs are fine examples of good printing, the covers being in red, green and black (the Triangle colors) on white paper.

Story

Here's Another New One.

Alex T. Case of the Maywood Opera House, Corning, Cal., has something new. He sends in his programs with this letter:

> Herewith is the samples of my weekly program on which I [illegible] to have your comments.
> It is my aim to make my programs so attractive and readable that they will be retained by the holder, for I believe that it is poor economy to offer my patrons printing which they will glance at and then throw away.
> I have adopted a policy of MAILING every program I print, addressed to one of the feminine members of each family, which insures the program going into the HOME.
> Your department in the Moving Picture World is very valuable.

The program is a small, plain colored cover 3½ by 6¼, but in folding after printing Mr. Case does not make the usual neat job of it. He does not bring the edges together, but folds so that there is a difference of an eighth of an inch. Instead of the usual sticker of gummed paper, he uses a stamp for the sticker, the stamp adhering to the [illegible] on the back of the third page with the rest on the front page. The address is written on the margin of the program and Mr. Case has a self-contained program that represents a minimum of effort. Funny no one else thought of that idea. It works well, looks well and carries well. In folding it is no more trouble than in bringing the edges together. For that matter it is probable that the stamp might be lapped over the even edges, if the greater portion of the stamp were on the address side to be postmarked. Mr. Case has the right idea as to the program. He makes it readable. There is merely the program announcement on page two, taking up about half of that page. The rest is that of the plays and pictures, not press stuff talk, but chat about the plays; stuff people will read and really want to read, not mere adjectives but information interestingly presented. The [illegible] should be [illegible], but this is about the only suggestion we can offer. You [illegible], when we say that the program is interesting we do not mean it is stuffed with a lot of press agent dope. It is interesting because it is not press agent stuff. The press stuff is apparently denatured where it is used at all, but most of it is rewritten, which is about the only way most press stuff can be made interesting. Some exhibitors think a lot of rot about Miss Blank's new 999 horsepower car and how John Jones was really drowned is interesting. It may be, but it is not as vital as talk of the coming shows, and this talk can be made just as readable as stories of ladies who write and direct all of their plays. And right here is Mr. Case's number:

> Now Chautauqua means real money out of the Opera House [illegible]. The Opera House is the only business concern in Corning which has a legitimate reason for objecting to Chautauqua, but we are going to close up shop and plug as hard to make Chautauqua a howling success as though it were our own show. And we are going to enjoy it WITH you. Just remember that the other fifty-one weeks of the year, the Opera House is open for your entertainment, good business or bad, rain or shine.

He's good for the town and what's good for the town. Don't fight the Chautauqua. Either help it or make it help you. Subsequent programs announce that the tickets for the Chautauqua are on sale at the box office.

At It Again.

A recent program of the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., advertises for a small farm to be used as the location for a motion picture studio. The Third Street was the first house to own its camera and make a locally produced drama, and it has had the Famous Players and other companies as guests. They are always up to something, and this time it may be a producing company. If it is, we bet they make good pictures. They are using the Kraus portrait front programs regularly now, and are getting a better result with their inside printing through a better choice of ink, but they have not hit it yet. Perhaps some shade of orange toned with black might do it, but the better stunt would be to print in black and not try to simulate rotogravure. A good original is always better than a poor copy, and since they cannot get from their local printers as brilliant cut work as the Kraus Company gives, it would be better not to try to compete but to run in black and let it go at that.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

The Photoplaywright

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Saying It All.

HALL CAINE, in a recent issue of the Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly of London is interviewed on the subject of the picturization of two of his stories. He says so much that is of real value it is to be regretted that his entire interview cannot be read by everyone in the business. Mr. Caine is an author; not a writer of photoplays, but he sees with a clarity of vision that is too often lacking in those more fully informed and yet so close to the daily grind that they lack perspective. This may be another way of saying that Mr Caine thinks as we think, but we are glad to find our own opinions verified by so unquestionable an authority. Mr. Caine says, for example:

> Creation and production in the kinema art, as in the art of the drama, are, of course, two entirely different vocations. One man may, in the rarest instances, be capable of both. Few, very few men should attempt both.

Clearly Mr. Caine does not read the American press notices of the innumerable stars and directors who "both write and direct all their own plays." Perhaps he has mercifully been spared the infliction of looking at the machine-made product. There are very, very few men who are mentally fitted to both create an idea and realize it in action, but fully half the producers do this very thing, and there does not seem to be one single manufacturer of pictures in these United States who himself has the artistic sense to perceive the badness of his pictures and trace the reason. Again Mr. Caine says:

> I think that imaginative writers may very well devote themselves to this art alone in future. I think it not unlikely that great kinematic writers may arise within measurable time, who recognizing the limitations of the kinema, and at the same time realizing its developments, will create stories that will be as moving to the eye as are those which great novelists have created to the ear.

The great stories Mr. Caine admits are to come from the future development of writers who study the art, who do not seek to exceed its limitations and yet who appreciate its possibilities. This is precisely what we have said and what Vachel Lindsay has said and what Hugo Munsterberg has said and what Walter Prichard Eaton can never understand in the whole course of his narrow, near-sighted existence. Photoplay is not a bastard form of drama, and it never can be made important so long as it is treated as drama. Nothing has so held back the art of photoplay as the fact that most of the men who head the various organizations are men who are familiar only with the drama form and can make photoplays only in weak imitation of that form. We need directors who love their art, not broken down stage managers who are lost in admiration of their own works. Here and there are men and women who are working with faces turned to the light, but they are still too terribly handicapped by the policies of their superiors who cannot see after long connection with the business what Hall Caine has seen and understood almost at a glance. Drama is drama and story is story. Photoplay is the offspring of both but partaking more nearly the characteristics of story.

And evidently Mr. Caine has seen into the petty meanness of the business, for he says:

> I certainly think that the scenario writer's name, even when it is not that of a distinguished novelist or dramatist, should always be published and I am more than a little shocked to hear that in many instances the scenario writer's name is suppressed. I can only assume that this is due to the vanity of certain producers, who not being content with the large and sufficient reward of their own special vocation, desire to annex the reward of the creative writer also.

[illegible] is worse in degree. The average producer does not desire to annex the reward due the creative writer. He is morally and mentally incapable of seeing that any person other than himself can possibly be deserving of credit. We personally differ with Mr. Caine in that we do not think that a writer should be given credit for a mere idea, but we think that Mr. Caine does not realize the [illegible] only depths into which we have fallen in America and supposed that writers really write their scripts instead of merely supplying a general plot which is reconstructed by a staff man.

Speaking of the value of the plot, he says:

> I think the story is the all-important feature of a film. In the kinema, as in all imaginative arts, it is the story first. [illegible] however important, is secondary and subsidiary. Success depends first of all upon story. Spectacle and action, apart from story, may fail to hold the interest of reader or hearer, but story never fails, never has, never will, never can.

And elsewhere he writes:

> Furthermore, it should be remembered that effort after spectacle is apt to defeat itself. Where the number of human faces or figures represented in a scene are so many as to be too small for the human eye to identify as such * * * the object of [illegible] has obviously been defeated. The scene may fail in effect. It may daze and bewilder the spectator.

This, of course, is purely from the story teller's point of view. There are times when the movement of the mass is more striking than details of that movement, where the mass is, for the moment, more important than detail, where it is employed for a specific purpose to advance the telling of the tale and not merely to cater to the desire for spectacle alone; indeed remembering some thirty years back we recall Wilson Barrett in his adaptation of "The Deemster," and we recall the clever way in which Mr. Barrett staged the Tynwald scenes when Ben is exiled. The crowd was not a definite collection of men and women. It was merely a mass of humanity which by opening up a lane through which the excommunicated Dan moved, emphasized the loneliness to which that decree sentenced him. The mob was no more important than the scenery: far less impressive than H. Cooper Cliffe, who played the minister, but it was a necessary part of the scene and it had to be a mob. In the main Mr. Caine is right, but he does not differentiate between mobs employed as a setting and mere parades which serve no good end.

On the same theme Mr. Caine brings out another point too seldom realized when he says:

> Spectacles in drama are by no means necessary to the highest dramatic effect. Two persons standing alone on the largest stage will often hold an audience as breathlessly as five hundred persons engaged in violent action.

Generally it will be found that these few persons, carrying the story, give reason or at least excuse for the mob. The mob as such is not of interest, but gains interest only through the result of its actions on those who have engaged our interest through intimate acquaintance. The Romans, besieging the gates of Troy would be no more interesting than a gang or house wreckers did we not know of the effect their success would have upon the lives of Helen and others.

Bannister Merwin has done much to interest the real writers of Great Britain in photoplay. We do not know whether he is in touch with Mr. Caine or not, but it is beginning to look as though we must turn to Great Britain presently for really great writers. Our story tellers have become so disgusted with the manner in which they have been treated by the studios, that long after conditions change it will not be possible to again interest the really notable writers in photoplay. The absolute stupidity of the average editor and production manager has driven real writers from the field. They may sell the picture rights to their fiction stories, but it will be a long time before they can be induced to closely study photoplay writing that they may turn out their product in proper form. Unless a radical change is made we must presently look to Great Britain for the best stories for at least British producers, though unable to offer such large payments as can be made here, have given what is perhaps more important to the real artist, courteous treatment and careful production.

Half Sheets.

To write continuities the best way is to get some very cheap paper and have it cut into sheets about half the regulation size. Number a set of the sheets up to the highest number you generally use. Now start to write your scenes, one to the sheet. The numbered sheets permit you to keep count of how the scenes are running without making you stop to see what the last scene number was. When the continuity is done you can play with the scenes as you like, transposing, eliminating or adding as your judgment dictates. When you are content with the arrangement, you clean copy and amplify at the same time, having first renumbered the scene pages in their proper order. It helps a lot to have a hole punched in one of the upper corners that you may slip the sheets on a bill hook. After you are through number fresh sheets up to the last number you used and you have the pack ready for the next job. We spoke of this scheme when we first put it into practice, but it has worked so well in the interval that we are laying more stress upon the idea. It is the most practical and convenient way of working and the only way permitting absolute elasticity in handling.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From Australia.

Ordinarily I do not publish anonymous letters, but in this case will break that rule and publish a letter from Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, which is signed "Kangaroo," because of the fact that it comes from that faroff land. Kangaroo has the following to say:

> I have just gone through the December 2 to 23 Moving Picture Worlds, and although a bit behind time, it can't be helped as we are so very far away. The "World" is, however, well worth waiting for, and it is a case of 'better late than never.' I was mightily pleased with the way you roasted the fire underwriters. We have the same problem over here. I thoroughly agree with you with regards to getting the port shutters down as quickly as possible in case of fire, but I don't altogether approve your idea though it is a very much better and quicker way than the underwriters' arrangement of metal fuses. I have one wall bent shutter in front of each machine, held by a trip-hook, which is attached to a common bar with three levers. Two of the levers have a chain attached, which hangs over each machine on a level with the head so that all that is required in case of accident is to pull the chain and down comes each shutter, falling on rubber buffers to avoid any noise which might alarm the audience. The center lever is also attached by a chain which runs over a pulley, and on the end is a two-pound weight, the weight coming down from the ceiling to within six inches of the floor. This weight acts (I can't quite get the brother's meaning here, but think he means acts as a sort of counterbalance. Ed.) In this chain, near the weight, is a special square link with a small roller which hangs by ⅛ of an inch to a trigger, the same being released by a magnet. This coil is magnetized by means of a thermostat fixed over each machine. You can also control the magnet by means of a switch at the door, so there is not much chance for the shutters not coming down instantly, nor is there much chance of their dropping by accident.
> In the December 23rd issue I noticed a letter from a Melbourne operator. Can't stand for him putting us so far out of date with his one Gaumont for twelve hours a day, for his is the only continuous show working one machine. All of our shows run two machines and look for the very latest and best. I noticed you spoke of our high D. C. amperage. Some shows are using as high as 110 amperes, D. C., on a 160 ft. throw, with a 32 foot picture. I guess that will make some of your boys sit up and take notice, considering their own twelve to eighteen footers. But I myself think the big picture business is all wrong. An 18 ft. picture, with not more than 100 ft. throw using about 50 amperes, with a 60 ft. arc, is, in my judgment, ample.
> I notice you fellows are doing good work on the light ray problem, but don't you think you can get better results if you can do without the shutter, in view of the fact that it causes a loss of about 50 per cent of the light, and there is an additional loss of about 30 per cent in the glass combinations of the lenses. Was thinking that if you could move the film across the aperture so fast that no movement could be detected by the eye, it would make the shutter useless. Do you think that could be done? Of course, you would still have to have the same stationary period. Was rather surprised at reading that some of your operators punch holes in tail ends of parts of features for a "change film" mark. They would do nothing of that kind here. We are charged up at the rate of eight cents per foot for all film damaged, whether by fire, torn sprocket, oil or water. The film punching operator would have a tough row of stumps to hoe over here. Was surprised to learn that operators were receiving as low as $5.00 per week for a 12-hour shift. We receive from $20.00 to $25.00 per week, and at present are trying to get $30. We have no separate union for operators, but come under the Australian Federated Theatrical Employees Association, which includes everyone in the show business. Our disputes are settled in the courts, and we are waiting for our decision next month. We may not get all we ask for, but you can't most always sometimes tell. It's like putting in a claim for damages, you might get one-half what you ask. Please let me know how I can get one of your handbooks. Have you an agent over here? It would be a good scheme if you did have one. I hope you have a successful trip when you go on your tour, and wish that it might extend over here.

Yes, Kangaroo, the roast was coming to the fire underwriters, alright. They certainly do pull some raw stuff, and in certain respects, exert a minimum amount of common sense as applied to operating room problems. While I am unable to entirely understand your port-shutter scheme, it looks like an efficient and very thorough plan. Yes, we have been working hard on the light ray problem, and have, I believe, advanced to a point of pretty thorough knowledge of the condenser system. The next thing is to evolve, or attempt to evolve, a more efficient method of condensing the light, or in other words, one which will do away with the greater proportion of the present spherical aberration. No, film cannot be moved with any such degree of rapidity in an intermittent movement. All this has been very thoroughly tested out by machine manufacturers, and the six to one movement is about all the sprocket holes will stand up under. I don't know where you get the idea that we had operators working as low as $5.00 per week. If any such statement has appeared in the Projection Department it was a typographical error. We have, however, in the small towns, particularly in the Southeast (North Carolina and South Carolina and some of the other southern states), operators working as low as six and seven dollars per week, but this by no means represents any general condition. Operators' wages may fairly said to range from $12.00 to $40.00 per week, though there are extremes both ways, some receiving as low as $6.00 and some as high as $50.00. I am on the trip now, this being written in Cincinnati, Ohio, and up to date, broadly speaking, while it has been a very strenuous experience, it has also been extremely successful, and has been attended with some surprising experiences. I had not expected to be received so cordially, nor had I supposed that both operators and managers would become so intensely intersted as to cheerfully remain up until three or four o'clock in the morning listening to what amounts to a thorough technical lecture, and, in some cases, demand that I speak even longer, although if I did so we could put out the lights and proceed by daylight. I appreciate your kind wishes and the slowly awakening co-operation of the Australian men, whose friendship I value and am glad to have. I would like to have a carefully made sketch of that port-shutter system, if you will be so kind.

A Clever Device.

In Ft. Smith, Arkansas, I saw a very clever little device, the invention of Carl Deonier, operator Joie theater, which, while I cannot approve of its use, because I am a firm believer of the operator being his own alarm clock, insofar as the arc is concerned, still I feel it but just to give Brother Deonier credit for his ingenuity in its contrivance.

Deonier has a General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier, which sets in the corner of his room just back of the machines. He has constructed a small wooden box, probably five inches high, four inches wide and 2½ inches thick. This box is open on one side, and contains a curved metal apron hinged loosely at its upper edge. When this box is set down near to, and facing the main reactance of the rectifier, the magnetic action attracts the apron and pulls its lower edge outward a distance in direct proportion to the strength of the magnetic flux in the main reactance, which latter will vary with the amperage flowing. On top of the little box Brother Deonier has mounted a small buzzer, and around the leg of the rectifier, just under the regulating reactance coil, he has placed an old motor coil, which connects to the buzzer through the aforementioned apron and a non-magnetic contact just back of it. The motor coil supplies the current necessary to work the buzzer, and the operation is as follows. When the amperage is at normal the apron is pulled out, away from the contact, and the buzzer is dead, but when the amperage at the arc drops the magnetic flux in the reactance of the rectifier is lowered, and the apron drops back against the contact, whereupon Mr. Buzzer gets busy and notifies the operator that it is time to feed the carbons.

I really had to laugh when I saw that thing work—for it certainly did work and worked to a hard-boiled finish.

He Had Trouble.

> Am an interested reader of the department. I run a Power's Six B. pulling 60 amperes through a Fort Wayne Compensarc. At present I am using National ⅝-inch carbons, which, although they give a dandy light and are very easy to handle, don't last as long as it seems to me they ought to. Also they burn in a queer kind of way, as indicated by the drawing. Can you tell me what is wrong; also what carbon is best. Every once in a while my motor makes a grinding noise. Is it because the friction plate wears lose I have tried tightening it, but it seems to do no good. Could you tell me the way to regulate the tension of the aperture? In running "Civilization" a few days ago, I had new films, and the film made considerable noise going through, which I attributed to the fact that the tension was too tight. though loosening it seemed to make no difference. Should not the shutter be as close to the lens as possible? I use 14-inch reels, and at the last, when the film is almost gone, it will jerk very much, and unless I hold the magazine door open and allow the reel to run loose, it will often tear. Why couldn't manufacturers get together and standardize reels?

The sketch shows that the brother's crater forms on the back side of the carbon, which would indicate that there is a magnetic effect present. Possibly his lamp leads are coiled up in the lamphouse in such a way that a magnetic inductance is blowing the arc back. If the lamp leads are coiled up in the lamp house pull them out straight and see what the effect is. The make of carbon has nothing to do with that particular matter. I couldn't tell you the best make of carbon without bringing down a thunderstorm of protest on my devoted head. As to the motor grinding, I think you will find it is due to unevenness of the friction material in the friction wheel. You will find this matter dealt with in detail in the Hand Book, copy of which I would strongly advise you to immediately procure, price $4, from the Moving Picture World. There are almost 700 pages of text matter dealing with matters of your profession, and in any one of the dozen subjects you will obtain knowledge worth more than the price of the book. The noise the film made was due to emulsion on the tension springs. When new films are run there is usually a deposit of emulsion on the tension springs, which can only be avoided by using wax. I cannot take up space to redescribe this process in the department. You will find it all set forth completely in the Hand Book, pages 464-465. The revolving shutter shoulld be set at, or as nearly as possible at the dissolving point of the light ray. (a) The position of this point will vary with a focal length of the projection ray. (b) The distance of the condenser from the film. Now Brother Smith, in order to set you right in this matter I would have to consume the whole of this issue of the department, and then some. I am therefore compelled to again refer you to the Hand Book, where the whole thing is dealt with in exhaustive detail. With regard to the jerking of the reels, I presume very likely the trouble is due to crooked reels. I thoroughly agree with you that there should be a standardization of reels, and that is exactly what the society of Motion Picture Engineers expects to accomplish—the standardization of reels and many other things.

Water Filled Condensors.

Harry Bowman, Jr., Greensboro, N. C., writes:

> Neighbor Richardson: Once more to bother you, but I would like your opinion of an idea, and if it has ever been tried out. I was thinking that if it was possible to make condensors hollow, with a device for keeping them full of water, and for maintaining a flow of cooling water through same that it would eliminate the heat rays almost from the spot. Am I right, and would such a thing be practical? I should think it would eliminate condensor breakage. Now this may sound like a "hop dream," but if it won't work, why not?
> Can't begin to tell you how your lecture was appreciated by the operators in this section, and am sure it has proven to be a benefit to all who heard it. Keep on with the good work, and verily the land will resound with the praises of Richardson, the father of good projection, under whose care that same child has grown to be a lusty chap. Many thanks for your advice regarding the Power's five. It is fixed.

I think it would not work for any one of several reasons. First, the optical effect of such a lens would be extremely hard to determine. As the light left the glass and entered the liquid its direction would be changed, the water having different density. The same would be true when the light left the water and again entered the glass. It seems to me the refractive power of such a combination would be very difficult to calculate. Second, you would have four additional glass surfaces, hence, four added lenses by reflection. Third, it would be very difficult to keep the inside of the lens clean. Fourth, if a lens cracked the show would come pretty nearly being put of commission until a new lens could be put in, for the empty lens would probably just pop all to pieces; also you might have trouble in installing another lens in the hot mount without it snapping instantly. Outside of these few objections, and several more, your plan, Brother Bowman, is all right.

Lots of Flicker.

Lee Rankin, Sour Lake, Texas, comes forward with the following load of trouble:

> Am using silver tip carbons below, and ¾ cord above, pulling 35 amperes at 60 volts. My throw is 56 feet, with a 5½-inch lens, to an old style aluminum screen. The picture is 12 feet. I have a great deal of flicker, and would like to know at what distance it is proper to set the shutter from the projecting lens; also how far should I set the condenser from the aperture plate in order to take out the flicker; also would you send a diagram for a shutter for a Power's Six A.

Bro. Rankin you probably don't realize what a large contract you are handing me. If I were to answer you completely it would take up approximately two issues of the department. In fact it is a question as to whether or not I could get it all into six pages of type. These matters are dealt with exhaustively in the third edition of the Hand Book, and I would strongly advise you to stand not upon the order of sending in $4 to the Moving Picture World for that particular book.

The flicker may be due to any one of two or three things, or to a combination of them all. In the first place, as you increase the brilliancy of the picture you increase the tendency to flicker. In the second place, the nearer you can approach a 3 wing shutter having 3 blades of equal width, 3 light openings of equal width, and the light opening and blade of equal width with each other the less flicker you will have, and the greater the percentage of the available light you will get at the screen. Securing this condition, or as nearly to it as possible, is what is known as "matching the optical system to the local conditions," and that you will have to get from the Hand Book. If you have a 2 wing shutter (should only be used for 60 cycle A. C., or where the illumination is very faint indeed), you may expect to have considerable flicker. As to sending a diagram for a Power's Six A shutter, I could not do that because I would simply have to send the same thing the Power's Company send out, depending on you to match it to meet the local conditions.

Difficult Situation.

W. G. Derby, Moline, Ill., says:

> I hand you herewith a circular sent to the management of the theater where I am employed. It is in my opinion an outrageous proposition, considering the number of years it has taken myself and brother operators to perfect ourselves in our profession. I would like to have your idea with regard to this matter expressed in the Projection Department, of which I have been a constant reader for four years past. Incidentally I also have the second and third edition of the Handbook, and there is no getting around the fact that they are great books. I hope and expect to make your acquaintance at the time of your visit to the Tricities in the near future.

Well, brother, you are springing something which I really don't like to deal with at this time. The circular in question comes from a big film manufacturing concern, and sets forth the fact, or the purported fact, that war conditions are going to bring about a great shortage of operators. It makes the statement, which I believe is not true, that the enlistment and draft has taken so many Canadian operators that it has necessitated the closing of many picture houses, and suggests that theater men ought to at once begin to break in men who won't be drafted immediately, as well as skilled women of factory and machine experience.

This is an exceedingly difficult matter to deal with. There is no denying the fact that there exists the posibility that the industry may, by reason of enlistment or draft, or both, be confronted with a shortage of skilled operators, but this department takes the position that it would even be better to temporarily close some theaters than to place the projection of costly photoplays, and the reproduction upon the screen of the art of high class artists in the hands of hastily broken in, and therefore thoroughly incompetent old men, boys and women. It is to me an amazing thing that a film producer, the reputation of whose goods depends upon the skill with which they are reproduced upon the screen, would suggest such a thing as this. It amounts to proposing that the country be flooded with another great horde of incompetent, imitation operators, and the photoplay business has certainly had ample and to spare of that proposition long ago. I don't care to go into this matter in further detail at this time, other than to say that the proposition set forth by the film concern most emphatically does not meet with the approval of this department, and to further add that anything of this kind ought, for the best interests of the industry, to be vigorously opposed by all interests capable of effectively opposing. It is extremely easy to get the incompetent; getting rid of him is quite another question, and one with which this department has been wrestling for almost eight years.

Nothing Doing.

George Naker, New York City, says:

> I would like to know whether or not I can obtain detailed description of the Edison three-wire system in back numbers of the Moving Picture World; also can I get any information on the optical system? I would certainly be very glad, indeed, to have the answers to the questions which have been running in the Projection Department in book form.

Sorry, old man, but there is nothing doing to the answers-to-the-questions-in-book-form. Yes, you can get the desired information about the three-wire system and the optical system in the back numbers of the Projection Department, but it would be far, far better, and almost as cheap, to buy the "Handbook" at $4.00, and in the book you would not only get the desired information but also a world of other information that you would find to be of great value—in fact, worth many times the book's price to you.

Condenser Breakage.

The Star Theater, Rockford, Mich., orders two "Handbooks," and says:

> We wish you would tell us some of the reasons why our condensers break so often. It is always the back ones, and we find they break quite often. Any information you may give us on this will be appreciated.

The excessive condenser breakage may be due to any one of a number of causes, or to a combination of several. In the first place, be sure that the ventilation of your lamp house is open and free—not stopped up with carbon ash. Poor ventilation in the lamp house makes for excessive temperature, and this, in turn, sets up excessive condenser breakage, due to violent changes in temperature, particularly when the lamp house door is opened. Be sure that the fan is not blowing directly on the lamp house. Be sure that your lens system is properly lined up. (See Chart Projection Department, March 24 issue, Moving Picture World.) It is possible your arc is too close to condenser. It is also possible you have excessive carbon flaming, and that the flame is striking the top end of the condenser. This may be reduced by using a solid carbon lower, provided you are using direct current. I recommend the installing of a Preddy & Elbert Condenser Mount, which, I presume, may be procured from E. E. Fulton, 152 West Lake street, Chicago, or you can certainly get them from the Picture Theater Equipment Co., or Mr. J. H. Hallberg of New York City.

Paints Rectifier Bulb Black.

John S. Caputo, member Local 306, Long Island City, writes as follows:

> For the longest while I have been reading the Projection Department and a few months ago purchased the third edition of the Handbook. And now I am sorry I didn't take the matter of my profession more seriously from the very start. I should have gotten the Handbook when it was first published, as it is, in my opinion, a great work. You, however, know the old saw, "It's never too late to mend." Now that I have the book, the only thing to do is study, and that I am doing.
> It interests me very much to read the various troubles and the new ideas of operators as set forth in our Department. I have noticed the difficulty some of the brothers experienced in overcoming that ghastly greenish light from a mercury arc rectifier bulb, which floods the operating room to the detriment of the work of projection. I, myself, have overcome that trouble by painting the bulb black, allowing a little of the lower back part of it to remain clear, just enough to give a little light in the operating room. Painting the bulb does not in the least injure it, as I have been using my painted bulb since December, 1913, without any trouble at all. I wish both for yourself and the Moving Picture World success, and lots of it.

Now this is indeed interesting. It strikes me that the painting of a mercury arc rectifier bulb would not only do it no harm, but might even benefit the tube, since black radiates heat, and a black-painted bulb ought to operate at a decidedly lower temperature than one of clear glass. Might I presume to suggest to the Honorable, the General Electric and Westinghouse Companies that they experiment with this thing, and if it is found to be practical, paint their bulbs black, all except a small space at the back. This would remove one of the big objections to the mercury arc rectifier, the weird ghostly, not to say ghastly, green light it gives, which floods the operating room if the machine is placed therein.

I would like to call attention to the remark made by Brother Caputo to the effect that having secured a Handbook it is up to him to study it. I would like to suggest to many Handbook owners that they rubber at that remark real hard. There are altogether too many operators who, having purchased a Handbook, read its seven hundred pages through more or less thoroughly, and then lay it carefully away, never again to see it until they get into trouble. The Handbook is designed to be in use in time of trouble, but above and before all else it is intended for the operator to study, to the end that he gain bona fide technical knowledge of the profession of the projection of motion pictures. Merely reading the book over isn't study. One must go much further than that, if one expects to get the benefit one should get from the Handbook. And there is enough between its leaves to keep, not only the most poorly informed, but the best informed operator busy for quite some time, three or four years, say, if he thoroughly posts himself on all the topics contained therein.

Single Motor Drive.

Lee Rankin of Sour Lake, Texas, wants to know about the single motor drive. Says he has interested his manager in motor driven machine, but that Friend Manager can't quite see himself putting up the amount of money necessary to equip motion projectors with separate motors and speed controllers. Brother Rankin wants to know about the single motor drive, also says he has an attachment for his 6A and wants to know how much it will cost to equip the machines, presumably with a motor.

As to the latter, I would suggest he communicate with the Nicholas Power Co., No. 90 Gold street, New York City. They are in best position to give him the desired information. With regard to driving two machines with a single motor, I would refer him to the Handbook, pages 277 to 278, where he will find description of the clutches, shafts, etc., necessary for such work. Just what the cost would be I could not say. It would depend upon the charges of local machinists, if the stuff were made in Sour Lake, and if he didn't, then the charge elsewhere.

No Such Animal.

George Cliff, Tacoma, Wash., makes the following inquiry:

> Would like to know location of best trade school for learning how to become a motion picture operator; also please state age for beginner. The age in Tacoma is 18. Is there any special age for a man who runs a show in a country town? Please quote price of the Handbook.

With regard to the "Trade School" proposition, I have repeatedly expressed my opinion on that particular proposition. All the trade schools I know anything about give the student the idea that after two or three months they will turn him out equipped with all the technical knowledge necessary to project motion pictures, and many of them actually have the ingrowing nerve to assure him that after this short course he will be a competent moving picture machine operator. This is not only absurd, but pernicious. It tends to load up the already overloaded profession with a yet further overdose of incompetents. This much, however, I will agree to, that the apprentice, who is actually working as such, may secure considerable valuable technical information from a trade school, provided the instructor be a competent instructor. The fly in that particular ointment is, that often the instructor is not competent to teach others, and in many cases which have come under my personal observation, the instruction handed out by the trade school "instructor" has been misleading and injurious.

As to the age, why that is a matter of local ordinances with the qualification that it is handled by state law in a few states. This department favors a minimum age of 18 years for apprentices, with a minimum age of 21 for full-fledged operators. Of course, if a man started his apprenticeship at 18, he would have to serve three years, which doubtless sounds absurd, although the locomotive fireman, who has much less to learn, cheerfully serves as much as an eight-year apprenticeship, and sometimes even ten, though it is true he is paid a living wage during that time.

Probably Back Focus.

Florida desires the following information:

> How do you determine the distance between the two condensers? That is to say, how do you regulate the distance in order to get the best possible focus at the spot? Could you possibly illustrate the best way to set the carbons? I have tried several different methods but don't seem able to get a very pronounced spot. In fact I only get a glare at the aperture. Am using Power's 6B, 110 volt a. c., pulling 60 amperes. I couldn't very well get along without our department in which I find things each week which are very instructive. Also your reply to my recent letter was very helpful.

In the first place you don't "regulate the focus" by spacing the condenser. The focus of the spot is regulated by the focal length of the condenser combination, the distance of the arc from the condenser, and the distance of the condenser from the film. All this is automatically taken care of for you by the chart published on page 1768 of the March 17th issue of the Moving Picture World. The chances are that you are now working on what is known as the "back focus." In other words, your condensers are of too short focal length for the present distance of your condenser from the film. Your condensers should not be more than one-sixteenth of an inch apart. This, for reasons which would require too much space to set forth in the Department, I would suggest that you immediately order a copy of the third edition of the Handbook, price $4.00, from the Moving Picture World and study these things, meanwhile applying the aforesaid chart to your optical system. If you will send me the following data, I will tell you what you ought to have, (a) kind of current you are using, (b) number of amperes, but you must expect delay in receiving a reply, because I am now thousands of miles from New York, the letter must be forwarded to me, and I must reply whenever I can get the opportunity.

Don't Quite Understand.

W. W. Walker, Chicago, Ill., says:

> (A) If you had two arcs prpoperly balanced, and could not strike an arc on either lamp, though test shows current flow, what would be the trouble? (B) If you tried to strike an arc and the spark appeared at the point of contact, though you could not get a light, what would the condition indicate?
> I thought I knew pretty much everything relating to arc trouble, but these two never occurred in my experience.

Well, I dunno, Chicago, maybe it's on the level all right, but those two particular things sound suspiciously to me like examination questions. Nevertheless I will answer them. (A) I don't know what you mean by "properly balanced," therefore cannot answer your question. (B) The indication would be (1) low voltage. (2) A loose contact or a wire almost burned off, probably in the rheostat. (3) High resistance (poor electrical contact) between carbons and carbon arm. (4) There are other possible causes, but to save my life I could not think of them now.

Methods of Determining Exposure.

G. F. Wynne's "Infallible" exposure meter is also in dial form, but the sensitive paper is exposed directly, no pendulum is used, and the scales are open on the dial. In use, the glass carrying the movable scale is turned until the actinometer time in seconds upon the exposure scale is opposite the diaphragm number of the plate, as given in the list of plate speeds; the correct exposure will then be found against each stop given on the scale. There are practically only two scales; the scale of diaphragms representing the diaphragm or f numbers, the speed of plate and the variation of exposure due to subject; and the time scale, representing the actinometer time and the exposure. The actinometer is protected by a yellow glass screen when not in use. In a smaller form the scales are on the circumference of a locket, and the actinometer at the back. An "Infallible" Printmeter is also made for showing exposures in contact printing on sensitive papers, but can also be used for testing speeds of plates and papers. Beck's "Zambex" Exposure Meter gives the exposure and stop to be used, also the depth of focus to be obtained with different diaphragm apertures. The required exposure is set to the "speed" number on the next scale of the meter. The third scale corresponds to the times of darkening the sensitive paper in the actinometer attached to the meter, and shows the diaphragm aperture suitable for the given exposure. Other scales show the distances that will be in focus with the different stops used, arranged so that the focal depth of four different lenses can be found. Several other exposure meters are made on the principle of the slide rule, with scale corresponding to the factors of "plate speed," "diaphragm number," "light," "exposure," and the exposure is found by simple inspection without an actinometer. They are designed for use with particular brands of plates, but can be used for others of similar speeds.

The last types of meters described depend for their light measurement upon matching a tint or shade, a rather difficult matter for most persons. A new instrument based on the same principle, but which does not require the tint to be matched, is the Steadman Aabameter. Its price is one dollar, and it may be obtained from any photo supply dealer. It consists of a series of graduated openings which give a ratio of exposure upon a strip of sensitized paper in the progression of 1, 2, 4, 8, 16. The number of gradations recorded in a given time gives the light strength and reference to a simple chart tabulated on a card, and gives the proper exposure at a glance.

Another class of exposure meters comprises those in which the intensity of the light is estimated visually by extinction through a semi-transparent medium of increasing intensity, such as J. Decoudin's, in which the exposure is judged by the disappearance of a series of small clear openings on a graduated scale of densities when laid on the most important part of the image as seen on the ground-glass. Its indications are not very definte, and the proper scale changes in density after a time. A better form is "E. Degen's Normal Photometer," consisting of two sliding violet glass prisms, one adjusted for the diaphragm apertures, the other for the actinic illumination of the object. They are mounted with their outer faces parallel.

In use the upper slide with prism is drawn out so that the pointer coincides with the division indicating the diaphragm aperture to be used; the object to be photographed is then viewed directly through openings at one end of the instrument, and the lower slide is drawn out and pushed back slowly till the object viewed is almost obscured. The attached pointer will then indicate the exposure required, or, reversing the order, the diaphragm aperture for a given exposure can be found. Auxiliary scales are attached for very short or very long exposures. The principle of construction is that the logarithms of the times of exposure are proportional to the thickness of the colored prisms. "G. Heyde's Actino-Photometer" is on a somewhat similar principle, and consists of a circular metal box with dark violet glass viewing screens in the center of both sides, with obscuring iris inside the case worked by revolving the back of the box. On the front of the instrument exposure tables are given for plates of every rapidity, and for diaphragm apertures from f/3 to f/45. Exposure meters of this type are specially applicable for open-air work where there is sufficient light for ready measurement.

Practically all of the commercially sold meters give the exposure in a manner suitable for still camera work, which is seldom convenient for the cinematographer.

The following table gives the diaphragm number and shutter opening translated from the exposures usually given for still camera work. Where longer exposures are recorded for still cameras it is not possible to get full exposure with the motion camera. It is understood that the calculation originally made with the meter is for a still camera using plates of the same relative speed as cine emulsion, which is as fast as the fastest plates ordinarily used in stand cameras, the only exception being the ultra fast plates sometimes used for Graflex work.

Table of Comparative Exposures for Still and Motion Cameras.

Still camera at f16.	1 sec.	½ sec.	¼ sec.	⅛ sec.	1/16 sec.	1/32 sec.	1/48 sec.
Motion camera:
½ opening shutter......	f3.5	f4	f5.6	f8	f11	f16	f22
¼ opening shutter..........	....	f3.5	f4	f5.6	f8	f11	f16
⅛ opening shutter..........	....	....	f3.5	f4	f5.6	f8	f11

For ⅓ opening shutter the diaphragm should be set half way between the reading for ½ opening and the reading for ¼ opening.

Focusing.

When photographing distant objects with a small opening, the lens should be set at infinity, unless there are objects in the foreground, which also appear in the picture; then it would be wise to set the lens at the hyperfocal distance if the intervening object is nearer than half the hyperfocal distance; if the object is further away, than this, then set the lens at infinity.

Hyperfocal distance means the distance from the lens to a sharply focussed object, beyond which everything to infinity is in focus, and in front of which anything less than half way to the camera is also in focus.

Hyperfocal distance varies with the focal length and the diaphragm opening of a lens; and the infinity mark on a lens mount generally signifies that the lens, when set at that mark, is really set for the hyperfocal distance of the largest stop and not for actual infinity.

As motion picture photography is seldom done under ideal conditions it is a common practice among operators to do what they term "split the focus," that is, to focus on an object at such a distance as to include as much as possible of the principal objects within the front and back depth of focus.

The question of focusing on the film or on the ground glass is one of personal preference with the photographer. Some claim that they get better results and save time by focusing direct on the film, and others say that the scientific and accurate way is with a fine ground glass, which gives greater illumination and ease in focusing. With good bright light there is no trouble in getting a sharp focus on the film, but when the lighting conditions are bad, the film absorbs so much of the light that it is often absolutely necessary to use the ground glass.

In cameras where the lens is mounted accurately and rigidly against the aperture plate, so that there is no chance for an accidental deviation of the distance between lens and picture aperture, a carefully calibrated focusing scale can always be relied upon, and when used with a 50-foot tape line, which is one of the indispensable articles in the cameraman's kit, will insure sharpness of definition in every scene.

Chas. Bass No Longer With David Stern.

In an article in this department for June 2, it was erroneously stated that Chas. Bass, who has purchased the camera business of Phil. G. Luber, 100 Dearborn street, Chicago, would continue his place as manager of the motion picture department of the David Stern Co.

This was a mistake. Mr. Bass writes that he has resigned from the position he formerly held and will devote his entire energies to the service of his old friends and new patrons in his new capacity as proprietor of the Bass Camera Co.

He has made arrangements for handling some of the best makes of Cameras and studio apparatus under such advantageous conditions that he will be able to sell them at material reductions from the former prices.

Magnifiers.

When using a supplementary lens (magnifier) as a means of bringing near objects into focus for making inserts, the focal length of the supplementary lens must be equal to the distance of the object. This holds good whatever the focal length of the camera lens.

The Perfect Distributing System.

A REMARKABLE evolution has been going on steadily in the distributing department of the moving picture industry for several years past. To one who is familiar with the oldtime policies and practices of eight or nine years ago the new systems now in vogue appear so far advanced that a quarter of a century seems not too wide a span for the progress that has been made.

In the old days, when competition between exchanges meant the disposal of the same product to the largest number of customers, at the highest rentals that could be gotten, little attention was paid to the exhibitor's point of view. Now that many makes of moving pictures are on the market and that the people have been educated to demand higher and still higher quality, as well as the required variety of subjects, the exchangeman has been forced to solve many knotty problems to meet the conditions successfully.

The great distributing concerns of today were called into being to meet the emergency. Each may be compared to an intricate piece of machinery, in which the various parts are connected and interdependent, and working together with the least possible friction. The perfect distributing concern is yet to be evolved. Instead of having many intricate machines doing the work, one or two great distributing systems will do the work just as well, if not better, at untold saving to the industry. The only stumbling block that stands in the way is the fear that a just observance of equity may not be humanly possible in the treatment of the various makes of films. In other words strict, inviolate honesty is the great desideratum in the working of the perfect system.

Being an optimist, I believe that such a system is destined to come.

The foregoing thoughts were aroused by a call I made last week at the offices of George Kleine, at 63 East Adams street, this city. There I met three young men, each of them full of energy, enthusiasm and initiative, engaged in a conference which included intimately every square mile of territory in the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes. Their conference had to do with the interests of every exhibitor in the United States who is using the K. E. S. E. service. And not only the exhibitor's interests, but those of every employee in the twenty-four offices controlled by George Kleine were also included in the discussions of these three young men.

Their names are M. E. Smith, E. R. Pearson and Harry Scott. Each is a division manager of a district for George Kleine. The entire country has been divided into three such districts—the eastern, the middle western and the far western. Mr. Scott supervises the eastern, Mr. Smith the middle western, and Mr. Pearson the far western, and George Kleine has eight offices in each district.

The triumvirate constitutes a committee of three on K. E. S. E. rental policies. Each division manager knows every employee in the eight offices under his care, from the office boy up, and each has served apprenticeship leading up to his present position.

The merit system governs every employee, and sight is never lost of any aid that contributes to a more perfect service for the exhibitor. Traveling salesmen are expected not only to secure contracts from exhibitors—they are especially enjoined to familiarize themselves with the special needs of each exhibitor and to ascertain just the kind of program that will best suit his patrons. Being on the ground he is a better judge in such cases than the branch office manager may be, and he is held responsible for any dissatisfaction that may arise from negligence. In other words, the traveling salesman must not confine himself to business getting, he must also serve as a helper to the exhibitor in his problems.

And so it must be throughout the entire branch office force. The booking clerk has a great responsibility and he must measure up to it fully to meet the demands of the division manager. The chief aim must always be to serve the customer so well that he has no just grounds for complaint.

The shipper holds another important position, as on him it often depends whether a customer shall be able to give his show on time or not at all. Here the merit system works wonders by stimulating the shipping force to the best efforts, and each man knows that he is duly credited for good work and that his advancement is certain when an opportunity comes.

Each division manager receives at the home office in Chicago a daily report from every traveling salesman in his territory, and this keeps him in close connection with existing conditions. Thus if a salesman finds that a certain customer is not getting the most serviceable program from the branch office, his report gives that information to the division manager, and the branch office is instructed accordingly.

When one of George Kleine's division managers pays a visit to a branch office, there is no splurge in the form of wining and dining. He takes off his coat and goes to work immediately to help in getting difficulties out of the way. Indeed, one of the great telling points of the George Kleine distributing system is the all-around helpfulness of the working force in an office singly, or in all the offices combined.

Another great point is the intimacy of touch which the home office has with every branch office and with every customer in the country.

Sitting at his desk any day Mr. Kleine can tell the pulse of his business just as accurately as a physician can tell that of his patient.

Great Success of "The Tanks" Pictures.

"The British Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" is enjoying a fine run at Orchestra Hall, thanks largely to the fine show work done by Tom North, who is handling the pictures for the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The pictures themselves are always equal to the occasion. No one ever goes away grumbling about not receiving his money's worth. Indeed they hold one in such wrapt attention that it is difficult for some time afterwards to get mentally rid of the vivid war atmosphere.

The great modern war monsters, the tanks, though not seen actually in firing action—as that would be impossible, seeing that it takes place only on or near the German trench about to be assaulted, and the presence of a cameraman on the scene would mean instant death—are as formidable as death itself. We see them in the pictures going ahead of the men in the trenches crushing down with colossal tread barbed wire fences and every other obstacle.

The pictures will continue until Saturday, July 7, when they will be succeeded by "Les Miserables."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Clara Kimball Young made a brief stopover in the city Wednesday, June 27. Ludwig Schindler, manager of the National Exposition, was on hand to see her, and was given a verbal promise by the popular player that she would be on hand to assist in the success of the big show. Mrs. Young departed for New York Friday morning.

An old-fashioned smoker and free lunch party was held at the Chicago Reel Fellows' Club, Friday evening, June 29. Important business connected with the coming National Exposition was discussed.

H. M. Ortenstein, proprietor of the Vista Theater, Forty-seventh street and Cottage Grove avenue, gave a Red Cross benefit at the theater Tuesday afternoon, June 26.

Twenty-five cents admission was charged, and the entire receipts were given to the Red Cross organization. The Vista, which seats 1,000 people, was well filled. Mr. Ortenstein has set a splendid example of patriotism, and it is hoped that other exhibitors throughout the country will give a special presentation in aid of the organization

A $3,000 fire was started in the Art Dramas Exchange, Adams street and Wabash avenue, Friday, June 22, by one of the film girls engaged in the inspection department. The friction created by a pencil which came in contact with a film while it was being wound, is said to have been the cause.

Essanay has opened up its customary camp for the summer season, and it is located this year at Lake Geneva, Wis. Every year an out-door studio is maintained by Essanay at some comfortable resort during the warm weather, which enables the players to combine their work with a summer outing. Bryant Washburn and his company opened the new camp this year. "The Golden Idiot" is now being produced there by the company.

Watterson Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, desires that every visiting exhibitor to the Seventh National Convention should know that he will hold open house for them during the convention, at his plant. He gives the following directions as to how the plant may be reached:

By taxicab; by the Northwestern Elevated, getting off at Diversey station and walking west four blocks; by the Lincoln Avenue car, getting off at Diversey Parkway and walking west two blocks, or by the Southport Avenue car, getting off at Diversey Parkway and walking east half a block. Mr. Rothacker will be very glad to meet all visiting members of the entire moving picture industry at the plant, where he is confident that he will be able to interest all of them.

On July 16 a meeting of the executive council of the Advertising Film Producers' Association will be held at the Rothacker studio.

During the impending convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Chicago one day will be spent by the organization in an inspection of the Rothacker plant.

F. M. Brockell, manager of the Chicago Goldwyn offices, announces that he will be ready to begin business on Monday, July 2. The new Goldwyn offices, on the third floor of the Orpheum Theater building, are now being prepared for opening.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., Chicago, will leave shortly on a three weeks' automobile trip through the Middle West, in the interests of that firm. William Weinshenker has been added to the sales force under Mr. Weiss' direction.

The American Film Co., Inc., announces that Mary Miles Minter, Gail Kane, Juliette Day and William Russell subscribed $75,000 for Liberty Bonds. All the supporting players and directors also subscribed liberally, and every employee of the plant subscribed a sum in keeping with his income. Mary Miles Minter and her company returned recently to the American studios at Santa Barbara, after spending a fortnight among the big redwoods near Santa Cruz, where scenes for "Melissa of the Hills" were taken.

The Canadian rights for Selig's "Beware of Strangers" have been purchased by the Monarch Film Company, Limited. An elaborate campaign will soon be entered upon by the company.

The Selig Polyscope Company announces that the Hy-Art Master-plays Company, with offices at Penn avenue and Twenty-first street, Washington, D. C., has purchased the rights to "The Garden of Allah" for Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia and North Carolina. It is also announced that the A. G. Fontana Productions, Inc., 1225 Vine street, Philadelphia, has purchased the rights to the same feature for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

At the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Mutual Film Corporation, held Tuesday, June 26, in the company's offices, in the Consumers' Building, this city, John R. Freuler was re-elected president; Dr. George W. Hall, of Chicago, first vice-president; Crawford Livingston, of New York, second vice-president; Samuel S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, treasurer, and Samuel M. Field, of Wilmette, secretary.

The Edmund M. Allen Film Corporation has arranged for the Chicago premiere of "The Garden of Allah," at the Colonial theater, on Sunday, July 22, when a run of two weeks will be opened at this house. The company has provided a liberal fund for newspaper advertising and for billing this premiere, which it is expected will make a landmark in moving picture presentations, in this city.

The officers of the company have just announced the acquisition of new territorial rights for the big Selig feature. The members originally purchased the rights to Michigan and Illinois, but have been so impressed with the excellence of the production that they have also acquired the rights to Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas, in addition. "The Garden of Allah" has had a series of notable successes. At Keith's Hippodrome, in Cleveland; at the New Century, Indianapolis, and at the newest theater in Los Angeles, it has turned crowds away for several weeks.

"God's Man," with H. B. Warner (Frohman Amusement Company), have been booked for an indefinite run at the Studebaker, Sunday, July 8. Sam Van Ronkel owns the states rights for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

It has been announced that Jones, Linick & Schaefer will turn the Colonial into a vaudeville house after August 15. The firm refers to the success made at this house by continuous vaudeville before it had to make way for "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and other big film features. Bookings for the Colonial will be furnished by the Marcus Loew Western Booking Agency.

The La Salle theater will join the ranks of dramatic playhouses on August 13, when the musical comedy, "Oh, Boy," will start the season under the management of Comstock & Elliott, members of the theatrical organization of Elliott, Comstock & Gest.

MRS. HUMISTON SUES UNIVERSAL.

Mrs. Grace Humiston, the woman lawyer who has attained prominence through her discovery of the body of Ruth Cruger, has sued the Universal company for $20,000. The film upon which she bases her action is a part of Issue 77 of the Universal Animated Weekly (June 20). This is a brief scene showing Mrs. Humiston seated in an automobile talking to someone. Her facial expression registers vexation. The main title is, "Woman Lawyer Solves Ruth Cruger Mystery." The subtitle is, "The Woman Who Succeeded Where Police Failed—Mrs. Grace Humiston." This scene is followed by views of Cocchi's shop surrounded by crowds while search of the premises is going on after the finding of Ruth Cruger's body.

UNITED TO TRADE OLD MACHINES.

So as to assist exhibitors in replacing old equipment and thus insuring better projection with the latest type machines, the United Theater Equipment Corporation has notified its branch managers to accept old apparatus now in service in part payment for new equipment and machines. A liberal allowance will be made for used machines, and exhibitors will be able to save a considerable part of their purchase price by turning in their old equipment to United service stations. While the supply business in certain parts of the country has suffered to a certain extent, due to the war scare, United service stations report increased orders all along the line.

BIZAR SELLS INTEREST IN STRAND.

Edward Bizar, a well-known exhibitor in Passaic, N. J., has sold his interest in the Strand theater in that city to A. Weinstein. Mr. Bizar is temporarily out of the business, but intends to re-enter the field in the role of a producer. Mr. Bizar will be ready to make a detailed announcement shortly, but at present he can be found at his stores in Paterson, N. J.

A Visit to the Horsley Studio

Four Companies at Work on Features and Comedies—Mary MacLaren Finishing First State Righter.

A REPRESENTATIVE of the Moving Picture World took a sight-seeing trip to the David Horsley studios this week for the first time since the increase of activities at that plant. We saw Mary MacLaren in the finishing scenes of her first state right feature, entitled "A Daughter of the Well-Dressed Poor" from the book of Henry Warren, which is being made by the veteran director, Thomas Ricketts. While on another set we saw the new comedy company consisting of Gertrude Selby and Neal Burns, with Horace Davey on the directorial end, putting over a hilarious comedy scene. Next to them George Ovey was busily engaged in making one of his famous Cub comedies in which he has been starred by Mr. Horsley for the last two years.

Baby Marie Osborne was also on the lot doing an emotional scene under the direction of Harrish Ingraham for her next kidlet feature on the Pathe Program. Norman Manning, the genial manager of the studio, was seen by us in his office and informed us of his recent trip to Chicago in the interest of the further enlargement of the capacity of his organization.

Paralta Studio a Beehive of Activity

Robert T. Kane Has Organization Completed and Production Running Smoothly.

A REPRESENTATIVE of the Moving Picture World took a trip out to the new Paralta Studios, one day last week, and under the guidance of Kenneth A. O'Hara, director of publicity, was shown around the interesting birthplace of the Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan feature productions. Miss Barriscale was hard at work under the direction of James Young. Howard Hickman has the chief role in support of this interesting star.

On another set we found Director Oscar Apfel, who has been responsible for many noteworthy features engaged in directing Mr. Kerrigan, in Peter B. Kyne's story, "A Man's Man," his first release. Kerrigan's leading woman is Lois Wilson, formerly of the Universal forces. Robert T. Kane was conferring with his art director, R. Holmes Paul, who is responsible for all of the settings to be used in these productions. Robert Brunton, formerly of the old Ince-Triangle studio, is studio manager, and Thomas Geraghty and H. Sheridan Bickers have been engaged to scenarioize the stories and write the sub-titles. Mr Geraghty is a well known photodramatist, recently with the Lasky and Metro companies, while Mr. Bickers has to his credit several plays of the legitimate stage in England.

Universal Players Injured While Filming Scene.

Plunging headforemost from a tree limb on which they were working to the ground thirty feet below, Marie Walcamp, playing in the Universal serial, "The Quest of Virginia," and Clarence Wertz, another member of the company, was severely injured this week.

The accident occurred in the course of a hazardous struggle on the limb between Miss Walcamp and Wertz, who was supposed to have abducted her and was carrying her away through the treetops. As the camera started clicking Miss Walcamp battled with her captor. The players lost their balance, clutched wildly a moment and before anyone could make an effort to save them they fell to the ground.

Both were picked up unconscious and rushed to the hospital. Under the x-ray it was discovered that Miss Walcamp's right forearm was fractured. She also suffered from slight internal injuries. Wertz sustained a sprained ankle and both suffered from bruises and shock.

A number of changes were made in the script which enabled the director to continue the work of production until Miss Walcamp and Wertz would be in condition to resume their places before the camera.

At the Fox Studios.

New dramatic productions have recently been started at the Fox Hollywood studios by Directors R. A. Walsh and Richard Stanton. Mr. Walsh's story, which deals with a Mexican theme, has in its cast Miriam Cooper, Hobart Bosworth, Jim Marcus and Monty Blue. Dal Clawson is cameraman.

Richard Stanton is once more directing Dustin Farnum in a drama of international intrigue. In the cast are, besides Mr. Farnum, Winifred Kingston, William Burress, Charles Clark, Howard Gaye and William E. Lowry. Dev Jennings is presiding over the camera.

Katherine Griffith is a new addition to the Fox studio, and so is Eva Nelson.

Harry Moody returns to the company after an absence of about six months. He worked in several of the earlier Fox Film two reelers.

The rapid expansion of the William Fox studio in Hollywood continues unabated. The latest building to be projected is a large glass studio, 60 by 120 feet in area, to be placed on the western lot. The building of this big glass stage is already under way, and the completed structure should be ready within three weeks.

To find space for the new studio it was found necessary to chop down a large grove of lemon trees which covered the ground. In this day of the high price of food, the Fox studio showed its utter disregard of expenses when it hewed down trees laden with ripening fruit, merely for the hurrying of the plant.

GEORGE M. COHAN USING TWO STUDIOS.

In order to save time in the production of George M. Cohan's second Artcraft offering, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," both of the Famous Players-Lasky studios in the east are being used. A series of immense scenes have already been staged at the Fifty-sixth street studio in New York. At the Fort Lee studio a big exterior hotel set was recently filmed and other scenes are now being taken, while at the New York studio new sets are being built.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Vivian Martin, the Morosco star, is now at work in that studio under the direction of Frank Reicher. Immediately upon the completion of this production she will return to the Lasky studio for another.

The Helen Holmes company has completed the first episode of the new Signal-Mutual serials already put out by the same company, featuring Helen Holmes. Production is going forward under the direction of J. P. McGowan with practically the same cast as that of "The Railroad Raiders," appearing in support of Miss Holmes. Leo D. Maloney, Thomas G. Lingham, William Brunton, Will Chapman, W. A. Behrens and Andrew Waldron remain of those who played important roles in the last chapter play.

Jewel Carmen will leave Los Angeles within a few days to rejoin William Farnum and his William Fox photoplayers in New York. When Big Bill and Director Frank Lloyd went East a few weeks ago they left Miss Carmen behind to fill a part in a forthcoming Gladys Brockwell production.

"Loyalty," the second of the Bernstein "Cardinal Virtue" pictures, has been completed, and production on "Justice," the third of the series, started. The scenario is by Wilbur Hall. It is a story of a man whose distorted sense of justice leads him to the extremes of cruelty and oppression. Murdock McQuarrie and Betty Brice will play the leading parts, supported by Jay Morley. Jack Pratt and Sam Wood will direct.

Wallace Reid is now at work on a Lasky production under Robert Thornby. Dorothea Abril, who has been with the Lasky Company in the capacity of ingenue for some time, will be seen as his leading woman. Others in the cast are Guy Oliver, Camille Ankowich, Lillian Leighton, Noah Beery and Gertrude Short.

Al Smith, who appeared in character roles in the production of the Helen Holmes features, "The Lass of the Lumberlands" and "The Railroad Raiders," has returned from a vaudeville engagement in order to accept a stock position with the Signal Film Corporation. Another addition to the Signal forces is Edward Hearn, who will appear in one of the leading roles in the new serial. Mr. Hearn is known to patrons of the silent drama, having been a leading man with Universal for more than two years. He played important parts in "The Recoiling Vengeance," "The Seekers," "Idle Wives" and "The Forbidden Game."

Sessue Hayakawa and a company under the direction of William C. De Mille journeyed to San Francisco last week to film boat scenes. Florence Vidor, who scored a success in support of George Beban in "The Cook of Canyon Camp," has been engaged as Mr. Hayakawa's leading woman.

Bessie Dummer, the fourteen-year-old girl who is assistant to her father, William Dummer, in the sculpturing department of the Balboa studio, is to have casts made of herself for a statue of a water nymph, which Mr. Dummer is modeling for the centerpiece of a fountain to be used in "The Twisted Thread," Balboa's new serial. Bessie does much of the casting for her father. She inherits her mother's talent for the stage and will shortly be seen on the Balboa screen as a type representative of youth and beauty.

Announcement has been made this week at Universal City of the appointment of J. Grubb Alexander as scenario editor of the Universal Company by Colonel J. E. Brady, manager of the manuscript department. Before entering the motion picture field Alexander was well known as a civil engineer and has produced a number of musical acts for the vaudeville stage. The new editor has been a member of the Universal scenario force for more than two years, devoting his time to the writing of original features.

Carl Hill, scenic artist, has been engaged to make a series of hand painted tapestries to form a frieze around the entire drawing room set for the production of the latest Helen Holmes serial feature, "The Lost Express." The frieze is a series of landscapes in panels, the entire lot covering more than four hundred square feet.

The first member of the Lasky studios to leave for Europe is Lucien Littlefield, the juvenile and character actor. Littlefield departed recently for the east with the Pasadena ambulance corps, which, after a brief training, will be sent to France. Littlefield has been with the Lasky Company since its inception, holding down the position of office boy in the early days. He became interested in acting, but soon forsook the telephone switchboard to become a member of the stock company. In "The Warrens of Virginia" Littlefield filled eight different parts, being given eight different characters. The studio folk have presented him with a handsome wrist watch, suitably inscribed and turned out to wish him godspeed.

Director Sherwood MacDonald was host to the members of the Jackie Saunders company at the Balboa studio at a party recently, which was by way of a general farewell, as upon the completion of the six Saunders-Mutual pictures director, star and supporting cast are to take individual and respective ways.

Producers and stars of the Los Angeles motion-picture colony combined to present a monster patriotic barbecue and dance on the afternoon and evening of July 4, the main feature of which was the presentation of a handsome silk battle flag to the Los Angeles contingent of troops.

Entertainment was planned for the afternoon and evening, starting probably with a downtown parade in the morning or early afternoon. Music by several bands and an orchestra were to be continuous throughout the afternoon and evening, as will the dancing and barbecue. Motion-picture stars from various studios were to be featured on the programme, augmented by the services of several from the legitimate stage.

Lottie Pickford, sister to Mary and Jack, and who is remembered as the feature player in the "Diamond from the Sky" serial, produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company two years ago, has recently joined the Lasky studios, and will appear in a production under the direction of George Melford.

Aileen Allen, the Mack Sennett-Keystone girl who holds the national fancy diving championships, is entered in the high diving championships which are to take place at Coronado, California, July 4.

"The Chosen Prince," an eight-reel production, dealing with the friendship of David and Jonathan, has been completed by the Crest Picture Company at Monrovia, under the direction of William Mong, and under the personal supervision of Judge Lyman I. Henry, well known lawyer and author of Denver, Colorado. The subject, we are informed, is of a Biblical nature, yet not exactly religious, dealing as it does with the brotherhood of man, and partly laid in a modern locale. The company has been working on the picture for the last six months, and it is stated that forty thousand dollars has been spent on the production. C. F. Rickey and B. W. Davies, all Colorado capitalists, control the company.

Wallace Reid is the happy father of a bouncing boy, born Wednesday, June 20. Wallie says he is going to be a wonderful picture star, but Mrs. Reid (Dorothy Davenport) may have something else to say in the matter. The mother and the child are doing finely, and the popular Lasky man is wearing a smile that won't come off.

Julian Eltinge, famous female impersonator, has arrived at the Lasky studios, and started rehearsals this week, under the direction of Donald Crisp.

With Gail Kane as his star and with Lon Cody playing opposite her, Director Henry King has got well into his second picture at the "Flying A" studios, at Santa Barbara. His next story will be by Dan Whitcomb, who, incidentally, was the man who wrote the most successful of the Mary Sunshine stories, which Henry King directed for Balboa.

Geraldine Farrar, the Artcraft star, and her husband, Lou-Tellegan, departed this week for a motoring trip to San Francisco in Mr. Tellegan's new racing car. So far the trip has been most eminently successful, as in a long distance message to the studio at the completion of the first day, Tellegan announced that they had passed through four towns and had only been arrested for speeding in three.

Jack Conway has left Universal to direct productions at the Triangle Culver City studios. He is the first director to be engaged by H. O. Davis. Mr. Conway has been director for Ella Hall, J. Warren Kerrigan, Orrin Johnson, Gladys Brockwell and many other prominent players.

Studio Flashes.

Jack Wells, who formerly served as William Worthington's assistant at Universal, has been promoted on account of his ability to a directorship and is now directing a serial with Kingsley Benedict as his featured player.

Craig Hutchinson has been signed on a long contract by Universal to direct Victor Comedies, featuring Max Asher and Beatrice Van. Hutchinson, besides his directorial duties, is also writing his own stories.

Doug Fairbanks loaned his pugulist Bull Montana to Bill Russell the other day, saying that Bill was the only one that he would consent to using his famous sparring partner.

Lloyd Ingraham is the newest acquisition to the American roster at Santa Barbara. He will direct Mary Miles Minter, as James Kirkwood has gone to a new affiliation in New York.

Our good friend Ben Levy has been promoted by Isadore Bernstein to a comedy co-directorship with Lee Lawson. This is the first attempt of the Bernstein Productions to invade the rapidly growing comedy field.

We saw Ben Collier, the former manager of the Superba Theater, out on the Universal lot the other afternoon and he informed us he is filling an important position with the California Film Exchange.

John Nickolaus, head of the technical department at Universal City, has left Los Angeles for a business trip which will end at Broadway, New York.

IDEAL INSTALLS AMERICAN FOTOPLAYER.

The accompanying illustration shows the newly installed Style 40, American Fotoplayer, in the Ideal theater, at 43d street and Eighth avenue, New York City. The house is owned by the Consolidated Amusements Company, controling a circuit of ten theaters in New York. The Ideal is a 600-seat house, showing first run pictures, and operates continuously from 1 P. M. to 11 P. M. The Consolidated features its music and employs the product of the American Fotoplayer Company, 62 West 45th street, in its houses.

Muscovite Art Message Comes to America

Russian Art Film Corporation Shows First Offering Before Newest Republic's War Commission—Reception in Washington by National Press Club.

THE first of a series of motion pictures made in Russia and brought to the United States by Nathan H. Kaplan of the Russian Art Film Corporation was shown on June 27 in the grand ballroom of the Willard hotel in Washington, at a reception by the National Press Club to Ambassador Bakhmetieff and the special Russian war commission. Pushkin's "Pickovaya Dama" (The Queen of Spades) was chosen from about fifty other stories that Mr. Kaplan has already imported as being the best adapted to the audience and the occasion.

The author of "The Queen of Spades," Pushkin, is the father of Russian literature as Shakespeare is parent of ours. Russia's greatest musician, Tchaikowski, turned it into an opera, and in this form it has been produced at the Metropolitan Opera House on several occasions, so the play is both famous and distinguished. The picture as shown was about seven reels long. It will be seen again for review and no formal account of it need be given here. Let it suffice that it is distinctly a big offering. The powerful story in the hands of the Russian artist grips and holds, especially after the hero accepts the gage sent to him from hell and walks out to what he expects is a shining fortune. He's in the net of a sardonic nemesis though, and he goes mad.

Pushkin was a follower of Byron, and this story is Byronic but most particularly it is Russian and it runs just a bit off the path of our vision. The temperament of the average American is such that some of the picture's deeper connotations may escape him. For highly cultivated audiences it is great; in the ordinary theater it would go well if made much shorter. The story is there, and there is none who would not be moved by it even as it now stands. Mr. Kaplan has many more popular stories. The writer has not seen them; but if the art of the players and writers runs anywhere as high as in this, Russian pictures are going to be popular in America and no mistake.

Mr. Kaplan took a party of friends and newspaper writers to Washington with him to see the picture and brought the Russian orchestra of twenty-five pieces to render Tchaikowski's music. Among those noticed on the train and in the grand hall were James Beecroft of the Exhibitors' Herald, John Edwards of the Billboard, Robert Welch and William Barry of the Motion Picture News, "Wid" Gunning of "Wid's," Fred Eltonhead of The Exhibitors' Trade Review, Paul Sweinhardt of the New York Clipper, James McGuire of the National Board of Review and H. C. Judson of this paper. Tracy Lewis, Washington correspondent of The Morning Telegraph, looked up the party at the Willard. L. H. Goldsoll, H. H. Van Loan and C. C. Field of the Russian Art Film Corporation acted as hosts. The New York party returned on a special car on the midnight train the same evening.

It is not yet announced just when the picture will be released to the public or whether it or some other subject will be chosen to be the initial offering. This one only has been shown, and there is that in it that makes one truly anxious not to miss seeing the others and makes him want to see them soon.

PARAMOUNT SIGNS WITH NIXON-NIRDLINGER.

In the Philadelphia Ledger of June 27 it was stated that the Paramount-Artcraft Exchange had signed a $200,000 contract with F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger circuit of Philadelphia giving the Paramount nine theaters in that city for first run pictures. According to this change of policy the exhibitors will have the advantage of dealing directly with the Paramount exchange. A representative of the Paramount confirmed the signing of the contract, which is operative on August 1. He also said the Paramount contract with the Stanley Mastbaum Booking Association would terminate on July 31.

CONGRATULATIONS COMING TO KLEINE.

George Kleine has been fairly deluged with congratulatory letters from exhibitors since he announced that he, acting for Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, had abolished the advance deposit system.

Exhibitors express themselves as believing that Mr. Kleine's standing in the industry would assure a similar announcement from many of the other big organizations.

Richardson Riding Eastward

Pueblo, Cripple Creek, Colorado Springs, Denver and Topeka Are Visited and Left Behind

Pueblo, Colorado.

FROM Salt Lake City I made a straight dive eastward of 625 miles. The scenery I had seen many times before, yet the ride up Soldier Summit, down through wonderful Castle Gate, and the three giant engines laboriously dragging the train up past Leadville had not lost its fascination. I had friend porter wake me at 3 a. m., so I could look out at Palisade as we rumbled through, and finally rolled into Pueblo, where I found the reception committee waiting, but promptly side-stepped their kindly meant plans for entertainment, because Pueblo was for years my home, and there were, of course, many old friends to "dig up"; also I have relatives in that city, and must needs, of course, call on them. And that was how most of my few available hours were spent. I had a perfectly some-class dinner with the aforesaid relatives, who killed the fatted strawberry cake and everything, shook hands with P. G. Kay and his charming wife, rode out to look at my old East Eighth street home, and called on many old time friends. I also glanced into the Pantages and Princess theaters, but would not like to comment on projection conditions in the city, because my observations were too limited to permit of intelligent criticism. But the Princess operating room certainly does need attention—particularly as to its ventilation.

Pueblo is known as the "Pittsburgh of the West," her steel mills employing, in ordinary times, about six thousand men. The mills are now running double time, which of course makes business correspondingly good.

At 11.30 100 per cent. of her managers and operators gathered on the stage of the Princess theater, and they proved to be an appreciative audience. For two hours they listened attentively to the message I had to deliver, after which the things they did to the bountiful luncheon, served on the stage, was perfectly shameful. I saw one operator with a pickle between his teeth, a cheese sandwich in one hand, a bottle of dry State in the other and a plateful of fodder balanced precariously on one knee. He appeared to be enjoying himself real well.

Cripple Creek, Colorado.

Somewhere back in the dim ages of the second previous week I had received a letter from the Colorado Springs Operators' Union containing a most dolorous wail. I had given, said they "more time to Cripple Creek than I had to Colorado Springs, whereas there were only two theaters running in the district; moreover, Colorado Springs had very much more in the way of sights to show than had Cripple Creek." And wouldn't I "change things to give them a chance to set their scenery forth on display, decently and in order"? So I agreed to come back from Cripple Creek by automobile stage, thus saving half a day, which would be theirs; also I would leave for Denver Sunday afternoon, instead of forenoon. I wrote Denver to that effect, whereupon promptly came back a wire of protest: "Banquet set for June eleventh, can't be changed. Will expect you on that date," said they.

Having expended one special delivery letter in allaying Denver's wild alarm, I considered all that matter as being finally straightened out, and, having finished with Pueblo, set forth blithely for Cripple Creek. Now, in order to reach Cripple Creek from Pueblo, one changes cars at Colorado Springs, laying over from 8 to 11:50 a. m. in the process. No sooner had our feet pumped the platform in Colorado Springs than we were grabbed by a committee of four husky gentlemen, viz.: J. E. Tompkins, manager Princess theater; F. P. Navath, assistant manager Pike theater; D. B. Ashcroft, business agent Local Union 62; O. C. Hunt, vice president, Local Union No. 62, and Brothers A. A. Wiley and J. J. Malone, thrust into an automobile, behind which a cloud of dust immediately began to gather.

First, we drove to the Princess theatre, where a delay of one hour occurred, due to a mix up in films, the day's service for two or three of the theaters not having arrived on schedule. But there was still about two and one-half perfectly good hours, during which time that joyful committee motored the writer over to Manitou, introduced him to the famous Sodar Springs, incidentally filling him full of water that tasted like cotton and smelled like limburger cheese. Next we chased up through Williams' Canon to the Cave of the Winds, and went something less than six miles down into the earth in order to look at wonderful sights, plus nine bushels of hairpins, the same having been left by lady visitors, presumably one per visitor.

The writer annexed a nice yellow one, which will probably call for extended explanations upon his arrival in New York. When we left that cavern Manitou was two miles away, down a road that looked like a rheostat coil gone crazy, with the station still nine miles farther in the distance, and it was just 40 minutes until train time. Did we loop the loop? We did! But we made it! They explained to me that the reason for this performance was that the day and a half I would be in Colorado Springs when I returned from Cripple Creek would be altogether too little to permit of showing me the sights, unless they took time by the forelock and pretty nearly yanked his head off.

Cripple Creek I found to be hoeing what is commonly termed a hard row of stumps. I counted twenty-five vacant storerooms in two blocks. There is one theater running regularly in Victor, viz., the Opera House, which only runs in the evening and was therefore closed, nor could I locate its manager. In Cripple Creek only the Star Theater runs regularly, evenings only, with the Empress theater, owned by the same company, open Saturdays and Sundays. The Star theater of Victor is a neat little house managed by C. F. Shepherd, with whom I had a very pleasant chat; also shook hands with his operator, whose name has, however, for the moment at least, escaped me.

Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Next morning, true to promise, I boarded the automobile stage and enjoyed a nice ride through the mountains, around to the left of Pike's Peak, down to Colorado Springs, where the entertainment committee again seized upon my person, automobiled me out to and through the Garden of the Gods, shot me up the Scenic Incline half way to heaven, and only desisted when 4 o'clock came, because some of them absolutely had to get on the job or there would be a few shows in Colorado Springs which would not be pulled off according to schedule that night. This gave me time to glance at a few of the theaters. Broadly speaking, auditorium lighting conditions in Colorado Springs are better than the average, though the Empress exit lights near the screen might well have diminished brilliancy, and the exit signs of the Pike should have ruby glass behind the white letters; also the clock in the Pike is altogether too brilliant. The Princess, the leading photoplay theater of the city, has fairly good auditorium lighting, except for the ceiling fixtures in the balcony, which should be shaded so that the light would not be thrown on the front of the arch. At the Odeon, also, auditorium lighting conditions could to some extent be improved, though they are not at all bad.

The Odeon operating room is entirely too small, and has no proper ventilation. There is no exhaust fan and no fresh air intake. At the time I visited it the room was unbearably hot. What will it be in the heat of summer? The Empress has a fair room, and the picture light on the screen has excellent tone, though it might with advantage be considerably more brilliant. The Pike operating room is very bad indeed. It hangs from the ceiling, midway of the auditorium, with the lenses forty-five feet from the screen; moreover the ports are entirely too narrow, and entirely too low, though the latter cannot be avoided, since they are as high as the present location of the room will admit. I understand, however, that they intend rebuilding this theater and will remedy the operating room faults.

Operating room equipment was in all cases at least fairly modern, and in some cases right up to date. The machines I saw were Power's, with one Baird. Current is rectified by motor generator sets mostly, though I saw one mercury arc rectifier. For the most part pictures were of approximately correct size, with screen results ranging from fair to good.

The lecture was at the Elks Club, and was preceded by a banquet which did credit to the occasion. All managers and operators were present, and afterward spoke highly of the value of the address. The city electrician and his assistant also were there, and I believe what I told them will result in at least some good. By their attitude in accepting the rather sharp criticism I gave on certain points both the managers and operators of Colorado Springs proved their broadmindedness.

And now, wadda you think of this? The address was finished at 2.30 a. m., and when I emerged from the building there stood a big "six" and a Packardized Ford, loaded to the gunwales with Brothers D. B. Ashcroft, C. G. (Pat) Argust, J. J. Malone, A. A. Wiley and O. C. Hunt and other things We were tossed in on top of the mess and informed that we were due to eat a "sunrise breakfast" in the mountains.

So away we went, around hairpin bends, my friends enlivening the ride by relating, presumably for our entertainment, the number of automobilists who had met death at each curve. Well, we arrived, untangled the load, and you may now behold Big Chief Manhattan (this is for Calgary) rolled in a blanket, his head on a rock and his feet in the breeze, doing the back-to-nature stunt, while around him in the mountain forest glade lay stretched his braves, in more or less noisy slumber. Well, we ate Ashcroft pancakes, Argust fried ham, Malone toasted bacon, Wiley scrambled eggs, drank Hunt coffee and still live to tell the tale. Truly God is good.

On our way back to the city we visited seven falls, climbed up two hundred and sixty-five steps, and then scrambled up the mountain side to Helen Hunt Jackson's grave. I never before understood why Mrs. Jackson selected this particular spot in which to be buried, but now I know. It was because she could step right out of the grave through the celestial gates into heaven. I believe if I had climbed ten feet higher, I would have bumped one of the prongs off a star, and I positively know there wouldn't have been breath enough left in my body to have wiggled the wing of a mosquito.

Most emphatically no one can accuse Colorado Springs operators of being dead ones. They took me to the station, insisted on waiting for the train, which was late, carried my baggage into the sleeper and the last words I heard were "Good bye, old man. Wish you could stay with us for a week." They are members of the Regular Feller Tribe, and in strictly good standing, too.

Denver, Colorado.

Oh, you Denver! City of the Plains! Capital of the Rocky Mountains! City of memories to this particular writer! Place where the old-time gang held forth in days of old. As the train rolled onward from Colorado Springs I was busily engaged pulling pictures of the past out from memory's archives, many of which were good to look upon. At the station the reception committee of local union, No. 230, I. A., composed of E. A. Shields, E. A. Rougner and A. Johns, accompanied by Thomas Love, manager Hanna Opera House, Hanna, Wyoming (who had come 400 miles to hear the lecture), seized our hands and grips, shaking the one and conveying the other, and automobiled us up to the Albany Hotel, one of Denver's swellest temporary homes.

And now I am ashamed to say what happened, but the truth is mighty and must prevail. I didn't get a chance to visit a single Denver theater, and she has some beauties, too, to say nothing of the Curtis Street White Way, which for two blocks would actually make Broadway at Forty-second street, at 11 p. m., look shady by comparison. It hasn't the tremendous size of New York's White Way, of course, nor has it any of the wonderful electric signs Broadway boasts of, but what there is of it is a stem winding, double-back action, humdinger, and, what's more, the entire show is composed of the illumination on the fronts of the Curtis Street colony of moving picture theaters.

Between the activities of the entertainment committee of Local No. 230, and the visiting of the scenes of other days, there literally wasn't a moment of time for anything else. If you want a good mental photograph of us while in Denver, just visualize a spinning top—that's me in Denver. There was Otto Thum, formerly commissioner of the city of Denver, now president of a printing company; Harvey Garman, formerly president of the Colorado State Federation of Labor, now clerk for the Denver City Council, and Ralph Moser, formerly editor of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Engineers' Journal, now Denver City boiler inspector, all of them old-time pals.

The Ford Optical Company, learning that this particular reunion was going to be pulled off, proposed to send Ola Olsen, cameraman, out with us to take some moving pictures, which proposition was instantly and enthusiastically accepted. The only trouble was we didn't have enough to fill the car. All there was in that car were Otto Thum, Ralph Moser, Harvey Garman, city electrician; Joseph Reardon, Ola Olsen, cameraman; Artie Johns, official chauffeur for Local 230; Henry Kartuskey, E. A. Shields and the writer. Outside of that the car was entirely empty, except for the moving picture camera and tripod. Well, I am not going to bother you with the details of all the various things that mob did but, let me assure you, it was plenty; also I have got a record of it in moving picture films, for which I would not accept quite some several simeleons in cold, hard cash.

It was also my pleasure to visit the home of Brother E. A. Shields and assist in the massacre of one perfectly scrumptious dinner. Also it was my privilege to say good bye to the sister, who is past master in the art of saying good-bye.

Midnight found the Royal Cafe, one of Denver's best jammed full with a practically hundred per cent. attendance of Denver's moving picture theater managers, operators and exchange men, who after partaking of a most gastronomically satisfying feed, listened attentively to the gospel of better projection until 3 a. m. I understand that a portion of the membership of Local 230 was just a little bit skeptical as to the probability of my advancing anything in connection with projection with which they were not already thoroughly familiar. Well, boys, how do you feel about it now? But to do them justice, they at least had enterprise enough to "take a chance," and come out and hear what I had to say.

The last thing I felt in Denver was the hand clasp of the committee, as I climbed aboard the sleeper; the last thing I heard of Denver were the words "Come again"; the last I saw of Denver—well,I didn't see it. I went inside. I didn't want to see the old town melt into the haze of distance.

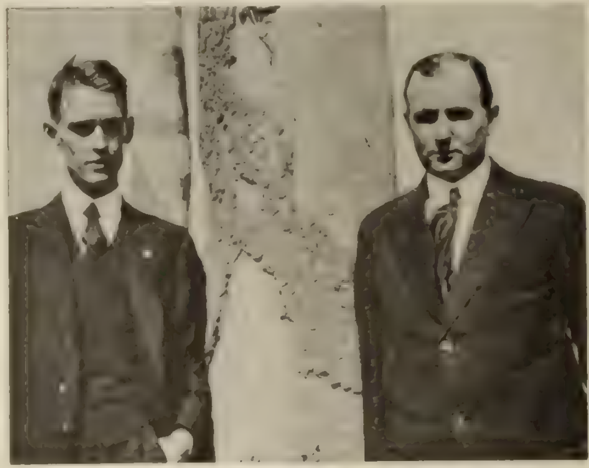
Topeka, Kansas.

From Denver the Rock Island carried me eastward 635 miles to Topeka, Kan., arriving six minutes ahead of time, which knocked out the reception planned by Local Union No. 404, through its committee, C. O. Tressner, business agent; H. E. Smith, secretary-treasurer; R. A. Barnette, corresponding secretary, and R. O. Vognitz, chairman board of trustees. We soon got into touch, however, and I quickly put the kibosh on their plans for joy riding, etcetra, only consenting when I saw tears in the eyes of the committee, which had one perfectly good automobile and eleven gallons of gas awaiting its pleasure, to drive out six miles and view the devastation wrought by a tornado just a few days before.

And let me inform you that a Kansas twister is nothing to be sneezed at. I had often heard of the bark being blown from trees, but I had believed it to be the vaporings of an idle imagination. Today, however, I actually saw a live, healthy tree, fully sixteen inches in diameter, with its top literally ripped away, and the bark actually blown from its bole, or stem. I took a close-up photograph, well knowing that if I returned to New York City with such a yarn unsupported by competent evidence, there are those who would lose faith in my sterling honesty. More than this, I saw a piece of board—one inch pine plank—which had been blown endwise into the bole of a tree some 18 inches in diameter and driven in so firmly that I was unable to move it. Yes, I know it's a tough yarn, but, kind friends, I saw it with my own two optics, and I'm a firm believer in what I see. I photographed this also.

During my stay in Topeka I visited the Iris theater, J. C. Elliott manager, H. E. Smith operator; the Orpheum, G. L. Hooper manager, W. W. Reid operator; the Cozy, Lew Nathanson manager, Tom Smith operator, and the Gem, C. A. McGuigan, manager, A. H. Snyder operator. The managers of Topeka impressed me as being courteous gentlemen; also they impressed me as lacking considerably in understanding the art of displaying the photoplay to the best advantage. The operating rooms are, without exception, entirely too small; also they have ceilings entirely too low.

In the Cozy it was necessary to squeeze in past the first machine carefully, in order to get at the second.



C. O. Tresner and H. E. Smith.

In none of these operating rooms was there any sort of proper ventilation, and they must be insufferably hot in summer as well as extremely unhealthy at all times. Motiograph, Power's and Simplex projectors are used. Hand rewinding is practiced, and that is distinctly bad. Beside the screen in most of the houses is a projection from a stereopticon located on the side wall, the same changing automatically every half minute or so. It is an advertising scheme, and is very, very bad, viewed from the projection point of view.

On the Roll of Honor

Charles McGovern, of the home office of the V-L-S-E has been called to the colors.

Bruce Weyman, who was soloist at the Strand Theater for a year and a half, has enlisted at Mineola in the First Reserve Aero Squadron, from where he expects to go to France. Mr. Weyman studied in France for three years under the tutelage of De Reske.

Don McCrea, of Halifax, plans to leave the management of the Imperial Theater and join the Army for Imperial Defense. Mr. McCrea put on the King's uniform on July 2d, and his many friends in the picture trade wish him every success.

E. A. McQuiggan, manager of the National Film Booking Service, Inc., 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has answered the call to the colors by enlisting in the U. S. Marine Corps and is now at Philadelphia.

Ed. Schwalbe, who left his place as assistant manager of the Majestic Theater, LaCrosse, Wis., to join the officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan, has made application for a place in the United States Army Aviation Corps.

L. B. Flintom, son of A. D. Flintom, district manager for Paramount and Artcraft, has received a commission as second lieutenant in the marine corps. He reported for duty June 23 at Winthrope, Maryland.

Two Topical Subjects, Two Industrial, Two Travel, One Gymnastic and One Zoological.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Reclaiming the Everglades" (Mutual-Gaumont).

THE pictures of the reclamation of the Everglades of Florida, as shown in "Reel Life No. 60," constitute an inspiring sight. Here we see how five million acres are being drained by means of large ditches into Lake Okeechobee, and how these once waste lands are being converted into gardens and farms where the choicest of vegetables and fruits can be grown. Towns have also sprung up almost over night in the Everglades; and it is easy to imagine that the day is not far distant when this entire section will be under cultivation.

"Sports and Pastimes of the American Cowboys" (Paramount-Bray).

One of the most interesting features in the 74th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph is a series of scenes showing the examples of the daring horsemanship of our American cowboys. In the picture a number of unbroken bronchos are successfully ridden, and four steers are roped with one lasso while the cowboy is riding at breakneck speed. An exhibition contest of roping cattle is also a feature of the picture, which is altogether thrilling and unusually interesting.

"Knitting Hosiery" (Mutual-Gaumont).

It is intensely interesting to see how machine knitted hosiery is made. In "Reel Life No. 60" we are transported to a modern knitting mill where we watch the various stages through which the yarn goes in arriving at the plane of the finished product. The scenes show the working of the skein winders, the back winders, ribbers and footing machines. The sorting, labeling and boxing of the hosiery is also shown.

"Manufacture of Coke" (Universal).

The "Universal Screen Magazine No. 24" contains an interesting illustration of the manufacture of coke, which is one of the most important industries which have been mobilized to place our country on a formidable war footing. The plant which we visit by means of the film is located near Pittsburgh. There we see a car of soft coal arriving on the surface from the mine below, and eight tons are then loaded in a giant electric "lorry" and started off for the ovens. When the lorry arrives at the oven, which is bricked up and luted with a specially prepared clay it disgorges its burden into the oven where it is spread with a mechanical leveller, which distributes the coal evenly and insures a uniform quality of product. At the expiration of 48 hours the doors of the oven are broken down and the coke, cooled by spraying, is then removed and loaded on cars.

"Alaska Wonders in Motion, No. 2" (Coronet).

In the second number of "Alaska Wonders in Motion" we arrive at anchorage, look about the town, see the largest log cabin in Alaska, and take a trip on the Government railway through cranberry swamps and timber lands toward the large copper deposits. The most interesting part of this film will be found to be views of Childs glacier. Here we front it for some considerable time and watch at close range the constant dropping off of huge pieces of ice from the glacier, into Copper River. We are told in subtitle that the thunder of the falling ice can be heard for miles around, and seems to fairly make the earth tremble. This is an unusual sight to most of us and is well worth the several hundred feet devoted to these glacier pictures.

"Through Central Texas" (Pathe-Combitone).

This number of the Combitone series is of special interest including views of Austin, Waco and Fort Worth. One of the particular points of interest shown is the stock yards at Fort Worth, which are fully illustrated. Vast beds of Bermuda onions remind one of the wealth of Texas soil.

"Jiu Jitsu" (Universal).

In the "Universal Screen Magazine No. 24" will be found several instructive illustrations of jiu jitsu methods. The holds that are demonstrated are the thumb-and-elbow throw, the hip throw, the hip throw and arm lock, the knee trip, the stomach throw and the front strangle hold. Then we see a real bout at jiu jitsu with all the holds used, when we learn that a rear attack is a mere trifle if you know how to meet it. The picture posed by Irma Rivers, assisted by Will Bingham, is intended to show how easy it is for a small woman to hold her own against annoyers.

"The Orang Apprentice" (Educational-Ditmars).

When Raymond L. Ditmars undertook to photograph an orang serving his apprenticeship at the plumbing business he chose a subject that cannot fail to please. It is full of grotesque comedy and shows us the orang driving in nails, pulling them with his teeth, and cutting a hole in the floor through which he receives the plumber's tools from below. He opens a pipe and then hurries to the door to call to someone downstairs to turn off the water. Then of course he has the unpleasant task of mopping up the water, which he does in quite a dexterous manner. The job finished he passes the tools back down through the hole in the floor and incidentally a bucketful of water. A very amusing picture.

J. F. Leventhal Explains "Tank" Action

Skilful Mechanical Drawings Appearing in Paramount-Bray Pictograph Elucidate Mysteries of Famous Tanks.

J. F. LEVENTHAL, of the Bray studios, was the first, we understand, to introduce mechanical drawing to the moving picture screen. His latest contribution which appears in Pictograph 74, is entitled "The Mechanical Operation of British Tanks" and has been made in co-operation with the Popular Science Monthly, as were also other recent efforts. These are "The Laying of a Submarine Mine" and "Traveling Forts."

The animated pen drawings showing the mechanism of the British tank explains that in the first place the tank is nothing more than a huge farm tractor changed in a few respects and covered over with a complete armor of hardened steel. The crew consists of a mechanician and helper and from two to five gunners, who are completely protected against bullets and shrapnel, so that it is possible for them to ride across the battlefield in the face of machine gun and rifle fire without fear of being hit. The great caterpillar treads, which replace wheels, are so broad that they find traction on any sort of ground and climb hills or plough through excavations with ease. The tremendously powerful motor propels the machine steadily along, its great weight crushing down trees, fences and walls irresistibly.

Mr. Leventhal's pen description of the exact workings of these huge war monsters will be found intensely interesting.

Roping Mountain Lions

Bob Bakker, Daring Montana Hunter, Gives Interesting Visualization of Roping Mountain Lions.

ONE of the most thrilling of animal pictures was exhibited at the Strand theater the week of June 17. This picture was entitled "Mr. Bob Bakker Roping Mountain Lions in Montana," and led us from the cabin of Mr. and Mrs. Bakker over snow covered mountains on the trail of one of these vicious animals. Mrs. Bakker, too, is a fearless hunter, and one of the most thrilling sights in the film shows her holding fast to the animal's tail while her husband muzzles him and ties his feet.

The passage over the mountains is made on snowshoes, with a leash of hunting dogs, to be let loose as soon as the lion's tracks are discovered. The lion, which is unable to make rapid headway on account of the snow, is easily trailed by the dogs as he makes for one of the nearest trees. He is sometimes kept a prisoner in the tree for a couple of days by the dogs, which stick to their post until the arrival of their master, who then climbs the tree and lassoes the lion. After the lion is made harmless by the muzzling and tieing already referred to he is placed in a crate for shipping to the zoo. At this point comes the most difficult task of all, the removal of ropes and muzzles without becoming a victim of the enraged animal.

The pictures were accompanied by some interesting explanatory remarks by Mr. Bakker.

First Moving Picture Camera

Made for Astronomical Purposes by a Brooklyn Scientist, Wallace Goold Levison, S. B.

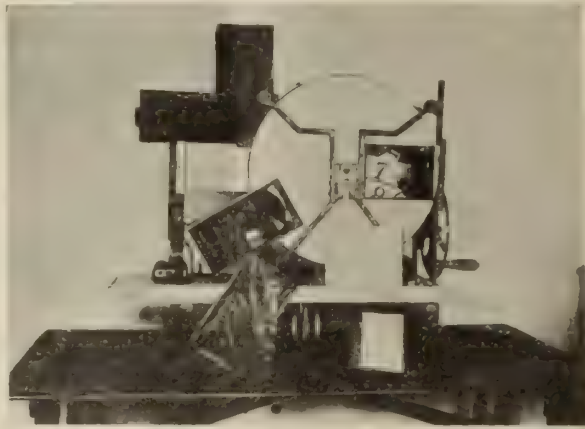
By Margaret I. MacDonald.

WALLACE GOOLD LEVISON is a scientist and inventor who has lived all his active life in the city of Brooklyn. He is one of those men who have been inspired to devote themselves to scientific investigation realizing that such a pursuit must not be made a bread winner, but that in order to grow and bear fruit must be developed on a background of solitude, with patient care. He was elected first president of the Brooklyn Academy of Photography, is a Harvard graduate, and is honorably connected with many scientific organizations. We are indebted to him for the first demonstration of motion in still pictures, the photography of fireworks and other self luminous subjects and for many more important developments or, more properly speaking, revelations in the world of photography. He is a life member of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and of the New York Academy of Sciences of which he is a fellow, secretary of the N. Y. Mineralogical Club, and about 1871 organized the Chemical Laboratory of the Cooper Union, probably the first established for the use of students in New York City.

Wallace Goold Levison, S. B.

If one cares to look through the files of the Brooklyn edition of the New York Herald for the issue of Sunday, April 19, 1903, there will be found an article of intense interest, especially to those who believe they know all there is to know in connection with the history of the moving picture. It will be found that the first moving picture camera was invented by Wallace Goold Levison, and that on June 26, 1888, he had recorded his right to a patent antedating Thomas Edison by several years. Edward Muybridge, it will be remembered, had achieved the making and projecting of moving pictures some time previous to the Levison idea of the consolidation of the work of Muybridge's several cameras into a unit. Muybridge made his pictures of galloping horses with twenty-four separate cameras, which were operated automatically in succession at a previously adjusted rate by an electrical device started by contact of the horse in its progress across the field with a thread stretched across his path. The Levison camera as beforesaid was a consolidation of the Muybridge idea and carried twelve plates exposable in a second or less. At the same time Mr. Levison had conceived the idea of using with the same mechanism a roll of sensitized flexible material of any length in the camera, although the manufacture of film was still a thing of the future. And although he had not constructed any projection apparatus such as we now have he demonstrated his idea of making a continuous negative on sensitive paper to provide positives for projection on June 13, 1888, before the Brooklyn Academy of Photography by means of a lantern slide of a mechanical drawing as seen in the accompanying cut, and suggested that such a picture of a speaker could be taken by his camera while at the same time his address was being recorded by a phonograph; and that afterward by a combination of the phonograph and zoopraxiscope the speech could be repeated, and at the same time the actions of the speaker be reproduced upon the screen.

One of the most interesting things about this camera is the fact that it was invented not for commercial purposes—for its inventor made not the slightest effort to commercialize it—but for use in scientific research work. It was hoped to apply it for recording such astronomical phenomena as transits of planets across the sun and eclipses of the sun, and the reason why plates were substituted for the more modern idea of the sensitized paper was because of their accuracy in recording, against the possible shrinkage of paper.



Original Model of Levison Invention. Using Plates for Astronomical Records.

Some facts in connection with the development of Mr. Levison's idea are amusing as well as interesting. For instance, complaint was made against a certain Brooklyn citizen because of a high board fence, which the occupants of apartments in the adjoining building declared shut the light of day off from them. On investigation it was found that this citizen was no other than Wallace Goold Levison, who in a moment of enthusiasm had erected a board fence some twenty-five or thirty feet in height, and about five feet in width. On his side of the fence from top to bottom he had strung a wire having upon it a loose ring which was attachable by a light chain to the leg of a pigeon which could be caused to fly. In vain attempts to soar to the sky the pigeon could of course proceed no further than to the top of the fence, sliding back again to its former position. And while the pigeon persistently repeated these attempts to fly Mr. Levison was busy experimenting with his new camera, using the high board fence as a background for the flying pigeon.

Eva Tanguay Comes to the Screen

Prominent Vaudeville Artist Will Be Seen in Selznick Pictures—First Subject Ready This Fall.

EVA TANGUAY, the vaudeville headliner, is to appear as the star of a Selznick Pictures production. The Eva Tanguay Film Corporation, organized by Harry Weber and Lewis J. Selznick, has completed all preparations and begun work.

Miss Tanguay brings to the moving picture screen a unique personality and a large following. For this reason she is regarded by many as distinctively a vaudeville and musical star. The fact is that her vaudeville success has caused most people to forget that a number of years ago she made a name for herself in dramatic acting. She is therefore returning to her first love.

"Miss Tanguay's first production will be a lavish one in every respect," said Mr. Weber. "She will be surrounded by a cast which will be in every way worthy of her talents, and no time, money or pains will be spared. We expect to have the picture in the market in the early fall."

THEATER WAR TAX NOT DEAD.

The following letter, received by North Carolina exhibitors from Representative Claude Kitchin, chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, which framed the War Revenue bill, indicates that all opposition to the Senate amendment proposing that, among other things, motion pictures be free from special taxation, is not yet dead:

"Messrs. Jno. C. Whitaker and J. B. Britt, Enfield, N. C.:

"Gentlemen: Permit me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 23d, asking my support of the Senate amendment relative to the tax on motion picture tickets or admission fares. The provision in the house bill was passed overwhelmingly—only about a half dozen votes against it—and under the rules of the House, as a House conferree representing the House, I will have to stand by its position when the bill goes to conference, unless the House by a vote recedes from its position.

"CLAUDE KITCHIN."

ROTHAPFEL ENTERTAINED BY SCREEN CLUB.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theater, was the guest of honor at a dinner and entertainment at the Screen Club on Saturday evening, June 30. At the head table besides Mr. Rothapfel were President Billy Quirk, Sheldon Lewis, chairman of the entertainment committee; John J. Gleason, Rennold Wolf, Edwards Davis, Howard Hall and Treasurer Will C. Smith.

At 9:30 o'clock the seventy-five diners ascended to the parlors and enjoyed an excellent entertainment in which pictures and vaudeville figured. Mr. Rothapfel made a stirring speech, extracts from which will be printed in next week's issue of the Moving Picture World.

PATHE SHOWS DEPARTING TROOPS.

In connection with the announcement in all the newspapers of the United States to the effect that soldiers of the regular army have been safely landed in France it is interesting to note that a cameraman for the Hearst-Pathe News filmed the soldiers as they were leaving a certain American port, and that these negatives have not been hitherto used, because of the fact that they would convey valuable information to the enemy. The pictures have at last been permitted by the Government to be shown, and the current number of the Hearst-Pathe News shows them.

"THE PLANTER" WINS IN NEVADA.

Trone Power, in the ten-reel version of "The Planter," was given the first public presentation at Reno, Nev., on June 30 by stockholders, who are local men. It received a big demonstration. The audience was enthusiastic at the climax. Hurst Brothers, owners of the Grand Theater, where the picture was shown, say it is the most successful film they have ever run. The picture will be in New York for showing about July 20.

GENERAL FILM OPENING THREE EXCHANGES.

As a result of the expansion inaugurated by General Manager Harold Bolster in the General Film Company's volume of product, the order has gone out for the opening of three exchanges, the locality of which will be announced soon.

General Sales Manager S. R. Kent is at present engaged in organizing the staffs of the new exchanges and arranging quarters.

William M. Ritchey Writing for Pathe

WILL M. RITCHEY, who photodramatized Mabel Herbert Urner's "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and "The Woman Alone," to make Pathe's serial, "The Neglected Wife," in which Ruth Roland is now starring with great success, is at work in the Astra studio on features and serials for Pathe. Mr. Ritchey has had long and varied experience and is one of the best scenario writers in the business.

Will M. Ritchey.

He was born in Evansville, Ind., September 24, 1879. He attended college at the University of Wooster, Ohio, and later took up the study of medicine in the University of Western Pennsylvania, and at Northwestern University, Chicago, but gave up this intended career at the end of the second year to enter the newspaper field.

He was trained as a reporter and copy desk man on newspapers in Pittsburgh, Chicago and Fort Worth. For five years he was connected with the Times Democrat of New Orleans. Later he was identified with the Evening Express of Los Angeles for four years. He left the Express to take up photoplay writing.

Mr. Ritchey's first connection with the motion picture industry was as scenario editor of the western branch of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, under Captain Wilbert Melville. He left the Lubin Company at the end of a year and spent several months in "free lance" work, contributing to the Selig, Vitagraph, Usona, Majestic, Reliance and other companies, and joined the Balboa staff in December, 1914.

Mr. Ritchey has written hundreds of produced photoplays in the course of his three years' connection with the industry. His most notable achievements are the authorship of the "Who Pays?" series and "The Red Circle" serial and "The Neglected Wife," released by Pathe. Mr. Ritchey is now devoting all his energy to the creation of big, out-of-the-ordinary productions.

KLEINE RELEASES CONQUEST JULY 14.

Arrangements and selection of the first four Conquest programs of seven reels each have been completed by George Kleine and the Edison Company. . Release date of the first subject has been set for Saturday, July 14, and each succeeding program of seven reels for each Saturday thereafter.

Great care has been exercised to make the most desirable selections possible and well-balanced programs consisting of from three to five subjects; one four or three reel feature and the remainder of shorter subjects, ranging from 100 to 1,000 feet each. Each subject is so distinct tht even though the programs are intended for distribution as a unit, each subject may be rented individually, the whole affording an exhibitor the widest possible variety.

ROHLFS IN GOLDWYN FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

J. G. Rohlfs, formerly at the head of the purchasing department of the Mutual Film Company, resigned from that organization when it removed its headquarters to Chicago to assume a similar position with the General Film Company. On July 9, Mr. Rohlfs takes another step forward, this time to take over the responsibilities of assistant controller for Goldwyn pictures.

EVANS IS PATHE CHIEF IN ST. LOUIS.

R. K. Evans, formerly a salesman in Pathe's Chicago office, has been promoted to the managership of Pathe's St. Louis branch. G. R. Sirwell has been appointed assistant manager at St. Louis.

Miss Young Getting Ready to Produce

Meanwhile Lewis J. Selznick Appeals to the Courts in Detroit to Restrain the Garson Productions.

WITH Clara Kimball Young still engaged in visiting the principal cities of the country in the interests of her own motion picture producing company, which has just been organized, her representatives in New York are actively engaged in preparations for the beginning of actual work, announcements from Miss Young's company state. It is further stated that the first release of the new company will be made about the middle of August. The picture, it is said, was written by a well-known writer, and will be directed by an equally well-known director. Definite announcements will be made in the near future, it is said.

The new company's plans are stated to be such as will give Miss Young liberties in working out a screen destiny limited only by the star herself. The entire direction of the selection and production of her pictures and the manner in which they are to be distributed has been left to Miss Young's decision. Miss Young avows that she will have nothing to do with any picture which is at all likely to run foul of censor boards.

Miss Young's trip through the South and West has been in the nature of a friendly visit to exchangemen, exhibitors and the public in general.

Selznick-Garson Litigation in Detroit.

The Detroit courts have been furnishing much excitement and speculations among film men because of actions involving Harry I. Garson, the Harry I. Garson Productions, and Lewis J. Selznick and the Selznick Enterprises, Inc. On Saturday, June 23, before the Detroit Circuit Court, the temporary suit brought by Mr. Selznick against Mr. Garson was heard. In this suit Mr. Selznick seeks to restrain the Harry I. Garson Productions, Inc., from doing business with Selznick Enterprises. The suit is brought on the allegation that the Garson exchange failed to make an accounting to the Selznick Enterprises since last May. Opposing this allegation is Garson's claim that Selznick has broken his contract by not being able to deliver any more Clara Kimball Young productions. The judge took the case under advisement.

Mr. Selznick, on June 23, replevined "The Barrier" print from Mr. Garson, but was later ordered by the court to return it to Mr. Garson, the latter putting up a bond of $2,000. Michigan film men are speculating as to whether or not Mr. Garson will be able to continue handling the old Selznick prints, and whether Mr. Selznick will establish a branch office in Detroit, as has been announced. D. Leo Dennison, who was formerly with Paramount, is in Detroit, looking after the Selznick interests.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Program for the Week of July 1 at New York's Best Motion Picture House—Mary Pickford at the Strand.

The new Mary Pickford picture, "The Little American," was the feature attraction at the Strand Theater for the week of July 1. Presenting a story by Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie Macpherson, this production brings home conditions involving the present great war. As Angela Moore, the little American girl who braves the war zone, Miss Pickford appears in one of the best dramatic efforts of her career. Victor Moore, in his latest farce, "Oh, Pop"; a patriotic picture of James Montgomery Flagg, painting recruiting posters; projecting Water Sports in Hawaii, and Tropical Review were also on the program.

Daniel Wolf and Rosa Lind were the soloists.

"At First Sight" at the Rialto.

Mae Murray was featured at The Rialto in a modern romantic comedy called "At First Sight." The story was written by George Middleton and prepared for the screen as a Famous Players production. Miss Murray appears as a highly modern young woman, whose rebellion against a prearranged marriage and her breezy courtship of a bashful young author make capital warm weather entertainment. Sam T. Hardy plays the author. Huge glaciers, reindeer herds and glimpses of Eskimo life were shown in a new series of animate photographs recently secured in Alaska, and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew presented their latest dometsic entanglement, "The Matchmaker."

Marion Rodolfo and Margaret Gilmer are the soloists.

"The Lone Wolf" at the Broadway.

The Herbert Brenon production of the Louis Joseph Vance crook novel, "The Lone Wolf," opened at the Broadway Theater last Sunday night. This motion picture version of one of the most entertaining stories ever written by the prolific Mr. Vance bids fair to be a huge success. Hazel Dawn is the Lucy Shannon and Bert Lytell is The Lone Wolf.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater, William Desmond, in "Paws of the Bear," and Claire Anderson, in "A Janitor's Vengeance," comprised the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday bill.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Charles Ray, in "The Clodhopper," and Chester Conklin and Charles Murray, in "The Betrayal of Maggie," were the picture attractions.

Lina Cavalieri Paramount Star

LINA CAVALIERI, internationally celebrated Italian operatic star, has contracted to appear in productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exclusively for a period of one year. According to the agreement just entered into, Mme. Cavalieri will star in two pictures, one to be staged in September and the other in the spring. This arrangement is made in order that the diva will not have to interrupt her work with the Chicago Opera Company, where she has been enjoying a tremendous personal success.

Lina Cavalieri.

The career of Cavalieri is more remarkable than any character she has ever enacted upon the operatic stage. Originally a little dancing girl in Rome, her beauty and grace won her a much-coveted membership in the ballet at the opera house in Rome. Here her performances so charmed the King of Italy that she was placed under the personal tutelage of Lombardi.

After a most successful European career, Cavalieri made her first appearance in America at the Metropolitan Opera House, where she remained a star until the opening of Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House. Here she continued as the chief stellar attraction until the close of Mr. Hammerstein's venture. After a period in Europe she joined the Chicago Opera Company.

It is planned that Cavalieri will center her producing activities in the East. Both of her productions already have been selected.

LUCILLE K. YOUNGE WITH PARALTA.

Lucille K. Younge has joined Bessie Barriscale's company and is now playing "Miss Merriweather" in her support in "Rose O'Paradise," now being produced at the Paralta studios in Hollywood.

Miss Younge is a native of Lyons, France, and began her stage career in vaudeville when a young girl. After playing with Thanhauser and Lubin she joined the Majestic-Reliance forces in 1913. With the formation of Triangle she became identified with Fine Arts and contributed many good characterizations to its productions. Her most recent association was with the American, then joining Miss Barriscale.

KELLARD RETURNS TO THE STAGE.

Ralph Kellard, the Pathe star, has retired from the film field, temporarily at least, and returned to the speaking stage, which he abandoned for pictures about a year and a half ago; Mr. Kellard opened last week, out of town, for the spring try-out, in the leading role of "The Assassin," the new drama from the pen of Eugene Walter.

Julian Johnson Joins Selznick

Talented Magazine Editor Will Be Editor in Chief of Selznick Pictures, and Follow Product to Finish.

JULIAN JOHNSON, editor of Photaplay Magazine has resigned from that publication to accept the position of editor in chief of Selznick-Pictures. Mr. Johnson's resignation from Photoplay will go into effect as soon as the publishers engage his successor, and he will take up his new duties immediately, probably soon after July 1.

In the three years Mr. Johnson has been editor of Photoplay it has grown from a small beginning until now it is recognized as the leading "fan" publication in the country. In addition to his executive position his contributions were the most important features of the magazine. His critical department, "The Shadow Stage," established a high standard for pictures, which promises important results for the Selznick organization when the principles he advocated consistently and persistently are expressed in actual productions. Another regular feature of Photoplay has been Mr. Johnson's editorial comments, "Close-ups," in which his knowledge of all the various phases of the industry's activities was pungently expressed.

"I have created the position of editor-in-chief of Selznick-Pictures to make a place for Mr. Johnson in my organization," said Mr. Selznick. "I have known him for several years, and have watched his work with great interest. I believe there are few men who have made so serious and thorough study of photoplays as he. His reviews of pictures invariably strike at the vital point, whether in praise or blame. If that sort of brains is of value to a magazine it is of double value to a producer.

"There has always been a place in my organization for some man whom I could trust to watch a produtcion from the time the scenario is accepted until the moment the finished print is placed upon the market. I have always been looking for the man for the job. Mr. Johnson hesitated to leave the magazine field in which he has made a reputation for himself, but finally he consented when I showed him the constructive work and broad possibilities that lay before him in the position I had created."

"In magazine work I endeavored to view the firm business from a constructive angle, and especially was this true in the review department, 'The Shadow Stage,' which I created," said Mr. Johnson. "For ten years I had believed in and had practiced, to the extent of my ability, constructive criticism of the drama; and I essayed reviews of photoplays at a period recent as to time, but remote as to swift epochs of the film business, where three years in a century. When I began to write screen reviews, less than three years ago, scarcely any publications except the trade papers printed such things. Now every newspaper of consequence in the United States has its department of film criticism, in the main honest and outspoken."

New Theater for Sao Paulo, Brazil

Has Two Auditoriums in Which the Shows Are Started a Half Hour Apart.

São Paulo, Brazil, June 10

THIS city has now the best and handsomest hall for films in all Brazil, with the possible exception of the Olympia, in Pará. Most managers and owners have held the belief that a roof with a few supporting posts and a few boards to keep out the eyes of the curious formed a cinema. As the largest and most important firm in the business, the Companhia Cinematographica Brasileira felt itself bound to provide a hall in keeping with the quality of the films projected. Many efforts were made to find a location that would meet favor, and the site finally chosen is right in the center of everything. Hotels, business district and parts of the residence section are within a few minutes' walk.

The last word in perfection is represented in the construction. There is a magnificent waiting room, artistically decorated with flowers. There are scenes taken from the "paper" of coming attractions. These are mounted on a little balcony at the back of the waiting room, and brilliant effects are obtained from these announcements by the judicious use of different colored lights.

The hall is divided into two sections—the red hall and the green hall. The first show starts at 7.15; the second at 7.45. Two complete programs are given each night, except in the case of big things like "Civilization," when the same film is run in both halls, allowing half an hour between starts. The ordinary program lasts one hour, so that six shows are given, three in each hall. The arrargement for discharging one hall without mixing patrons consists in swinging a cable from one side of the waiting room to the other. There are two ticket offices, one of which is out of business only while one hall is being emptied. The ticket office is stationary, of course, but the ticket taker and his fence are swung to one side to allow plenty of space for the outgoing crowd.

In the red hall the decorations are in accord with the name, and the same is true of the green hall. The only fault to be found is that the color schemes are too subdued. They give a poor idea that the spectator is in a temple of amusement

The New Cinema Central, Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Two excellent orchestras furnish music in the halls. The players are placed below the level of the floor.

In the exterior of the building there is nothing remarkable except extreme simplicity. The building was occupied as an amusement place before the upper part was furnished.

Kalem Arms Jersey Home Guard

Rutherford Patriots Abandon Canes and Broom Handles for Kalem Rifles.

RUTHERFORD, N. J., like many other communities which have organized home guards, found it impossible to secure rifles with which to drill. The local patriots, young and old, began to chafe at shouldering sticks, canes and broom handles while learning the manual of arms and the city fathers doubled their efforts to secure honest-to-goodness guns.

Kalem Home Guard Inspecting Arms.

Learning that the Kalem Company has a large arsenal—acquired for their military productions—Rutherford appealed to the Kalem officials, who immediately instructed their Glendale (Cal.) studio to ship two hundred rifles to Rutherford. Manager Phil Lang selected rifles practical for firing, equipped them with bayonets and shipped them to Rutherford. The illustration shows the guns being packed for shipment at the Glendale studio, Mr. Lang at the left and S. V. Boyd, studio manager and technical director, at the right.

Fox Men Meet in Convention

Representatives of Film Manufacturer from All Over the World Gather in New York.

THE third annual convention of the Fox Film Corporation opened at the Hotel Biltmore Monday, July 2, with an attendance comprising practically every branch manager in the United States, Canada, South America and Europe. When the first session was called to order in the ballroom indications pointed to the accomplishment of changes in policy of vital interest to the whole industry, changes already foreshadowed by the announcement from the Fox headquarters that news of great importance might be expected by the trade on or about July 15.

The delegates to the Fox convention will hold business sessions for three days, after which they will spend the remainder of the week in an extensive program of entertainment planned for them by Mr. Fox and his chiefs of staff.

During their stay in New York the delegates will occupy the famous Presidential Suite at the Biltmore, which includes a large convention room. The business sessions will begin at 10 o'clock and last throughout each of the three days, with the usual lunch intervals. These conventions were conceived by Mr. Fox as one of the best ways possible to knit more closely the great fabric of his organization. Reports will be read by men with expert knowledge of the film market conditions throughout the world and the condensed thought of the convention, Mr. Fox believes, will be of greatest aid to him in the production of pictures suitable for the widest possible distribution.

The list of those who will attend the Convention and the departments they represent are as follows:

William Fox—W. R. Sheehan and A. Carlos.

General Manager's Office—Herman Robbins, C. W. Eckhardt, F. H. Wachter, A. P. MacIntyre and Clayton P. Sheehan.

Auditing—E. Waldo, H. L. Clark, Mr. Preiss and Mr. Yarnall.

Contract—H. J. Roberts, Mr. Maisch, Irving Maas, Sam Shapin and Aaron Fox.

Publicity—Walter Sanford, Hamilton Thompson, E. Richard Schayer, D. A. Morrissey, Jay Voorhies, Gerald B. Spiero, Stuart Acheson and A. B. Bernd.

Bursement—W. T. Wilson and Mr. Goodman.

Honor System—Carey Wilson and H. Fuld.

Requisition—Thomas W. Brady and F. B. McClure.

Foreign—Fred W. Lange and Mr. Richland.

District Managers—Harry Leonhardt, Paul C. Mooney and Lewis S. Levin.

Branch Managers—John L. Day and Sam Dembow, Atlanta; C. G. Kingsley and William Shapiro, Boston; J. E. O'Toole, Chicago; Rudolph Knoepfle, Cincinnati; C. A. Brown and George Erdman, Cleveland; George C. Reid, Dallas; Jos. Kaliski, Detroit; A. F. Bergen, Denver; C. H. Phillips, Indianapolis; C. W. Young and Robert J. Churchill, Kansas City; Field Carmichael, Los Angeles; W. H. Lawrence, Minneapolis; A. S. Moritz, New Orleans; Jack Levy, New York; Lester Sturm, Omaha; George Dembow and W. J. Madison, Philadelphia; G. R. Ainsworth, Pittsburgh; W. J. Citron, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; D. M. Thomas, St. Louis; G. R. Jermain and Wm. Alexander, Syracuse; C. F. Senning and Mr. Meyers, Washington, D. C.; Joseph B. Roden, Salt Lake City; Maurice West, Montreal; Mitchell Granby, Quebec; B. P. Rogers, Toronto.

Other Fox representatives expected to be present include men from all over the world.

UNIVERSAL TO HOLD CLAMBAKE.

Much interest is being manifested in the big clambake and outing which will be held under the auspices of the Universal Club on Saturday afternoon, July 7, at Donnelley's Grove, College Point. It will be the first celebration of its kind in the local film world, and if anticipations are realized will be established as a regular annual occasion. Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers and R. H. Cochrane will all be present as official hosts.

A full series of athletic events will enliven the afternoon, including a 50-yard dash, open to all; a girls' potato race; a girls' 50-yard dash; a 100-yard dash, open to all; a three-legged race for girls; a 440-yard relay race, participated in by teams of four; a three-legged race for men; a baseball throwing contest for girls; and just before the shore dinner is served, a five-inning baseball game between the office exchange employees and the laboratory workers.

Humorists Visit Goldwyn Studio

'Twas a Circus When the Funny Men and Punny Men and Their Wives and Children Went to Fort Lee, N. J.

THE American Press Humorists, with their wives and children, visited the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee, N. J., on Wednesday, June 26, and, believe the writer, who was there, it was a circus. If anyone doubts that it was a circus proof will be forthcoming early in September, when Mae Marsh's third Goldwyn picture reaches the public. It would have been a circus without the circus, but inasmuch as Miss Marsh's picture tells a story of the circus, the high-brow columnying clowns had a chance to watch the other and less subtle humorists perform in the sawdust circle.

The occasion was part of the program of the Humorists' convention, and a party of about a hundred were trundled over to the Fort Lee studios in automobile 'busses as guests of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Arrived there the party was taken through the plant and the mysteries of the movies explained to them by Studio Manager Aubrey M. Kennedy. Along about 1 o'clock someone shouted "To Arms! To Arms!" and the party flocked as a man to Louis L. Arms, Goldwyn's editorial director, and followed him to the "eats." (It might be well here to deny the rumor that a group of the funny men bribed the circus band to play the National Anthem so that when everybody stood up they could horn in on extra dessert.)

After the studio luncheon the bunch met Jane Cowl and Mae Marsh, Goldwyn stars, and then repaired to the big circus tent. Here they were supplied with farmers' hats, etc., and filled up an entire bank of seats. A battery of cameras were trained on them and the circus acts, and with Charles Horan handling the directorial whip the crowd became a unit of well-trained "supes" doing "atmosphere" with the utmost eclat.

After the circus scenes several of the humorists were staging a little scenario in front of the tent. A camel was walking across the space when someone made a slurring remark about camels in general. A camel, you know, can go eight days without a drink; but with this particular camel it was the ninth day. So when the slurring remark was passed Mr. Camel became the chief actor in a scenario entitled, "Make Way for Me." The humorists did. But nevertheless the camera caught the manly forms of many of the humorists.

Lions—wild and social,—tigers, camels, monkeys and elephants were in the menagerie that was visited before the humorists left for New York, apparently contented with their mission and station in life.

Clarence J. Caine Dead

Well-Known Film Editor and Former Editor of Trade Journal Passes Away in Los Angeles.

Clarence J. Caine, widely known in film circles as a film editor, authority on scenario writing, and trade journal editor, passed away the morning of June 21, at his home in Sierra Madre, a suburb of Los Angeles, California, whither he had gone in the hope of bettering his health. The body was brought to his former home in Milwaukee, for interment and funeral services were held in that city on Wednesday, June 27.

Born in Milwaukee, in 1895, Mr. Caine, after attending high school, entered the employ of a life insurance company. About that time he became interested in photoplay writing, and not long afterward was engaged to conduct a daily motion picture department in the Milwaukee Free Press. In 1914 he moved to Chicago and became associate editor of Motography. After a year of editorial work, he accepted an important position in the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company. This work brought him directly under the eye of J. A. Berst, then general manager of the company, and after a short time he was prompted to the post of film editor and stationed at the factory. While holding this position he "cut" such important subjects as "The Ne'er Do Well" and others of equal note. Resigning this post in December, 1915, Mr. Caine went to New York City as associate editor of Picture Play Magazine, one of the Street & Smith publications, and up to the time of his death continued to contribute regularly to this periodical. In February, 1916, he returned to Chicago as editor of Exhibitors' Herald, and shortly afterward was taken ill. He went to Los Angeles in the hope of bettering his health. A mother survives him.

"The Man Who Was Afraid"

Inspiring War Photodrama by Essanay, in Which Bryant Washburn Plays Leading Role Brilliantly.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE production of "The Man Who Was Afraid" is most timely, now that we are in the midst of martial preparations, with the national patriotism at a high pitch. The story has to do with the preparations recently made to protect our southern border against murdering marauders from Mexico, and the mustering of National Guard forces for the front.

The adaptation is from Mary Brecht Pulver's story, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and H. Tipton Steck, who is the writer of the script, has done his work so well that the spectator's interest is always tense. Director Wright has given the war-drama fine settings, the scenes which show the departure of the troops for the front and the battle between them and the Mexicans creating a thrill and a realism that will excite in the heart of every American a wave of patriotic ardor.

Benton Clune, the young man in the story, concentrates most of the interest on himself. He is rich and has the disadvantages of being fatherless and a mollycoddle. His mother has brought him up so that he has been taught fear all his life, and due to her teaching and interference he resigns from his company, just as it is setting out for the front, and is disgraced as a slacker.

But Elsie Revere, on whom he has set his heart, is another type of woman, and she arouses in his blood the old martial ardor of his ancestors. So he breaks away from his mother's apron strings, rejoins his company before it leaves for the border, and there undertakes a hazardous feat where the chances are nine to one against his ever coming out alive, in order to bring succor to his colonel and the men in his command. He succeeds, and becomes the hero of the men who had branded him with names worse than that of felon.

As Benton Clune, Bryant Washburn has added another memorable success to his career. He really lives the part of the shrinking coward, who is almost lost to shame. And the spectator is made to see the first glimmer of manhood roused in him by the influence of the girl who loves him, but who loathes his pitiful soul. Through the desire to stand right in her eyes we see that soul awakened, and its rebirth to that of a real man and a hero.

Margaret Watts is resourceful and effective in the role of Elsie Revere. She is successful in hiding under the show of sternness and haughtiness the love that Elsie still feels for the man who has disgraced himself.

Scene from "The Man Who Was Afraid" (Essanay).

According to his wont, Ernest Maupain's Colonel Cory is a well-drawn character. The military air of distinction, the kindness and the sternness of authority are all there. Miss Frankie Raymond gives an impressive impersonation of the de-womanized Mrs. Clune. The feelings created by this characterization are pity and contempt.

The release will be made July 2, through K-E-S-E, Inc.

"Automaniacs"

Alice Howell and Considerable Speed Features of Two-Reel Century Comedy—Distributed on State Rights Plan.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

ALICE HOWELL and considerable speed are the features of "Automaniacs," a two-reel Century Comedy for state rights exploitation. Miss Howell is first seen as the general butt around a garage. There are explosions and all sorts of other things in the opening scenes that should bring laughs.

Scene from "Automaniacs" (Century).

Then the vampire comes on and Alice's fat lover is lured away. But she is not to be denied. She tries suicide, but the gas she uses only makes her float away across the sky-line. She hits the cruel earth with a bump. It is when she disguises herself with false whiskers and becomes a jitney jerker that the action speeds up at a pace that brings the flivver through houses and through all sorts of things.

The comedy is of the rapid-fire, hurry-up action sort, and is a thoroughly acceptable number. Directed by J. G. Blystone.

"Caste"

Five-Reel Screen Version of T. W. Roberston's Famous Old Play Made in England, With Sir John Hare and Peggy Hyland, a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WITH a cast consisting of Sir John Hare, Peggy Hyland, Mary Porke, Campbell Gullan, Roland Pertfee, Esme Hubbard and Dawson Milward the fine points of T. W. Robertson's famous old play of "Caste" are brought out on the screen in a fashion to delight everyone whether familiar or not with the original work. This play, which marked an important change in English drama, the entrance of the naturalistic school of stage fiction, is such a close study of life and shows human nature so intimately and with such kindly humor and understanding of its worst and its best qualities that its story never loses its freshness.

The aristocratic George D'Alroy, who marries pretty Esther Eccles of the ballet and is forced to accept all her lower class relations including her drunken old father, is the hero of a romance that is told in the simplest possible way.

The call to war which leads to a false report of D'Alroy's death, and his return, when rich and poor, high born and low, are brought to realize that they are all pretty much alike under their skins, brings to its close one of the stories that will always remain a part of the best traditions of English stage fiction.

The screen version has been skillfully altered to meet the requirements of its new medium. Larry Trimble, who assisted in making the scenario, also directed the production. He has had the good judgment not to add any melodramatic features to the story by taking advantage of D'Alroy's experience in Africa, and his efforts all through the production command great praise.

Sir John Hare, who created the part of Eccles on the spoken stage, still plays that ardent old humbug and lover of strong drink with mellow art and fine humor. Peggy Hyland as Esther is sweet and womanly. Campbell Gullan makes Sam Gerridge wholesome and likeable, and the other members of the cast belong in the same distinguished company.

Pathe Releases

"It Happened to Adele," Five-Reel Photoplay Produced by Thanhouser and Featuring Gladys Leslie; First Installment of "The Fatal Ring," and No. 10 of "The Neglected Wife."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE things that happen to the heroine in "It Happened to Adele" prove that life gets most curiously mixed up for some people. This five-reel photoplay was produced by Thanhouser and written by Agnes C. Johnston. It has touches of the author's gift for unconventional and amusing situations, but few of them appear to have any real connection with each other.

Adele is a pretty young orphan who starts to earn her own living as a chorus lady and utilizes an accidental fall from a window to get her name in the papers. She is in love with a young man who has composed an opera and helps him to get his work produced. It is a great success and Adele is more in love with the composer than ever. She is cured, when a fire breaks out and the young man saves his beloved opera and leaves her to perish. She is saved by a more discerning young fellow and has the good sense to marry him. Miss Johnston has written much better scenarios.

Gladys Leslie makes Adele attractive and is consistent to the lines laid down for her. Carey Hastings, Peggy Burke, Charlie Emerson, Clarine Seymour and Wayne Arey support the star effectively, and Van Dyke Brooke has directed the production with excellent judgment.

"The Fatal Ring."

The new Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring," adapted from a story by Fred Jackson, starts off with every indication of possessing the qualities beloved by the followers of the continued-next-week picture. It is very much alive at the beginning of the first reel and before the first installment is over the attention is firmly caught. The title of the opening number is "The Violet Diamond." It is in three reels, but the other numbers will contain but two. The cast is a fine one. Aside from the one and only Pearl White, Earle Fox, Ruby Hoffman, Warner Oland and Henry Gasell have important parts in the serial.

The character played by the star is that of Pearl Standish the richest girl in America. She is anxious for excitement and there is every indication that her wish will be gratified before the last reel. A jewel known as the Violet Diamond of Daroon has been stolen from an Eastern god, and a high priestess and a band of her countrymen are in America to recover the diamond. It is supposed to be in the possession of the Standish family, and a handsome young housebreaker, one Nicholas Knox, is ordered by the priestess to steal back the jewel. His attempt gets quick action and, in a lively general mix-up, Pearl does a stunt over a stair rail and connects with a chandelier in a highly sensational fashion. She still has all her old joy in a free-for-all encounter.

Scene from "The Fatal Ring" (Pathe).

"The Neglected Wife."

"A Veiled Intrigue" is the title of the tenth installment of the serial in which Ruth Roland and Roland Bottomly are featured. The end of Margaret Warner's ride with the veiled woman finds the girl trapped in a strange room. An attempt to blackmail Kennedy fails and, upon visiting Margaret's room he finds the note written by the veiled woman. His wife also receives a note telling her to go to a certain sanitarium, if she wants proof for a divorce. She arrives there and finds Margaret is being held as an insane person. Norwood effects the release of both women.

"Fires of Rebellion"

Bluebird Five-Reel Screen-Drama Featuring Dorothy Phillips a Truthful but Drab Story of a Young Girl's Struggle with the World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is not the shadow of a doubt that the characters in "Fires of Rebellion" are taken from life. Existence is just such a drab, disheartening affair for some people as it is depicted in this five-reel Bluebird picture. Madge, the young girl played by Dorothy Phillips with keen insight, has been brought up in a home where her drunken brute of a father makes her long to get away. John Blake, the rough but honest foreman of the factory where her father works, loves her, but Madge is afraid that he will become like the rest of the married men about her and refuses to marry him. She goes to the city and secures a position as a model for the display "ads" of a maker of women's underwear. She is properly shocked when she learns of the brevity of the garment she is to don, and refuses to carry out her part of the contract.

Scene from "Fires of Rebellion" (Bluebird).

The manufacturer of lingerie is an old hand at snaring such innocent birds and works his scheme so successfully that the timely arrival of the foreman is the only thing that saves the model from the usual consequences of such affairs. Blake puts his arm through a glass door, walks into the room and knocks out the villain in a way that removes any doubt from Madge's mind about the wisdom of becoming the foreman's wife. Satisfied of her innocence, Blake takes her to her room, then tells her he is going for a marriage license. Madge is ready and anxious, but reminds him that she'd like to hear him say he loved her first. He takes the hint.

The scenes before Madge goes to the city are the best and most novel in the story. What follows is the customary list of misfortunes for the poor girl away from home. The production is satisfactory. William Stowell, Lon Cheney, Belle Bennett and Golda Maddern are the leading members of a capable support.

"The Brand of Satan"

Five-Reel Melodrama Starring Montagu Love a Coarse Grained but Vigorous Photoplay with a Weak and Inconsistent Ending.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

RIGHT from the opening scene, "The Brand of Satan" lives up to its title. This five-reel Peerless melodrama is the work of Jere F. Looney and indicates considerable study of French fiction of which "The Stranglers of Paris" is a type. It also deals with the dual personality question, the human being in whom dwells two natures, one upright and honorable, the other incarnate evil.

Manuel Le Grange, a professional murderer who kills his victims by strangling them, escapes from prison, murders an old man and assaults his daughter after choking her into unconsciousness. A child is born as the result of the attack, his mother rearing him in Paris, where her true story is not known.

After a lapse of twenty-nine years the son is shown as Jacques Cordet, a criminal prosecutor, highly respected and living with his mother, the Widow Cordet. To him belongs the dual personality. In the day he is the man of law, at night he becomes a criminal like his father and heads a band of Apaches who know him as "Lazard, the Strangler."

Unlike the character in the Stevenson story he has no suspicion of his terrible affliction and only realizes it when he makes the change from Lazard to Cordet, as he is trying to assault the young girl to whom he is engaged.

The list of the son's crimes while dominated by the Lazard personality becomes involved with that of his father. After Manuel's execution an operation is performed upon Cordet's skull which destroys his dual personality forever and he marries his sweetheart.

Scene from "The Brand of Satan" (World).

If one is not disposed to question too closely the author's explanations as to cause and effects and has a relish for a coarse-grained but vigorous story "The Brand of Satan" will prove entertaining. It is excellently directed by George Archambaud. Montagu Love, who heads the cast, acts Cordet and Lazard with equal skill. J. Herbert Frank and Albert Hart give finished portraits of the next two parts in importance, and Gerda Holmes, Nat Cross, Evelyn Greeley, Emile Le Croix and Katherine Johnson are entirely satisfactory as the other characters.

Triangle Program

"Her Excellency the Governor," with Wilfred Lucas, "Borrowed Plumes," with Bessie Barriscale, and "Whose Baby," Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A HIGH comedy of political life is Triangle's "Her Excellency the Governor," with a vital subject, well handled and interpreted in fine style by Wilfred Lucas, Elda Millar and a strong support. The story works up to a genuine crisis in a struggle between the old element of corrupt politics and the new element of cleanliness under a bright woman's leadership. She stands by her ideals when elected lieutenant governor, through her lifetime friend and suitor, the governor himself, stumbles into the trap set by "influence" and is on the edge of a political downfall, such as has put many a bright aspirant in the Down-and-Out Club. The governor is pictured very realistically as representative of the kind of crooked politics to which we have become so accustomed that we take it all as a matter of course. It is a difficult role for Lucas, but he does not shirk it in any way, thereby proving himself to be a true artist in character analysis.

Very bright, cheering and almost inspiring is the portrayal of a modern woman by Elda Millar. She looks the part of an intelligent and entirely competent woman of today, without sacrifice of the feminine, a clean-cut and charming conception. It is the ideal represented in this role that wins straight through the story, carrying it over some difficulties which several times threaten to destroy continuity of interest. There is really no lapse of interest, only threats of it, for the approach of the crisis finds the spectator absorbed in determining how it is all to end. The release is far above most of its kind in purpose and will appeal to the best elements in any audience.

"Borrowed Plumes" is a patriotic comedy of the time when that bold Scot-American, John Paul Jones, commonly known as Paul Jones, was skirting the coast of Ireland and striking terror into the hearts of people wherever his ships appeared because of the report sent broadcast that he was a desperate pirate. The story is well constructed by J. C. Hawks and admirably handled by Raymond B. West. It is replete with romantic adventure and affords charming Bessie Barriscale opportunity to appear in varied guise, much to her delight, but there is a lack of definite direction and of real dramatic crisis. This is compensated for by some very amusing characterizations.

First of these is, of course, the piquant role of Bessie, who plays the part of a kitchen wench left in a castle when the Earl of Selkirk and all his retinue abandon the place in fear of Paul Jones. Bessie now has a chance to try some of the handsome gowns left behind and impersonates an imaginary Lady Nora. As such she receives the homage of some gallant English officers sent with their troops to defend the castle, having the time of her life in playing the grande dame. Eventually she meets in a daring emissary from the ship of Jones a former lover and shares his escape from the troops. There are also other amusing characterizations, such as there always should be in true comedy, and these appear in the castle kitchen, notably an unnamed lady of the company who has charge of the servants and supplies her full share of the fun, and a stupid scullion, a tall gawk, who will get a laugh whenever he is in the screen action. The story in general is bright and pleasing to the eye, a good number to book.

"Whose Baby" holds up its end as a farce—it even has a story to tell, that of a young couple secretly married long enough to have a baby "more than a year old," which they dare not acknowledge. There is plot enough to supply a high comedy, but it soon becomes submerged in the swift farce, too swift at times—one cannot follow the lines of interest—but rich with material. It is a good farce, well calculated to maintain the Keystone reputation.

"The Road Between"

Marian Swayne Featured in Five-Reel Comedy-Drama Produced by Erbograph Company for Art Dramas Program.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE value to the exhibitor of "The Road Between," a five-reel comedy-drama produced by the Erbograph Company for release on the Art Dramas program, can be measured only by how an exhibitor's audience feels toward Marian Swayne, the featured lady. Take Miss Swayne and her personality out of the picture and you have left—just moving picture. The story is of a well-known and often-used class—the kind where the girl goes from rags to riches only to find that happiness is not measured in money. More than anything else the picture is a vehicle suited only to a player who must by her own appeal carry the piece.

The producers probably realized this, for close-ups of Miss Swayne occupy a generous percentage of the five reels. This abundance of close-ups retards the story action considerably, but the close-ups of Miss Swayne and her farm pets no doubt will appeal to some audiences more than would any story. This story is calculated to please those who most enjoy the works of Laura Jean Libby and Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth. It tells of a girl who is happy on the farm. Her stepmother is socially ambitious, and when her father invents a fertilizer that makes them rich, the family moves to the city. Here the father is caught in the net of a band of swindlers, but the family is saved from absolute ruin by the girl. They go back to the farm, and the girl is happy with her farmer sweetheart.

The picture was directed by Joseph Levering. In the cast with Miss Swayne are: Bradley Barker, Armand Cortez, Gladys Fairbanks, Frank Andrews and Kirke Brown.

"The Public Be Damned"

Food Speculation the Subject of Moving Picture in Which Charles Richman and Mary Fuller Are Featured—Produced by Public Rights Picture Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE author and director of "The Public Be Damned" is S. E. V. Taylor. Charles Richman and Mary Fuller are the principal members of the cast, and the picture was produced by the Public Rights Picture Corporation. As an expose of the criminality of food speculation it fulfills its mission. It is truthful in showing certain conditions of which most of us are fully aware, and it is well produced and excellently acted. The propaganda is held together by a love story of slender material, and of humorous incident there is not a trace.

After showing the fields and the warehouses of the United States and how the farmers' toil upon the one fills to overflowing the other, the story relates the struggle made by a determined woman, the wife of a farmer, to overthrow the food trust. The head of the speculators is a former suitor of Marion Fernley, the militant heroine. He is also a member of a fashionable church and is ready to throw the poor people in the neighborhood a few crumbs in the way of free meals, so long as he is permitted to rob those who have the money to pay the high prices set by his trust. Politics and the state government play important parts in the fight between Mary and John Black, but Mary wins, and Black is forced to see the light. He does not marry Mary, however. She remains true to her husband in spite of his breaking up a farmers' combine to get just prices for their products, and they both go back to the old farm.

"The Public Be Damned" is an attempt to capitalize public interest in a vital subject now very much alive, and will probably meet the usual fate of such attempts. People have sufficient practical demonstration outside the theater and do not need an object lesson on the evils shown on the screen. Outside of its expose, the picture is only mildly entertaining.

Mary Fuller plays Marion Fuller with feeling and earnestness, and Charles Richman makes the most of his opportunities as John Black. Chester Barnett as Robert Merritt, Joe Smiley as Bill Garvin, and Russell Bassett as David Higgins are three members of the cast that deserve special commendation.

"The Masked Heart"

William Russell and Francelia Billington Appear to Advantage in Five-part American Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

QUITE the pleasantest sight in this five-part production from the American studios is pretty Francelia Billington, who dresses and acts the part of the young girl Katherine in "The Masked Heart" delightfully. William Russell in the role of a young man who barely escapes the meshes of a vampire's net has had better opportunities; and of the story we can only say that it follows the old, unwholesome theme of vampireism in a reduced degree. The production is made attractive by careful direction on the part of Edward Sloman.

Scene from "The Masked Heart" (American).

The story treats of the manner in which the beautiful wife of a wealthy man lures a young man at a masked ball, leaves him in the taxicab in which he has accompanied her to a certain hotel and mysteriously spirits herself away to her own home, leaving no clue which he can follow when he comes to return her handkerchief.

Later, by an invitation extended by the woman's husband through a friend he becomes unexpectedly a guest at her home, and in trying to save her from the suspicion and wrath of her husband he enters the room of her husband's daughter, who has already retired, and while the father pounds on the door for admittance gains the girl's willing promise to marry him on the morrow. An effort on the part of the girl's stepmother to "put between" the youthful pair after the death of the father brings about the climax where the young wife, believing her husband faithless, is about to sail for a foreign country, when he discovers the truth and follows her.

"The Yellow Umbrella"

Little Mary McAllister Does Real Acting in the Latest Number of "Do Children Count?" Series.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

LITTLE Mary McAlister considerably enhances her reputation as one of the foremost child actresses of the screen by her performance in "The Yellow Umbrella," a two-reel number in the "Do Children Count?" series. Little Mary differs from most child actresses in that she does more than simply walk through the picture; she really acts. The precocity of her acting is uncanny. She wears clothes appropriate for older persons, and she wears them as an older person would.

Scene from "The Yellow Umbrella" (Essanay).

In this picture she acts as the go-between in reconciling her aunt and Jeremiah Crozier, who quarreled with her aunt about the Civil War. Jeremiah carries a yellow umbrella as a symbol of his hatred of all women. Little Mary visits him, wins his heart, gets from him a packet of letters which her aunt returned to him, and substitutes the packet for his letters that were returned to her aunt. In this way she brings about their reconciliation.

There is always something appealing about the situation of a little child reconciling an old couple. This situation is so old that one sometimes feels that if a picture contains it it cannot be a good picture. But this picture is different. It does not depend for its outcome simply upon the childlike character of little Mary. It depends upon what little Mary does. She is the whole picture.

"The Plow Woman"

Novel by Eleanor Gates Yields Up a Wealth of Action and Incident in Strong Screen Presentation.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SO intense in its interest and crowded with action, in the latter reels, is this picturization of "The Plow Woman" that the observer wishes it might have been extended beyond the five-reel allotment.

It contains any amount of thrilling action—a fire, a violent storm, Indian raids, a saloon brawl and an averted murder—but it has also a basic idea that is powerful and appealing. In her novel Eleanor Gates depicted the heroism and unselfishness of the frontier woman, to whom this country owes a debt of lasting gratitude. In the screen presentation Mary MacLaren plays the part of the heroic plow woman, and she makes it stand out in a memorable way. In spite of the clash of tragic and semi-tragic forces continually at work in the story, the plow woman herself dominates the action and makes chief claim upon the sympathies. There is perhaps too much exciting action at times, giving a sort of jerkiness to the development. But the director, Charles Swickard, made a strong effort to include everything, and succeeds admirably in the limited space of five reels. The theme itself would have justified a longer production.

Scene from "The Plow Woman" (Butterfly).

The scene of the story is the Dakota plains in the early days, and the settings and locations give a correct atmosphere to the story. H. C. De More handles forcefully the part of the dour Scotchman, Andy MacTavish, and L. Shumway is pleasing as the hero. Others in the cast are Marie Hazelton, Kingsley Benedict, Hector V. Sarno, Eddie Polo, Clara Horton, George Hupp and Tommy Burns.

"The Plow Woman" is a photoplay plus. It contains a lot of the old reliable dramatic action, but has in addition a theme of epochal significance.

"The Woman in White" (Pathe-Thanhouser).

The Pathe exchange desires to announce that owing to an error the Thanhouser-made Gold Rooster play, "The Woman in White," was advertised as being in five parts, whereas the picture was actually released in six parts.

"The Woman in White" has been characterized by the reviewers and exhibitors seeing it as a picture conspicuous for its merit. Florence La Badie in a dual role has in it an opportunity for serious emotional acting which ordinary pictures fail to give. It is predicted that "The Woman in White" will do a large business.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

Bluebird Photoplays Corporation

FIRES OF REBELLION, July 2.—This five-reel photoplay, starring Dorothy Phillips, is another story of a girl from a small town braving the dangers of a great city. It is fairly truthful, but rather conventional, and is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE SIREN, June 23.—A five-reel melodrama, whose chief box office attraction is that there is always something doing in it. Its most exciting group of incidents is the escape of a convict. It is poorly written in that the villainess is made the big character, which throws the heart interest overboard. It is poorly acted. It is [illegible] that the characters now and then are permitted to [illegible] awkward conventionalities. It is so poorly [illegible] some of the scenes that faces are almost indistinguishable. [illegible] subtitles bridge across the gap in the action is bully and can be [illegible] up. The subtitle is printed on a still of the scene that is to follow. This is fine when the action is up or down the [illegible] is to the right or left, the effect is the same as though the action had been stopped and then given a push. Now and then it is very good and now and then it is quite disconcerting.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

THE YELLOW UMBRELLA (Essanay), [illegible].—A [illegible] of the "Do Children Count?" series. Jeremiah carries a yellow umbrella as a symbol of his hatred of all women. He quarreled with Dot Hazleton's aunt about the Civil War. Dot reconciles the old couple by a clever scheme. Little Mary McAlister plays Dot. This is an interesting picture about a child that will entertain both children and adults.

THE MAN WHO WAS AFRAID (Essanay), July 2.—[illegible] a stirring theme and compelling interest. It treats of the transformation of a young man, who has been a slacker in the recent trouble with Mexico. Through the influence of the girl he [illegible] and a hero. Bryant Washburn plays this part, and is well supported by Ernest Maupin, Margaret Watts and Frankie Raymond. Fred E. Wright has directed the production ably. An extended review is given on another page in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

TOOTSIE, June 11.—A Drew comedy. Tootsie is a pet dog. Mrs Drew pampers him so much that she drives her husband to seek a [illegible]less separation. Then she asks her mother's advice on how to get [illegible] back. Mother says, "Treat him like a dog." She treats him as she does Tootsie, and he comes right back. Tootsie gives a party for all her dog friends and gets so sick that she has to go to a sanitarium. An amusing one-reel comedy.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 34 (Gaumont), June 26.—The subjects covered in this issue are Naples, the largest city of Italy, and Buenos Aires, the largest city of South America and capital of Argentina. These cities have been carefully covered in this film which will be found of unusual interest.

REEL LIFE NO. 61 (Gaumont), June 28.—An interesting number of the series showing the marketing of raw tobacco, a study of the life of a bee, some inventions as they looked in the beginning, and the launching of a life boat.

JERRY'S HOPELESS TANGLE (Cub), June 28.—The plot of this number centers about Jerry's sorry plight in trying to get something to eat. In so doing he gets mixed up with policemen and various other individuals, and, of course, gets the worst of it. Only fairly amusing.

THE MASKED HEART (American), July 2.—A five-part drama featuring William Russell with pretty Francelia Billington playing opposite him. The story is of the ordinary sort, not particularly elevating nor yet harmful to any degree. It has, however, been well directed and boasts a competent cast. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS (Signal), July 2.—"The Road Wrecker" is the title of this number in which Burke and his gang cut the semaphore wires and cause a collision between a K. & W. freight train and the Eastern Limited. The detail of the episode is not quite as thrilling as usual, but is, nevertheless, interesting. The train wreck is quite spectacular.

WHEN LULA DANCED THE HULA (La Salle), July 10.—This is a mediocre sort of a comedy in which the wife or sweetheart of a man who is enamored of a Hawaiian dancer takes the place of the dancer [illegible]. There is not much entertainment in this picture.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

COMMUTING (Klever), June 18.—A Victor Moore comedy which will be found fairly amusing to a certain class of commuters. The commuter in the picture takes his family to a bungalow in the country and forgets to gauge the distance between the bungalow and the depot or to discover beforehand that he has only one train a day to depend on to get to business. Of course he misses his train the first morning. Some fun is also extracted from his attempt to get home from the village [illegible].

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

TRAINING POLICE HORSES (International), July 1.—An interesting bit of educational on the same reel with a Happy Holligan cartoon, "The Great Offensive." The number is an excellent one.

THE FATAL RING (Astra), July 8.—The opening number of the latest Pathe serial featuring Pearl White is called "The Violet Diamond." The release is in three reels and promises well for the success of the serial. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE NEGLECTED WIFE (Balboa), July 15.—Number ten of the serial, "The Neglected Wife," in which Ruth Roland is appearing, is called "A Veiled Intrigue," and is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

IT HAPPENED TO ADELE (Thanhouser), July 15.—Gladys Leslie is the star of this five-reel comedy drama written by Agnes C. Johnson. The story deals with the struggle of an orphan girl and is loosely made. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

SWEDEN WATERWAYS (Sveafilms), July 15.—An unusual and beautiful scenic taken in Sweden. The other half of the reel is occupied by views of Placer Gold Mining in California.

STOP! LUKE! LISTEN! (Rolin), July 15.—A one-reel Lonesome Luke knockabout farce. The expert method of the star and his support makes the picture amusing. It is up to standard for this brand.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 78 (Universal), June 27.—Military parade in Pittsburgh, Canadian kilties recruiting in Maine, portrait study of Lord Northcliffe, Italian Mission honoring Garibaldi and many other interesting subjects are included in this number.

WITH PERSHING IN FRANCE (Animated Weekly Special), June 29.—This extra number of the Animated Weekly is devoted entirely to the arrival of General Pershing and his staff in France. It contains about 650 feet and gives a splendid idea of the enthusiasm aroused by the arrival of American forces there. Close-ups of big military men and the Paris crowds are shown.

THE PLOW WOMAN (Butterfly), July 2.—A strong five-reel offering, from a novel by Eleanor Gates, featuring Mary MacLaren as a pioneer woman of the early days in Dakota. The story is full of exciting incidents of a tragic and semi-tragic type, and the theme one that might have been given a greater footage. It keeps close to the realities and deals with the stern happenings of the time depicted in a convincing way. The entire cast is capable and includes H. C. de More, Marie Hazelton, L. C. Shumway, Kingsley Benedict, Hector V. Sarno, Eddie Polo, Clara Horton and George Hupp.

KICKED OUT (Victor), Week of July 9.—A two-reel comedy number, by Harry Wulze, featuring Carter De Haven and others. The hero is a young newspaper reporter who procures an interview with a crusty old millionaire after many futile attempts, thereby winning the editor's daughter. Another photograph, accidentally taken, of the reporter and the editor's wife, almost costs him the job and the girl, but all ends well. This is breezy in development and has many laughable situations. It is much better than the average comedy offering.

THE PAPERHANGER'S REVENGE (Victor), Week of July 9.—A comedy number, by W. Warren, featuring Ralph McComas and others. This concerns a young husband who goes to paper the new home with which he intends to surprise the wife. The latter follows and finds him changing his trousers after making a crude effort to paper the rooms. The humor of this is too obvious and has a vulgar tendency. It falls below the average in its general appeal.

DOUBLE SURPRISE (Bison), Week of July 9.—A two-reel Western subject, by George E. Marshall, featuring Neal Hart and George Berrell as partners. The former is sheriff and when suspicion falls on the old man he brings him in, resigns his office and then proceeds to rescue him from the law. George Berrell, who has proven his reliability in various similar roles, is particularly sympathetic and pleasing in the closing scenes of this number. Others in the cast are Joe Rickson and Janet Eastman. Stronger than the average number of the type.

THE ODD TRICK (Imp), Week of July 9.—Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley are joint anthors of this number, which features Agnes Vernon, Clyde Benson, Charles Mailes and Lee Hill. The hero finds a pretty girl in the park, beset by a member of a gang of crooks. He rescues her and later rounds up the gang. The action in this number is good, but the plot is not exceptional. The cast does pleasing work.

THE WARNING (Universal Special), Rel. Week of July 9.—This is the third installment of the new serial, "The Gray Ghost." This episode shows the unsuccessful attempt of The Gray Ghost to get Hildreth at the theater where Morn Light is a musical comedy star. The stage scenes are very antique. Musical comedy has not been staged as shown in years. With this installment the mystery becomes deeper than ever.

MEET MY WIFE (Victor), Week of July 9.—A good ranch comedy, by George Marshall, featuring Neal Hart and Mignon Anderson. The girl comes to a Western town and makes friends with the cowboys, who give her money, not knowing she is a crook. Later the hotel clerk, who has been reading about young Lochinvar, carries her off and marries her. There is some pleasing comedy in this, and it is better than the average.

THREE WOMEN OF FRANCE (Rex), Week of July 9.—A two-reel subject, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Irene Hunt, Adelaide Woods, Virginia Lee, Richard Ryan and Jack Mulhall. This is a story of the present war, some real scenes from the front being used at the beginning. The heroine is a girl of the French underworld, now a Red Cross nurse. She sacrifices her love for a dying soldier in order to bring back his wife to him. The atmosphere is pleasing throughout The plot construction is not entirely smooth, but clears up as the story progresses. This has consderable strength.

MINDING THE BABY (Nestor), Week of July 9.—An unusually good comedy number, by Frederick A. Palmer, featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and two attractive babies, one white and one black. The efforts of the father and the janitor to take care of the white child are funny and the exchange which takes place later is extremely laughable. This will go big with any audience and has some good human interest in it.

A LIMB OF SATAN (Gold Seal), Week of July 9.—A three-reel subject, by Elizabeth Mahoney, featuring Ruth Stonehouse as an orphan girl who has been adopted three times and returned with thanks." The character is an enteratining one and the story is followed with interest. The girl runs away from the orphanage finally with an Italian musician. Later she steals money to aid a blind sculptor, but finally emerges from her troubles happily. The juvenile court scenes are full of interest. Martha Maddox, J. Webster Dill, Chester Bennett, Wadsworth Harris and Helen Wright are also in the cast.

KITCHENELLA (Joker), Week of July 9.—A travesty on "Cinderella," by C. B. Hoadley. Gale Henry plays the leading role and gets a number of laughs out of the burlesque situations. She attends a ball, wearing the missing slippers, and numerous events of the knockabout type follow. Some of the scenes are slightly jumbled, but there are numerous funny moments.

HEART AND FLOUR (L-KO), Week of July 9.—This is a rural slapstick comedy in two reels. The grocer boy and the butcher boy both love the boss's daughter. Nearly all the contents of the shop are thrown at someone in the two reels. This picture is full of action.

Triangle Film Corporation.

HER EXCELLENCY, THE GOVERNOR (Triangle).—A high comedy of American political life, showing the dominance of clean ideals over old political methods, Wilfred Lucas and Ella Millar in the leading roles, both interpreting strong characters.

BORROWED PLUMAGE (Triangle).—A spirited comedy of adventure in the times of Paul Jones, with abundant opportunity for Miss Bessie Barriscale and other bright actors.

WHOSE BABY? (Keystone).—A lively farce with a story, in the well-known Keystone style and up to the mark.

World Pictures.

THE BRAND OF SATAN (Peerless), July 9.—Montagu Love plays a dual personality role with skill in this five-reel melodrama of Paris and its underworld. The story is full or crime. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

MOTHERHOOD (Minerva Motion Picture Company), July.—This is a seven-reel educational number especially suited for exhibition before select audiences, but not for general use in theaters. Its mission is to teach prospective mothers how to care for themselves previous to the birth of a child, and also how to care for the baby after it is born. It also touches interestingly on the feeble minded, and discusses the advisability of vaccination. A full review will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of our issue of July 21.

THE PUBLIC BE DAMNED (Public Rights Picture Corporation), June.—The present agitation over the food question is the foundation for this propoganda picture. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

"It Happened to Adele" Is Pathe's Leader

Also for Week of July 15 Are "Neglected Wife" and "Fatal Ring" Serials.

GLADYS LESLIE, "the girl with the million dollar smile," in her second Gold Rooster play, episodes of "The Neglected Wife" and "The Fatal Ring" serials, and a two-reel Lonesome Luke comedy are features for Pathe's program for the week of July 15, 1917.

"It Happened to Adele" is the title of the Gold Rooster play starring Miss Leslie. It is produced by Thanhouser under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke, and written by Agnes C. Johnston, author of "The Shine Girl," "Her New York" and other hits. The cast includes Peggey Burke, Carey Hastings, Charlie Emerson, Justus Barnes, Clarine Seymour and Wayne Arey.

Pearl White stars in "The Crushing Wall," the second episode of "The Fatal Ring." Thrill follows thrill in this chapter.

"A Veiled Intrigue" is the title of the tenth episode of "The Neglected Wife" serial in which Ruth Roland is the star. This is one of the strongest chapters yet in a serial with the success of which hot weather is not interfering in the least.

Lonesome Luke appears in "Stop! Luke! Listen." a two-reel comedy produced by Rolin and directed by Hal Roach. It is declared to be a "thirty-minute laugh," with Harold Lloyd supported by Harry Pollard, Bebe Daniels and Bud Jameyson.

A Pathe scenic and education split reel entitled "Swede Waterways" and "Placer Goldmining," an International cartoon and scenic split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 58 and No. 59 complete the program.

Crane Wilbur on Art Dramas

David Horsley Has Ready Several Five-Reel Subjects Directed by Lorimer Johnson.

THE Crane Wilbur features, several of which are already completed, will be placed on Art Dramas program by David Horsley in the near future. The initial pictures of the series are entitled "Eye of Envy," "Third Generation" and "Unto the End." These were directed by Lorimer Johnson, a producer of comprehensive experience. The Crane Wilbur features are all of five-reel length. It is also announced that a series of Western dramas starring this player is in preparation. These will be of a new sort.

Mr. Wilbur has been with Mr. Horsley for several years, during which time his pictures were released through Mutual Among his latest subjects are "The Morals of Men," "The Painted Lie," "The King of Make-Believe," "The Love Liar," "A Law Unto Himself," "Wasted Years" and "The Conscience of John David."

Before joining Horsley, Wilbur was with Lubin, where he starred in "The Road of Strife" and other productions. With Pathe he was leading man in "The Perils of Pauline" and other serials.

Previous to entering photoplay work the player had considerable stage experience. For seven years he toured with Mrs. Fiske. His first stage appearance was at the age of fifteen, and he has been busy ever since. He is now twenty-eight years old

NEW L-KO'S ON THE WAY.

Director General J. G. Blystone has lately completed, under the active supervision of his directors, several L-Ko's worked out along novel lines. The requirements of high-speed comedies continually tax the ingenuity of directors in furnishing something new in the way of laugh producers, but Mr. Blystone seems to have reduced matters to a science.

Dick Smith has finished "The Sign of the Cucumber," which will present Bob McKenzie in a dual role, supported by Eva Novak, Chester Ryckman and a bunch of L-Ko girls. Vin Moore's latest effort is called "Blackboard and Blackmail," a feature that deals in the troubles of Phil Dunham and Myrtle Sterling and L. Hutton while in pursuit of an education. "Surf Scandal" is a Noel Smith creation, full of thrills and speedy comedy sensations. The comedians are under and above the waters of the Pacific Ocean while the fun is proceeding, special excitement being created by a rock-blast that required two hundred pounds of dynamite to accomplish. Dan Russell, Gladys Varden and Eunice Murdock are featured in "Surf Scandal."

"THE SUBMARINE EYE" SUCCEEDING.

"The Submarine Eye" has met with considerable success in Canada, so much so that the bookings in Montreal and Toronto have been extended for an additional week in each city. There has been such a great demand for the picture that A. J. Small, manager of the Canadian circuit, bought the picture for Hamilton and will exhibit it at the Grand opera house in that city.

"The Submarine Eye" is enjoying the same popularity in Ohio, and the manager of the Grand opera house, Columbus, has booked a second week. The Studebaker theater, Chicago, has also extended its run.

Very little territory remains to be disposed of and the Williamson brothers are now devoting their attention to their next picture, which will be released early in 1918.

State Rights Department

Conducted by BEN H. GRIMM

Sherman Pictures Corporation Formed

Harry A. Sherman, Formerly of Sherman-Elliott, Heads New State Rights Concern.

AN important moving picture combination came into existence a few days ago when a group of men, headed by Harry A. Sherman, formed a company which will be known as the Sherman Pictures Corporation. This enterprising film exploiter was formerly the head of the Sherman-Elliott Company, of Minneapolis, and is considered one of the big men in the state rights field.

Harry A. Sherman.

Mr. Sherman has taken over the Popular Pictures Corporation, of 218 West Forty-Second street, New York, the Sun Photoplay Company, and the building [illegible] occupied by these two organizations. After the building has been thoroughly renovated and altered to suit his requirements it will be known as the Sherman Pictures Building.

The new combine will be conducted under the title of Sherman Pictures Corporation. Its destinies will be guided by Sherman as president. Associated with him are: Harry P. Williams, of Pittsburgh, who owns and operates "The Crisis" in Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia, and "The Deemster" in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; A. J. Bimberg, of New York, formerly treasures of the Popular Pictures Corporation, now the treasurer of the Sherman Pictures Corporation; Milton M. Goldsmith of New York, of the law firm of Goldsmith & Rosenthal; Colonel Fred Levy, the theatrical man of Louisville, Ky., and owner of "Joan the Woman," "The Crisis," "On Trial" and other big features for his territory, which includes Indiana, Kentucky and the seven Southern states, and Oscar Lynch, of the Otis Lithographing Company.

The company is reported to be sufficiently capitalized to handle productions of the largest size, and this, coupled with its affiliations, gives every promise that the new combine will be one of the strongest picture releasing corporations handling state rights pictures exclusively. The object of the corporation is to assure producers a ready market and a cash profit for their productions instead of monthly statements and percentage arrangements.

In addition to the general object, as above stated, the company will do business along these lines:

1. Purchase outright the world's rights for good state rights productions.

2. Exploit the world's rights for state rights productions for the manufacturer, assuming all the expense of marketing and exploitation.

3. Advance any responsible producer the cash to make or complete a satisfactory production.

The Sherman Pictures Corporation will exercise its option in the next few days for several productions, announcements of which will soon be made.

Mr. Sherman is known for his exploitation of such pictures as "The Birth of a Nation," "Ramona" and "The Crisis."

"The important thing to be remembered in this business, as I look at it," Mr. Sherman says, "is that a good name is of greater importance as an asset than anything else. I have, therefore, made it my business to handle only those productions to which I am willing to attach my name."

WOMAN GIVES VIEWS ON FOREIGN FUTURE.

The rapidity with which Frank Hall is disposing of the foreign rights to "The Bar Sinister" and "Her Fighting Chance" is causing interesting speculation as to the immediate future of the foreign market. Miss Edna Williams, whose activities in disposing of film outside of the United States have made her a prominent figure in the industry for several years and through whose efforts much of the foreign territory for Frank Hall's productions has been disposed of, considers New York the legitimate center for all film markets of the World. According to Miss Williams, the close of the war will see New York in the position formerly held by London as the central distributing point. Many buyers are now doing business through New York who bought only in London before the war, and it is natural that, their connections once made, they will continue to do so. Scandinavian buyers, for instance, now deal direct and have been among the most active purchasers of film [illegible].

The limited amount of producing now done outside of America has made our pictures more popular than ever, and it is doubtful whether other countries will be able to compete with us for a long time to come. The only possible exception in this regard is Italy, where the public have been educated to accept the artistic and the beautiful in pictures irrespective of the story value and still prefer extra footage with long, drawn-out scenes showing attractive backgrounds, in place of our closely-cut scenes full of action.

Miss Williams sees a great future for American films in Russia, which she expects to see develop rapidy into a picture-loving country as soon as its millions are given an opportunity to become acquainted with the fascination of the photodrama. Russia alone has enough prospective picture fans to keep all the American producers busy making productions for that country.

MESSER AND SUMNER FORM NEWARK FIRM.

A. N. Messer and R. S. Sumner, of Newark, N. J., have formed a partnership for the purpose of buying New Jersey rights on big productions. Their first big purchase is the Frank Hall picture, "Her Fighting Chance," which had its premiere during the week of June 25 at the Strand theater, Newark. Negotiations are pending for the early purchase of other high class features, and it is the intention of the new concern to buy pictures with the necessary "punch" to satisfy both the exhibitor and the patron.

A. N. Messer, of the firm, is a former exhibitor, having owned and managed the Ampere theater, East Orange. He has had considerable business experience, and is exceedingly optimistic concerning the future of the moving picture industry. Mr. Sumner is also an experienced film man. He formerly handled the films of the Educational Films Corporation of America, and more recently has been booking state rights features. The concern has opened offices in Proctor's Palace Theater building, 116 Market street, where bookings are now being taken.

"THE GENIUS" KING BEE'S SEVENTH.

Billy West becomes an inventor in "The Genius," King-Bee Films Corporation's seventh Billy West two-reel comedy, to be produced for state rights distribution. Billy's labors in the perfection of a device for mitigating the submarine terror do not engross the whole of his time, for in the course of his inventing he has time for many matrimonial adventures and misadventures.

Some of the most comical situations imaginable have been brought to the screen in "The Genius," it is said, and the number is expected to even eclipse some of the former releases. The story of the film was conceived by Louis Burstein, president and general manager of the King Bee Films Corporation.

"The Genius" will be released on King Bee's schedule in August. Besides the chief funmaker, the cast includes Babe Hardy, Leo White, Bud Ross and others.

KLOPOT GETS "DEEMSTER" FOR WEST.

Charles Klopot, of San Francisco, who has been away from that city for several months, returned a short time ago and announced that he had purchased the rights to "The Deemster" for California, Nevada and Arizona, which he will offer through the Exclusive Film Attractions. Shortly after his return to San Francisco he left for Los Angeles to arrange for bookings there.

"Redemption" Selling Fast

One Purchaser Reported To Have Sold Part of Territory and Arranged for Bookings Totalling More Than Cost.

AN INDICATION of the worth of Julius Steger's production "Redemption," may be found in the fact that Nathan Hirsch, who purchased the New York and Northern New Jersey rights, sold a part of the territory outright and contracted for a sufficient number of bookings of the film to completely cover the cost of the picture for his entire territory. Thus, it is reported, Mr. Hirsch, head of the Civilization-Pioneer Film Company, assured his profits before even releasing in the territory.

"Redemption," which features Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, is said to be one of the quickest selling state right propositions ever offered to the buyer. Its run at the Cohan theater, where it was intended to stay two weeks, and remained five, combined with the prosperity it is enjoying in the many other houses where it is now playing, in spite of the weather conditions, has brought this picture forcibly to the attention of the state rights buyers. David Bernstein, at 1493 Broadway, New York, who is handling the sale of "Redemption," is meeting with unusual success in disposing of the rights to the picture.,

Scene from "Redemption" (Steger).

The picture is now being shown prices ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar at Keith's Alhambra theater, New York, and various other theaters in and around New York, including Teller's Shubert, Brooklyn; Proctor's theater and Roof Garden, Newark; the Shubert theater, Newark, and Colonial theater, Chicago. Everywhere it is playing to big business, showing that its run at the Cohan was due solely to the attraction. It will open at the Forest theater, Philadelphia, shortly.

Recent purchasers of the film are Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who purchased the New England rights; Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, who bought the rights for Illinois, and Stanley V. Mastbaum, who bought the rights for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

OWL FEATURES SECURES "ONE LAW FOR BOTH."

Negotiations have been concluded between the Owl Features Company, of Chicago, and the Ivan Film Productions, under the terms of an agreement by which the Owl Features Company becomes exclusive distributor of the Ivan feature, "One Law for Both," in Illinois and Southern Wisconsin. Mr. Phil Lewis, who came from Chicago especially to consummate this deal, remarked that in his opinion "One Law for Both" was one of the most remarkable box office attractions he had ever seen. His visits to the various theaters in New York City, at which twelve prints are working every day, demonstrated to him the fact that this picture had created a box office demand beyond his fondest expectations.

HALL LEASES ATLANTIC CITY THEATER.

The Criterion theater, one of the leading photoplay houses of Atlantic City, N. J., has been leased for the summer by Frank Hall, the prominent New Jersey exhibitor and state rights operator, who recently widened the scope of his activities by purchasing outright from Edgar Lewis his latest production, "The Bar Sinister."

Mr. Hall opened the seashore theater on Saturday night, June 23, with "The Whip" as the chief attraction. This will be followed by "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "The Bar Sinister," "On Trial," "Joan the Woman," "Civilization," "The Garden of Allah" and "Beware of Strangers," to all of which Mr. Hall controls the New Jersey rights. The productions are distributed in that territory through the Civilization Film Corporation, with executive offices in Newark.

Junk Paper Harms Business

Nat H. Spitzer Contends Unmounted Paper Is Preferable to and More Practicable Than Mounted.

"WHAT'S the paper like?" is one of the first questions the up-to-date state rights buyer asks of the man who wants him to take his pictures, according to Nat H. Spitzer, vice-president and general manager of King Bee Films Corporation. Mr. Spitzer says that the question is the same whether a man has for sale a $100,000 production with a big star or a comedy.

"The state rights buyer knows that the measure of the impression made by the paper on an exhibitor is the measure of the picture's pulling power—or at any rate largely so," says Mr. Spitzer. "It is chiefly the paper that gets an audience together for the first time.

"Does the exhibitor attach the same absolute and relative importance to the paper as the state rights buyer? Most persons would say, off-hand, that he does; but I am of a contrary opinion. The exhibitor only too frequently allows himself to be misled in this important matter. He slurs over the question of the paper. He does not put out fresh, bright paper with every picture he books, and it is in every way practicable for him to do so. Undoubtedly mounted paper—for that is where the trouble originates—is not essential; it is not even advisable. It gets dirtier and dirtier with each booking. Dirty paper prejudices a picture because it repels the public. Mounted paper is a great convenience if it is kept clean and shown clean; but unfortunately it is rarely clean except on first runs.

"His duty to the public should oblige the exhibitor to assure that the paper is always clean and fresh and has not before been publicly exhibited. He should exert as much care in the selection of his paper as of his films and the interior equipment of his theater. Small town exhibitors are peculiarly careless in this respect, and it is to them I am mainly addressing this warning.

"I think the use of mounted paper should be discouraged if it is mistreated so as to unfavorably effect the attitude of the public towards the picture. In recent years the paper for motion pictures has become artistic as well as striking, and it seems to me a pity that it should so frequently be shown in a dirty and dilapidated state. It is bad business for the picture."

FORD AND CUNARD IN STATE RIGHTER.

There are no signs or evidences of Summer inactivity around the offices of the Renowned Pictures Corporation at 1600 Broadway. The Renowned is one of the newest picture corporations operating in state rights features.

The two features now being handled by Renowned "Should She Obey?" and "In Treason's Grasp," have proved to be great successes, and territories are selling fast for both. The first of these, "Should She Obey?", was produced under the personal supervision of Lieutenant-Governor Barret O'Hara of Illinois, whose fame as a fighter for reforms is widespread. This picture, sensational as it is, has been pronounced by statesmen and public persons to be a blow at the divorce evil.

Scene from "In Treason's Grasp" (Renowned).

The fact that Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are the stars of "In Treason's Grasp" and are offered for the first time to state rights buyers fully accounts for its being eagerly snapped up.

FIRST CUMMINGS PICTURE "MAN TO MAN."

The title for the first release of Irving Cummings Pictures, Inc., will bear the name of "Man To Man," which is directly in compliance with the story. The release of the Cummings company will be handled by Superlative Pictures Corporation.

"Alma, Where Do You Live?" Ready

Newfields Producing Company Visualizes Famous Play With Ruth MacTammany as Star.

ALMA, Where Do You Live?" is now ready for the state rights market, according to Ralph W. Horne, president of the Newfields Producing Corporation, Woolworth Building, New York. The star of the new producing organization is Ruth MacTammany, a young American grand opera singer, who had many war-time adventures before she was able to get back to America from her studies in Italy. She plays the part of the delightful "Alma," and was directed in it by Hal Clarendon. Few stage plays have made more of a hit than "Alma."

Mr. Horne states the policy of his organization as follows: "We are in the market to make clean pictures of the highest type. For our initial presentation under our own trade-mark we selected 'Alma, Where Do You Live?' because the brilliance of the original plot seemed to offer excellent picture opportunities. As a play 'Alma' was certainly famous and the way in which we have elaborated the plot has made a wholesome, up-to-date love story, a romance with lots of thrills. No expense has been spared in the making of the film, because we feel that five or six good productions a year are better than a dozen hastily constructed films. We want our name to stand for satisfaction to the state rights buyer, the exhibior and the public.

Scene from "Alma, Where Do You Live?" (Newfields).

"Our publicity campaign gives every needed help to the exhibitor. Lithographs include a twenty-four sheet, sixes, threes and ones; heralds, slides and lobby display are all excellent. Attractive advertising cuts for local use will help to put the picture over, while the universal popularity of the play and the fame of the 'Alma, Sweet Alma, Where Do You Live?' song should insure attention from the public."

"THE PUBLIC BE DAMNED" A SUCCESS.

"The Public Be Damned," the anti-Food Trust photoplay produced by the Public Rights Film Corporation, which was seen by the public for the first time at the Strand Theater, New York, during the week of June 24, has proven a sensational success, according to announcements from the offices of the corporation. Following the endorsements which the New York newspapers accorded the drama, it was offered for sale on the state rights basis and is being rapidly disposed of by the producers.

Timeliness is the keynote of the success of "The Public Be Damned," and it was this element that struck each of the dramatic critics of the Metropolitan dailies. One critic declared the production to be one of "immediate interest, as it deals with the present food situation and aims to show its causes and to point a remedy." Another states that the picture is a "sound, strong melodrama, but Mr. Hoover's endorsement leads one to believe that there is fact as well as fiction in it."

Charles Richman and Mary Fuller, who appear in the principal roles of the drama proper, which is preceded by views of Herbert C. Hoover, Food Administrator, in his office, and by excerpts from Mr. Hoover's speeches, received warm praise for their part in the production. Mr Richman is seen as John Black, the head of a predatory Food Trust, and Miss Fuller appears as the inspired girl who fights the Trust to a finish.

"GARDEN OF ALLAH" BIG HIT IN PITTSBURGH.

It is reported that "The Garden of Allah" broke attendance records during its three weeks' run at the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh. Two features that helped the picture considerably during its run were the music score and the stage setting, both of which were made under the personal supervision of William Moore Patch, managing director of the Pitt theater.

"The Garden of Allah" is succeeded at the Pitt by "The Bar Sinister."

"IVAN THE TERRIBLE" STRIKES TIMELY MARKET.

The Export and Import Film Company reports a whilrwind of activity on their six-reel production of Russian life, "Ivan the Terrible." While the rough set of titles were still in the film it was demanded for exhibition by state rights buyers desiring options. Probably due to the interest in Russian affairs that is shown through the country at the present time, almost every territory in the United States now has a bid in for "Ivan the Terrible."

The production will carry with it a striking display, dwelling on the political significance of the story as well as its intense dramatic value. In making the titles for "Ivan the Terrible" great care was taken to lay stress on the historic effect of such rulers as Ivan IV, it being pointed out that in his time he was in the same absolute power as his descendent, Nicholas Romanoff. The picture sounds the keynote of the day in indicating that the present World War will in future insure civilization against governmental tyranny of the type represented by such rulers as Ivan. The afterword of the production [illegible] will fulfill the prayer of "the Silent Man of the White House."

"THE BARRIER" DRAWING BIG BUSINESS.

Reports are being received by the Lewis J. Selznick offices from all parts of the country tending to prove that Rex Beach's feature film, "The Barrier," is one of the biggest successes in the history of moving pictures. Norman E. Field, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Chicago, writes:

"'The Barrier' drew such good business that we held it over for a third week at the Colonial. It pleased more patrons that anything we have shown since 'The Birth of a Nation.' It is a great picture."

Sol. J. Berman, manager of the New York Exchange, upon his recent trip through the Middle West and Eastern Texas received similar reports from numerous exhibitors. At the Twelfth Street Theater, Kansas City, "The Barier" was booked for one week for its first run in that city and drew such business that it was held for a second week.

Similar reports have been received from the Pacific Coast, the Northwest and the Southeast, where "The Barier" has been playing the big houses to capacity business.

JACOBS LOOKING FOR SCRIPT.

Anxious to duplicate the success of "Her Fighting Chance," the James Oliver Curwood drama in which Jane Grey is starring, A H Jacobs, of A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., is reading scripts in search of a story for his next production. Mr. Jacobs is planning the production of a new special length picture to be started immediately, but is experiencing difficulty in finding a scenario in which the telling of the story does not call for the development of too many counter plots.

MUCH PUBLICITY FOR JAPANESE PICTURE.

Unusual publicity material has been devised for "The Land of the Rising Sun," the ten-episode "Film Trip to Japan," now being released on state rights basis by the America-Japan Pictures Company, 15 William street, New York. Throughout the advertising, everything has been carried out in a Japanese manner. The herald is made to resemble a Japanes play bill, printed only on one side, and is so novel that theater patrons will be sure to preserve it as a souvenir. The lithographs carry out the Japanese atmosphere, and are very unusual in design. Six sheets and threes are provided for the serial as a whole, and there is a different lithograph for each of the ten episodes.

Scene from "The Land of the Rising Sun" (Am.-Japan).

An unusual lobby display consists of a frame of transparencies—nine colored glass plates, illumined electrically at night and just as beautiful in the day time. In addition to the usual still pictures, there are scenes from the picture, photographically printed and hand colored in Japan. Scene cuts, advertising plates and individual press matter is available for each one of the ten episodes.

"The Lust of the Ages" Ready

Lillian Walker Star in Eight-Reel Picture Produced by Ogden Pictures Corporation.

WHOLE flocks of sheep and herds of goats, cattle and horses were used in some of the big scenes of "The Lust of the Ages," an eight-reel feature just completed by the recently-organized Ogden Pictures Corporation. Directed by Harry Revier, from Aaron Hoffman's original story, and with Lillian Walker in the leading role, with a big supporting cast, the picture was produced on a mammoth scale. Judging from reports of the private exhibitions of the picture, it is one which is said to be particularly well adapted to the state rights' field.

The herds of cattle and other animals were used in some of the scenes laid in the period before money was introduced into the world as a medium of exchange. The "age of barter," showing an ancient city of the Babylonian era, with primitive wells, water wheels, and city walls, is depicted in "The Lust of the Ages," and the theme of the story continues on down through the ages to the present day.

One of the spectacular scenes of the picture depicts the Temple of Mammon—ancient and modern version—with hundreds of men and women bowing down in worship before the dollar sign of the present day as they did before the figure of Mammon in ancient times.

The Ogden Pictures Corporation, which produced the picture in Utah, is composed of some of the most prominent business men in the West. Albert Scowcroft is president, Lester Park, general manager, and W. Fred Bossner secretary and treasurer. Headquarters are at Ogden, Utah.

NELSON LAUDS "THE CRISIS."

Edward Nelson, president of the Sherman-Elliott Company, of Minneapolis, while in Chicago recently conferring with William N. Selig, spoke enthusiastically concerning "The Crisis." "The drama has love interest, historical accuracy, and a strong appeal to patriotism," said Mr. Nelson. "Reports received from state rights buyers are all indicative that the picture is going big everywhere."

Exhibitors desiring to book "The Crisis" should apply to the following: Illinois, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago; Canada, Super-Feature, Ltd., Toronto; Mississippi, Louisiana and Tennessee, A. B. Cook, Jackson, Miss.; Michigan, Casino Features Film Co., Detroit; Missouri, New Grand Central Theater Company, St. Louis; New Jersey, Adler, Faulkner & Schaefer, Newark; Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina, Indiana and Kentucky, Big Feature Rights Corp., Louisville, Ky.; Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia and West Virginia, Masterpiece Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa.; New York State, Nathan A. Gros, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, N. Y.; California, Arizona and Nevada, P. Franklin, 107 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco; New England States, A. Rose, Boston, Mass.

According to Mr. Nelson, there is some territory remaining open for "The Crisis," and those interested should communicate immediately with him at 854 McKnight Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn. The territory which can be acquired includes Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming.

S-M COMPANY PRODUCING CANADIAN ARMY FILM.

Edwin Bower Hesser's story of the "American Legion" of the Canadian army, at present in the filming in Canada under the direction of Roamine Fielding, is rapidly nearing completion. With E. K. Lincoln in the stellar role the picture is being produced by the S-M Films Corporation of Philadelphia. The company has been in Canada for upwards of three weeks, working on the picture hand in hand with the Canadian military authorities.

Mr. Lincoln plays the role of a young American who enlists in the Canadian army. Romaine Fielding himself plays the villain, and the heroine's part is in the hands of Barbara Castleton. The company first went to Montreal, then to Valcartier and later to Quebec City. The players then proceeded to Toronto and are now about finishing their work at Camp Borden, Ontario, which is one of the finest of Canada's training camps. The training of soldiers in modern trench warfare, as it will be practised in France by the United States army, is shown in the film, and actual front line conditions are being duplicated in the battle scenes, which are being made with the assistance of officers returned from the French front.

The interiors are to be made in Philadelphia, where Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the S-M company, is arranging the sets at the Lubin studios.

UPDEGRAFT TO BOOK "THE DEEMSTER."

H. J. Updegraft, of Minneapolis, formerly manager of the Gem theater of Pipestone, Minn., has contracted with the American Maid Film Company, of Minneapolis, to book "The Deemster" in Minnesota and South Dakota.

BUYERS AID IN "ROBESPIERRE" EXPLOITATION.

In making territorial sales for "Robespierre," the seven-reel spectacle controlled by the Export and Import Film Company, an entirely new method of procedure is being followed by Ben Blumenthal, head of the concern. With the picture complete in every detail, he has laid out a plan which should be of intense interest to state right buyers in the exploitation of a picture of this scope. It concerns the auxiliary matter that goes with the production, which plays a big part in its success.

On "Robespierre" there will be an extensive layout of material, and in the selection of its units the "Robespierre" buyers are to have a voice. There is much material to choose from, and Mr. Blumenthal feels that buyers should know best what will work to the highest advantage of the picture.

"What might be ideal for the metropolitan engagement of a production might not suit the requirements of second and third-class cities," says Mr. Blumenthal. "While it is true that feature releasers undoubtedly devote their best efforts in devising the material which is calculated to draw the public interest, opinion as to selection will differ. We have all seen such instances, where very expensive, conscientious displays have been pronounced inadequate by the man whose money pays for it. I propose to draw the consensus of opinion on such matters and be guided by the men in the field. 'Robespierre' presents so many different angles for its presentation to the public that I want the final selection to be representative of the opinion of state rights buyers."

As soon as a few contracts for the sale of "Robespierre" now under way are closed, Mr. Blumenthal will call a conference to take matters up, from twenty-four sheet posters down to the neighborhood dodger.

SPECIAL ADS FOR "ONE LAW FOR BOTH."

For the purpose of better exploiting "One Law for Both," the Ivan production, various special publicity devices are being used, which are designed to be of great aid to exhibitors. Special triple expansion display frames 9 feet wide and 6 feet high, holding all the 22 by 28 photos, the 11 by 14 photos and 8 by 10 photos on this production, as well as the trade mark of the company and special description of play and cast, have been designed and veneered and enameled for lobby display.

Drawings by famous artists have been reproduced in mat form.

Advertising mats from 14 lines single column to half a page have been devised so that a uniform and systematic scheme of advertising can be resorted to by all exhibitors.

A special book giving various publicity aids as well as the reproductions in miniature of the various styles of special oil paintings and the styles of paper are reproduced.

Mr. Kopfstein has also designed a special newspaper size reproduction of the great number of favorable newspaper reviews which were accorded this production.

TOBIAS BUYS "TROOPER 44."

"Trooper 44," the Dixon Boardman feature in five reels, has been disposed of in the United States through the agency of James A. Stiles, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, to M. L. Tobias, of 729 Seventh avenue.

Mr. Stiles is finishing a series of scenic productions known as "travelettes," which are to be released through a program at the rate of two a month, and the producer states that they contain sufficient novelty to keep them away from the ordinary travelogue picture heretofore used.

KAUFMAN TAKES NEW CONTRACTS.

Kaufman Specials, of Memphis, Tenn., announces that state rights have been purchased for the Terry Human-Interest Reels, issued bi-weekly, for Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina; also Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi for the American War News Weekly. The first of these single reelers were released on June 25, and many bookings have been reported to date. President Kaufman recently journeyed to Brownsville, Tenn., by automobile, where he closed additional contracts with W. B. Yost, a prominent theater manager operating at Brownsville and at Pontotac, Miss.

MOTOY COMEDIES CONTINUE IN FAVOR.

The success anticipated by those who are interested in the production of the Motoy Comedy films is finding ample justification, and this knowledge will be gratifying news to those who have seen the pictures. It seems the quaint little doll actors are winning all hearts with their Lilliputian antics—they create, draw and hold the interest of all classes, especially of grown-up folk, which is contrary to the opinion expressed by a small minority of prophets in certain circles. Many of the best theaters throughout the country are now showing the comedies. Among those in New York are the Strand and Loew's; in Boston, the Modern theater, and in Chicago, the Lubline, Trinz Circuit and Ascher Brothers Circuit. The M. & R. Film exchange of San Francisco has acquired the Motoy Comedy rights for California, Nevada and Arizona. It is understood that they have booked the entire T. & D. Circuit for the series.

"Come Through" Declared Censor-Proof

So Declare Members of National Review Board—Mastbaum Buys Universal's Melodrama.

"COME THROUGH," George Bronson Howard's big screen drama, which has just closed its two weeks' run at the Broadway theater, is expected to develop into one of the most popular state rights pictures that the Universal has ever issued. On the day the picture began its run, Stanley V. Mastbaum purchased exclusive rights for eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, with the declaration that he expected to do a record business with the Howard story. The officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company are also considering propositions from other well-known operators in this country and abroad. Special showings have been arranged for these buyers, following the Broadway engagement.

Suspense, the one essential ingredient of the successful melodrama, is employed throughout the story with masterful effect, it is said, and despite the fact that much of the action transpires on the threshold of the underworld with many types of crooks filling important roles, the bounds of good taste have not once been overstepped, and it has not been found necessary to eliminate a single scene out of deference to the censors. In this connection, members of the National Board of Review have declared that the feature will get by every board of censorship in the country without difficulty.

ORGANIZATION PROMOTED BY LESSER GROWING

The announcement recently made by Sol L. Lesser, of San Francisco, of his plans to promote a merger of state rights men throughout the country, supplemented with a partial list of those who have already pledged themselves to the organization. In addition to Mr. Lesser, of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., the list includes

M. Rosenburg, of the De Luxe Feature Film Co., Seattle; Harry Rathner, of the Supreme Feature Film Co., Minneapolis; L. Goldstein, of the Supreme Photoplay Corporation, Denver; Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, and Harry Grelle, of the Supreme Feature Film Co., Pittsburgh, Pa. Several other buyers have affiliated themselves with the movement and their names will be announced shortly, it is stated.

Leon D. Netter, who has secured a franchise in the national organization for the state of Ohio, is to travel to San Francisco shortly to complete financial arrangements for carrying on his work and to greet old friends in the trade.

In speaking of the trend of the demand, Mr. Lesser stated that exhibitors seem to favor films of six or seven reels, either taken from some popular book or with some well-known star. He asserts that the open market conditions now prevailing in the West are to their liking, as the plan gives them an opportunity to present attractions desired by their patrons and at the same time get pictures that return them a profit.

CENTURY COMEDIES GAIN ATTENTION

Since Alice Howell entered the constellation of comedy stars the competition has increased the interest of state rights buyers in the general subject of comedies. "Balloonatics," Miss Howell's first medium, opened the way to women as competitors with male comedy stars, and her reception was encouraging in the extreme. Then followed "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter," attractions that added further to the early establishment of Miss Howell as popular favorite as a lone star.

General Director J. G. Blystone has now completed a fourth comedy for distribution under the Century brand entitled "Alice of the Sawdust," with Miss Howell doing all sorts of breakneck circus stunts in her quest for laughs. While it is certain that no circus ever traveled with just exactly the equipment Mr. Blystone provided for Miss Howell's "show," it is equally certain that never before has so much fun been manufactured with the saw-dust ring and aerial equipment as the basis of operations.

Century Comedies are distributed to state rights buyers by Julius Stern, president of the corporation, from his office in the Mecca Building, New York.

"TANKS AT ANCRE" RUNNING AT GLOBE.

Following the announcement that Pathe's five-reel special official government picture, "The Tanks at the Battle of Ancre," has been booked at Charles Dillingham's Globe theater, New York, it is now stated that the engagement is for at least two weeks, at what is believed to be the highest weekly rental ever paid for a five-reel picture in New York.

Other big bookings are Orchestra Hall, Chicago; Tremont Temple, Boston, and the Brandeis theater, Omaha, under the auspices of the Hotel Men's Association during its convention there.

The arrangements made for presenting "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" in Chicago and Omaha typify C. R. Seelye's sales policy, according to which Pathe salesmen and managers work with the exhibitors in putting over Pathe pictures.

In Chicago the presentation is being made under the direction of Manager Vogeler, of Orchestra Hall, in co-operation with Tom North, manager of Pathe's Super-Feature Department, who is in Chicago for the Motion Picture Convention.

SHERMAN BUYS "I BELIEVE."

Harry A. Sherman, head of the newly-formed Sherman Pictures Corporation, has purchased the exclusive right to "I Believe" from George Loane Tucker, who wrote the scenario and directed the production.

This transaction comes right on the heels of the announcement that one of the largest and most important combinations ever formed in the moving picture industry was brought into existence when a group of men headed by Mr. Sherman formed a company which will be known as the Sherman Pictures Corporation.

"I Believe" is said to be of a size and importance that will make it rank favorably with the productions Mr. Sherman has handled in the past.

NEWARK RUN OF "GOD'S MAN" EXTENDED.

An indication of the appeal and box-office value of the latest Frohman Amusement Corporation super-production, "God's Man," is the success which that production has enjoyed through the past week's run at the Goodwin theater, Newark, N. J. Although the original booking was for but four days, the management of the house, impressed by the business, extended the engagement for another four days, and at the termination of this scond period were prevented from a further extension because of the inability of the Mammoth Film Corporation, distributors of the production for the Northern New Jersey territory, to withhold a print from other bookings.

MORE FOREIGN RIGHTS TO "DEEMSTER" SOLD.

India, Burma, Ceylon and Brazil figured in territorial sales on Hall Caine's "The Deemster" during the week. David P. Howells bought the rights to the first named three countries, and the Pan American Trading Company purchased the rights to Brazil.

Foreign territory on "The Deemster" seems to be going unusually fast. Practically every country that is open to a venture of this nature has been disposed of by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, and J. Frank Brockliss.

"WHO SHALL TAKE MY LIFE?" AROUSES INTEREST.

The forthcoming Selig feature film, "Who Shall Take My Life?" is said to be already arousing the expectations of territorial rights' buyers, notwithstanding the fact that the drama has not been exploited. The drama, written by Maibelle Heikes Justice, is said to present an interesting argument against capital punishment.

"PERSUASIVE PEGGY" COMPLETED.

Mayfair's first production, "Persuasive Peggy," is completed and M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, is so impressed with the work done by Peggy Hyland, Mayfair's first star, that he has selected Director Charles J. Brabin to collaborate with Miss Hyland and the authoress, Miss Maravene Thompson, to do the cutting and titling, believing that they can obtain the best results because of their intimate knowledge of the story.

Mr. Schlesinger's policy is one of exacting supervision over every conceivable detail, and every ounce of his energy has been devoted to the successful production of the first Mayfair film. It is primarily due to Mr. Schlesinger's untiring efforts that the success of "Persuasive Peggy" is virtually assured.

Scene from "Persuasive Peggy" (Mayfair).

Mr. Schlesinger is preparing to announce the trade showing of "Persuasive Peggy," which film production he says is one of human emotions that will appeal to the emotions of the picture-loving public.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Bluebird Adds "Mother of Mine"

Set for Release on August 20—Features Ruby La Fayette, Who Makes Screen Debut at Seventy-two.

RUPERT JULIAN'S production of E. J. Clawson's story and scenario, "Mother of Mine," was shown to employees of Bluebird during the past week, and by a unanimous vote of "the jury" was declared to fulfill, in every detail of story, cast and production, the requirements of that program. It was accordingly set for release August 20, following the Lynn F. Reynolds "nature study," "The Shown-Down" (August 13) and the Franklyn Farnum-Brownie Vernon comedy drama, "The Clean-Up" (August 6).

"Mother of Mine" developed, in its private showing, the sincere admiration of Bluebird executives for the artistry of Ruby La Fayette, in the mother role. At the age of seventy-two Miss La Fayette worked before a camera for the first time under Rupert Julian's direction, although her stage career dates from the early sixties, and has encompassed every line of work possible to dramatic representation. Ruth Clifford will be co-star with Mr. Julian in advertising "Mother of Mine," with Ruby La Fayette featured.

Selections for the further schedule of Bluebirds will be made from four issues completed and ready to be dated up. Ella Hall's reappearance in the series will be accomplished in Jack Conway's production of "Little Miss Fix-It," furnished by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Mynton. Dorothy Phillips will be the star of "Triumph," a production made by Joseph De Grasse from Samuel H. Adams' story in Colliers; Jack Cunningham's story, "The Fourth Glove," prepared for the screen by Waldemar Young and directed by Elmer Clifton will have Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon as stars, and Lynn F. Reynolds will furnish his final Bluebird in "Mr. Opp," created from Alice Hegan Rice's story of the same title. Having finished these subjects, Bluebird directors are all busy on new creations for autumn showings.

GAUMONT SHOWS PICTURES OF FRANCE.

Motion picture exhibitors have to make money. That is their first thought. The manufacturer of pictures who keeps that always in mind is the one who is working closest with the exhibitors. This is the reason the Gaumont Company has had such success with its single-reel releases.

The pictures in the current "Tours Around the World" are so well chosen that the reel will not get "cold" on the shelf, no matter how long it may be before an exhibitor has a call to run it a second or third time. Perhaps the most interesting, from the point of view of photography, are the views of Avignon, France. Avignon is the place where the Popes lived during the fourteenth century.

Pope's Palace, Avignon, France.

To balance the reel are pictures of the ruined Palace of Tiberius at Capri, and of Timbuctoo, the mysterious town on the edge of the Sahara Desert near the River Niger.

ELEPHANT STARS MAKE DEBUT AT GOLDWYN'S.

It takes something out of the ordinary to make Fort Lee villagers excited these days. When recently a large circus plant went through on its way to Goldwyn studios, the most hardened inhabitant had to take notice.

It was not one lone circus, but an assembly of three shows—a huge combination of elephants, camels, lions, circus tents, wagons and sideshows. Dancers, fat women, barkers, clowns and a multitude of supers, men, women and children, gave the requisite atmosphere.

The Circus at the Goldwyn Fort Lee Studios.

A group of four performing elephants hired from the New York Hippodrome, went through their tricks for the benefit of the camera.

Unfortunately, like a good many novices, they were attracted by the glare of the powerful arc lights, and gazed into them at every opportunity. The result was they had to be doctored, their eyes bathed in boric acid; they did not sleep all night, could not eat any food, and had to be carefully nursed.

They bravely stuck to the game though, and were out on the lot next morning, with white rings painted around their eyes, and rather shaky, but determined to finish the picture.

GOING TO SEA IN NEW YORK CITY.

No doubt by this time every one, everywhere has heard about the warship which has been constructed in Union Square, New York City, for the purpose of arousing patriotism in the youth of this city and getting enlistments for the navy, yet few know that this structure has another and decidedly important mission, in that on board it the naval recruits are actually trained. In the seventy-fifth release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs a first-hand knowledge of how things are done on board the men-of-war will be shown.

Through the courtesy of the Navy Recruiting Bureau the Bray Studios, Inc., were permitted to take this picture, and it is their belief that it will serve to acquaint millions of young men throughout the country with the advantages and benefits which they are sure to derive through serving their country in this branch of the service.

SPOOR GIVES SOLDIERS PATRIOTIC PRINT.

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, donated a print of Bryant Washburn's latest feature, "The Man Who Was Afraid," to the First Illinois regiment to be used for recruiting purposes. The soldiers secured the use of one of the big down town Chicago theaters and exhibited the picture there amid a military demonstration. The entire regiment paraded the Loop district, headed by the regimental band. Banners were displayed advertising the showing of the picture, admission to the theater being free. Recruiting agents were on every corner, stopping men and asking them to enlist and advising all who refused to "Go see 'The Man Who Was Afraid.'"

K-E-S-E released the film and is preparing to aid exhibitors in getting the co-operation of recruiting officers for their showings of the production.

General Steadily Growing

Addition of Four Reels a Week Soon To Be Followed by More Until Volume is Attained.

WITH the promise of a four-reel feature release each week to top off its present regular supply of shorter length features, General Film is well on its way to its recently predicted increase of product. The new material is being put on gradually, since the greatest of discrimination is being employed, but a product double what it was a week ago is already in sight.

General Film will in a very short time have ready for release a group of not less than ten four-reel dramatic subjects with popular stars in them, upon which the finishing touches are being placed in the laboratory. These will be marketed probably under the name of Sunset Features, to distinguish them from the many shorter length features with which the exhibitor and public are already familiar. General Manager Harold Bolster predicts that these will be hardly launched before there will be other additions of subjects different from the General Film product already being distributed.

Including the new product now on the way General Film has a list rather formidable for bulk and noteworthy for consistent character. It includes in current releases.

Dramas.—A four-reel series; the Selig two reelers and one-reelers; the O. Henry two-reel Broadway Star Features.

Comedy Dramas.—The "Black Cat" features from Essanay in twenty-five-minute lengths; two-reel O. Henry Broadway Star Feature comedy-drama subjects, which alternate with O. Henry drama releases.

Series.—"The Further Adventures of Stingaree," with True Boardman, in fifteen episodes (Kalem); the "Sparkle Comedies," one reel; "Pokes and Jabs," one reel; Johnny and Emma Ray, one reel, Ham and Bud, one reel; [illegible] comedies, one reel; Selig one and two reel comedies.

Educational.—Selig World Library, one reel weekly.

The augmenting of product has taken place simultaneously and in a period devoted by General Film mainly to reinforcing and aligning the organization toward a bigger and more efficient sales service, and in the midst of the introduction of concentrated merchandising methods. This part of the task has been so nearly completed that the attention of the management is now given more freely to the increase of subjects to be handled by its improved machinery.

SPOOR WOULD EXCHANGE SUGGESTIONS

So long as the producer is making up advertising material as well as the pictures themselves the Essanay company believes that there should be a more direct route for exhibitors' ideas and criticisms than through the distributing companies. Especially is this true in cases such as theirs, where they are releasing through two different channels and have lately placed "On Trial" with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"We are always endeavoring to secure suggestions from practical exhibitors and fully realize that it is to our advantage to be guided by them, as it is only natural that they have developed their end of the business along the lines which will evoke the best results," said President Spoor. "As a step toward arousing the co-operative spirit toward the producer among the many capable theater managers in this country we are requesting them to feel free to call upon us at all times for advertising ideas and at the same time send along anything which would be of use to us in issuing material and pictures to their liking.

"So great was the demand for the novelty advertising on the Linder pictures that we will undoubtedly continue to issue material of this sort on other series and features as soon as we are assured that exhibitors are anxious to make use of such novelties on their five-reel productions."

UNMASKING THE MEDIUMS IN PICTOGRAPHS.

In the seventy-fifth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs the third of the series of "Unmasking the Mediums," which have been made with the co-operation of Hereward Carrington, one of America's foremost psychologists, will be shown. The subject has to do with materialization, which has always been the most spectacular and least understood of all of the examples of mediumistic power.

Mr. Carrington has spent a lifetime on the subject of "spiritualism" and was probably the first to uncover the methods used by the mediums in carrying out their materializing seances. For this release Mr. Carrington staged a seance so that a so-called astral body materializing and the [illegible] is quite as remarkable as if done before a select few in some medium's establishment.

In the picture Mr. Carrington does the "materialization" and then explains it.

GEORGE HANLON SEES DAUGHTER.

One of the most interested spectators at the private showing at "The Golden God" last week was George Hanlon, one of the famous Hanlon Brothers and father of Alma Hanlon. Mr. Hanlon has been retired for some years, but he will be remembered by all older theater-goers for "Fantasma" and "Superba," two spectacles which held the boards for a generation.

TALLY AND LOEW VISIT THE "CIRCUS."

T. L. Tally of the West and Marcus Loew of the East, met at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee, N. J., last week and were photographed with Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Alfred Weiss, vice-president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, out "on the lot," where a pretentious circus spectacle, which is featured in Mae Marsh's third play was being photographed.

The two motion picture magnates were among the hundreds of notables of the stage, screen and society who have journeyed across the Hudson River during the past week to see one of the biggest pictures of the current season in the making. Mr. Tally owns and conducts a palatial motion picture house in Los Angeles, while Marcus Loew controls many theaters in New York City.

METRO DUPLICATES THE ORIGINAL "BANNER."

The flag that inspired the national anthem of the United States, "The Star Spangled Banner," will be seen in the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Slacker," in which Emily Stevens returns to the screen. It is not the original flag that flew over Fort Henry, at Baltimore, on that memorable night when the British fleet attacked the American fort, but it is an exact duplicate.

The national emblem at that time consisted of fifteen stripes and fifteen stars, and that particular one measured 40 by 30 feet. The duplicate which is screened in "The Slacker" measures the same as the original.

STANDARD BOOKINGS INCREASE.

Having booked up almost every important house in its territory, the Standard Film Corporation, which distributes the Art Dramas program for Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota and Nebraska, has set out to introduce the pictures in the smaller towns, and in the past week it has succeeded in contracting for one a week in Waukee and Menlo and for two in Armstrong, Iowa. These towns are respectively, 200, 350, and 400 in population.

The Des Moines office of the Standard also succeeded in securing a first run contract for the Majestic theater in that city.

COMING SELIG-HOYT COMEDIES.

The Selig Polyscope Company has announced the next group of Hoyt farce comedies to be released in K-E-S-E. The titles and release dates are: July 9, "A Rag Baby;" July 23, "A Runaway Colt;" August 6, "A Dog in the Manger." Each of the Hoyt farce comedies are two reels in length and feature William Fables, James Harris and Amy Dennis. J. A. Richmond continues to direct them. These comedies faithfully follow in Charles Hoyt's plots of true American life, but laughable situations have been added.

BLANCHE SCHWED TO BE FEATURED.

Baby Blanche Schwed, who so ably supported George Beban in "The Alien," will shortly be seen under the Junior Players' banner in a one-act comedy drama featuring the little talented star. "A Bit of Life" is the first release, and is to be followed with two one-reel subjects every month.

Goldwyn to Show at Exposition

Four and Perhaps More of Its Pictures Will Be Exhibited to Trade at Colonial.

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is ready to invite the exhibitors of America to see the first of its productions which have been made since the opening of its New Jersey studios in January. Seven Goldwyn pictures have been completed and the eighth and ninth productions are about to be begun. At least four and perhaps more of these pictures will be shown for the first time to American exhibitors each morning during the exposition of the Exhibitors' League of America, in Chicago, July 14 to 22.

Arrangements have been made with Jones, Linick & Schaefer whereby Goldwyn will hold a morning trade showing each day at the Colonial theater on Randolph street and exhibitors will be admitted to these showings by invitation.

The schedule calls for the showing of two productions each day under the auspices of F. M. Brockell, manager of the Goldwyn offices in Chicago, and officers of the company from New York.

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn star, who has been honored by having the first day of the exposition designated as "Mae Marsh Day," will attend several of these morning showings and meet many of these exhibitors.

Samuel Goldfish and other officers of Goldwyn will be present in Chicago throughout the exposition to meet men who have contributed to the growth of the industry.

EMILY STEVENS IN "A SLEEPING MEMORY."

Emily Stevens, star of the forthcoming Metro wonderplay de luxe, "A Sleeping Memory," has in the stellar role of the picturization of E. Phillip Oppenheim's popular novel, a role that for dramatic opportunity surpasses anything this gifted artist has had since she made her debut in the silent drama.

Like Miss Stevens, Mr. Mills, himself a star, has in the part of Powers Fiske, a role that fits him like a glove. Mr. Mills always gives a studied and finished portrayal of any part for which he is cast.

"THE LITTLE TERROR" (Bluebird).

Violet Mersereau's seventh Bluebird, "The Little Terror," was intended for release July 23, but a delay in perfecting the negative required that July 30 should be the ultimate date when the pretty blonde ingenue should come again to greet her legion of admirers through a screen medium. Rex Ingram made the production in Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) studio, managing the only company working in this series in the East.

To reflect circus incidents essential to the early scenes in the photoplay a traveling show was halted on its tour and detained until a series of thrilling episodes was recorded—the progress of the performance to a sensational accident in which an essential plot required that a trapeze performer should fall to his counterfeit death. Miss Mersereau, in these incidents, impersonates an equestrienne, and gives some surprising duplications of a regular circus girl's performance, bareback.

Then the routine of the scenes are relegated to every-day surroundings of affluence—for the circus waif gets into high society, by adoption, and there sprinkles the proceedings with an abundance of natural comedy. Sidney Mason was Miss Mersereau's leading man in creating "The Little Terror," with Mrs. Brundage, Jack Raymond, Ed Porter, Robert Clugston and Ned Finlay also working under Mr. Ingram's direction in preparing what is declared to be one of the best features Miss Mersereau has furnished to the Bluebird series.

"The Range Boss" Coming July 16

Essanay Will Follow the Gardner Picture a Week Later With "The Golden Idiot."

TWO big features are to be released by Essanay in the coming weeks. "The Range Boss," the first, is scheduled for July 16. This will be followed by "The Golden Idiot," July 23. Both films are to be handled by K-E-S-E.

Trade showings of "The Range Boss" are now being run at all branch offices of the releasing organization. This is the second of Essanay's series of Westerns, following "Land of Long Shadows," and features Jack Gardner, the former musical comedy star. The story is based on a cowboy romance and is replete with rapid-fire action of the red-blooded type. Ruth King and Carl Stockdale are the principal leads of Mr. Gardner's supporting company. W. S. Van Dyke was the director.

"The Golden Idiot" is Bryant Washburn's next feature. It is a comedy drama of the type which made Mr. Washburn so popular in his Skinner pictures. The star is shown as a beloved vagabond, who takes a thousand-to-one chance on a fortune left by his eccentric uncle and wins out. The picture introduces a three-legged dog for some decidedly novel action. It was produced by Arthur Berthelet.

Each of these pictures has a screen time approximately of sixty-five minutes.

THREE GAUMONT SINGLES FOR JULY 15.

It is an interesting program of single reels which comes from Gaumont through Mutual the week of July 15. The first release of the week is "Tours Around the World," No. 37, released July 17. First in importance upon this reel is Avignon, France. On the same reel are pictures of Timbuktu, the city situated on the edge of the Desert of Saraha within a few miles of the River Niger. A third section shows the ruined palace of Tiberius upon the Island of Capri, Italy.

The second release of the week is Gaumont's Mutual Weekly, No. 133, July 18. This contains the latest news of the world obtainable for motion pictures. The war pictures are sent from the Societe des Establissements Gaumont in Paris.

"Reel Life," No. 64, is released July 19. "Incandescent Mantles" tells in pictures just how these aids to illumination are manufactured. "The Boy Scout Signal Corps" shows the youth of the nation being trained for work that may well fit into the war scheme at some future time. "The Cocoanut" gives views at various periods of growth, and also some grotesque carvings of the rind of the fruit. Other sections of the reel are "A Novel Bicycle Race" and "Leaves from Life'."

SEVEN-REELER ON TRIANGLE PROGRAM.

An innovation in program features is the seven-reel production, "The Flame of the Yukon," starring Dorothy Dalton, which Triangle will release on July 1 with "Her Excellency the Governor." The spectacular effects and dramatic power of this picture will doubtlessly place it among the greatest of Triangle achievements. The fact that it is two reels longer than the regular program plays might indicate that it was designed as a "special." This is not the case, however. The story by Monte M. Katterjohn demanded seven acts in order to realize its full power and coherent development. For that reason it was decided to deviate from the standard. The same policy will be followed with other Triangle plays that merit greater length than five reels.

Miss Dalton as "The Flame," presents a picturesque figure as the Carmen of Alaska, queen triumphant of the Midas dance hall during the stampede of gold-crazed prospectors on the banks of the Yukon, in '95.

HINTS OF COMING CHAPLIN "WESTERN."

Charlie Chaplin is at work on his next comedy for Mutual. While he has not made known definitely the character of the production, he has hinted that it will be a "western." If the idea is worked out it will probably be a burlesque on the typical western "movie."

Mutual's comedian is back at the Lone Star studio at Los Angeles after a five-day trip to San Francisco with his brother Syd. When "The Immigrant" was completed, Chaplin declared a vacation for all hands and started for northern California with his brother. He showed the strain of the strenuous work on "The Immigrant" and returned after his rest, full of energy and enthusiasm for his next picture.

Edna Purviance, Chaplin's leading woman, hurried to the old home town, Lovelock, Nev., where she spent the gap between pictures.

MANTELL, JR. IN APOLLO PLAY.

Robert B. Mantell, Jr., son of the tragedian, will have an important role in the coming Art Drama, "When You and I Were Young." Mr. Mantell appeared with his father in Shakespearean repertoire for several seasons, and has also spent considerable time in stock.

Harry Benham will play the principal male role in this production. Also in support of Alma Hanlon will be Florence Short.

"The Reed Case" Leads Universal

For Week of July 9, Also Ruth Stonehouse Is Featured in "A Limb of Satan," Three-Part Gold Seal

THE Universal company presents a well balanced program suitably spiced with comedy, for the week of July 9. The Butterfly feature, "The Reed Case," stands by itself. It was written and directed by Allen Holubar, who stars in it with Louise Lovely. The five reels have unusual strength. The plot threads entwine a clean-cut ambitious young detective and a society girl and unravel to a happy ending.

On the regular program all types of motion picture stories are presented by well chosen casts. The offering for Monday is a Nestor comedy, "Minding the Baby." It was written by Fred Palmer and produced by Roy Clements. Eddie Lyons plays Mr. Youngwed. Edith Roberts is Mrs. Youngwed, while Lee Moran as that autocrat of flatdom, the janitor, adds the convincing touch.

The feature for Tuesday is the Gold Seal three-part drama, "A Limb of Satan." It stars Ruth Stonehouse, who produced it, in the sympathetic role of a mischievous orphan. In support are Jack Dill, Chester Bennett and Mrs. Witting. On the same date will appear "The Paper Hanger's Revenge," a Victor release featuring Eileen Sedgwick.

For Wednesday there is an L-KO two-reel comedy of rare merit entitled "Hearts and Flour." These L-KO releases are steadily growing in popular favor. Also on this day appears the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, that mirror of the world's events that appeals through its news beats.

On Thursday the Rex feature, "Three Women of France," a two-act war drama, is the quintessence of action, being a five-part picture compressed into two reels. It was written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, with a cast which includes such well-known players as Jack Mulhall, Irene Hunt, Adelaide Woods, [illegible] [illegible], Dick Ryan and Virginia Lee. On the same day there is a Victor brand comedy, "Meet My Wife," featuring Neal Hart and Mignon Anderson.

The weekly issue of the Universal Screen Magazine is chock-a-block with instructive and interesting pictures. It [illegible] on July 13. On the same day there is released a two-reel Victor comedy, "Kicked Out." Carter De Haven is starred. He also produced the picture. Others in the cast are Marcia Moore, Ed Clark, Dan Duffy and Marguerite [illegible].

Saturday sees the release of the Bison feature, a two-reel Western drama, entitled "Double Suspicion." This features Neal Hart, Janet Eastman and George Berrell with [illegible] [illegible]son and the Universal cowboys. [illegible] [illegible] and the Joker comedy, "Kitchenalia," featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims, appear Saturday also.

Sunday the chief offering is the Imp drama, "[illegible] of Headquarters," written by [illegible] and [illegible] and produced by Donald McDonald. Lee Hill and Charles Hill Mailes appear in the leading roles. On the same day will be a Powers comedy cartoon, "Monkey Love," and on the same reel is a Dorsey Educational, "In the Books of India." Also on Sunday is a Western drama of the Big U brand, "The [illegible]," featuring Robert Leonard.

During the week the third episode of "The Gray Ghost," entitled "The Warning," the serial adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story "Loot," will be released.

"Do Children Count?" Going Strong

Essanay Company Reports Many Houses Changing Attitude Toward Two-Reel Subjects.

AS a breaker of house policies Essanay's latest series, "Do Children Count?" has established a record which may stand for a long time to come. Branch managers of K-E-S-E report that they have been able to convince exhibitors who have not run a two-reel subject for years that this series has a strong appeal for every class of clientele. From every territory contracts have been received from between five and twenty theaters which are making exceptions to their announced policies to show these twelve subjects.

The immediate recognition of "Do Children Count?" photodramas is due to several reasons. Not only has the series strong advertising possibilities, but the campaign already has been outlined for exhibitors by Essanay. Little Mary McAlister's work in "On Trial" has counted also strongly, as she is generally credited with carrying off the honors.

Some of the better known feature houses which have booked the series are two Chicago downtown houses, the Ziegfeld and the Pastime. Others, covering practically the entire country, include the Strand, Birmingham, Ala.; Fenway, Boston; Broadway at Salt Lake City; Strand at Sacramento, Cal.; Regent at Detroit; New Grand Central, St. Louis; Hippodrome at Portland; Colonial at Cincinnati; Majestic at St. Paul; New Grand in Minneapolis, Washington in Dallas, and the Keeney in Newark.

COMING APOLLO.

Frederic Rath, who wrote the story and scenario for "When You and I Were Young," the coming Apollo-Art Drama, is now engaged in writing the continuity for the recently purchased story by Charles E. Dazey, author of "Manhattan Madness." Alma Hanlon is to be starred in this, which has for a working title "Behind the Mask."

Mastbaum Signs Up With Goldwyn

Contracts for First Year's Output of Twenty-six Productions of New Company.

STANLEY V. MASTBAUM, who shares with Marcus Loew of New York, the record of controlling or booking more theaters than any other man in the picture industry, has signed for the entire first year's output of twenty-six Goldwyn pictures for his Stanley theater, Philadelphia.

Thus does Goldwyn enter America's third largest city in the premier show place of the community. The bookings of the Goldwyn productions by Mr. Mastbaum may be taken to mean that Goldwyn pictures will be presented in the hundred or more theaters under the direct control of Pennsylvania's most powerful exhibitor.

Goldwyn's managers in its nineteen American branches, as well as the managers of its six Canadian offices, have been on duty since June 11, and announcement is about to be made of the signing of important exhibitors in most of the large American and Canadian centers.

The equipping of all of the branches in the United States has, in the main, been done from New York, and Goldwyn finds itself completely installed in nearly every case within thirty days after the signing of its leases. In each office a large and completely equipped projection room has been fitted up.

Goldwyn is making its own positive prints of its productions in its own Fort Lee laboratories, and day and night shifts are now being operated to lay down prints of productions of its various pictures in all of the Goldwyn branches to enable managers to rent films on the basis of personal inspection by exhibitors instead of on home office promises and prospectuses.

Trade showings will be held in all of the branches in July.

REGINA BADET IN "NO GREATER LOVE."

[illegible] Regina Badet, the French emotional actress, is presented in the role of Sadunah, the Dancer, in the Selig Red Seal play, "No Greater Love." This K-E-S-E production was written by [illegible] Le Queux and is a life drama of today, being the study of a woman's heart. Sadunah, the Dancer, has a daughter whom she wishes to defend from worldly perils, whom she wishes to shield from the life the mother had led. Pursuing [illegible] ambition, Sadunah marries a rich financier and when he gets into serious trouble and it would see that he will lose all his money, she tempts him to commit a terrible crime. But she, too, is ready to sacrifice all for mother love. The [illegible] Sadunah, at whose feet the artistic world has paid homage, gives her life for her child.

Regina Badet is known to many as "the vampire of the French screen." Her work is notable. "No Greater Love" is said to present not only a strong plot, but beautiful photography and scenic efforts. The K-E-S-E has a complete list of advertising material to accompany the drama, including one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters, heralds, window cards, etc.

[illegible] Badet's artistic dancing adds a great deal to the interest and proper atmosphere of "No Greater Love."

ART DRAMAS TO ISSUE MAGAZINE.

As a further aid to its exhibitors in advertising their pictures, Harry Raver announces that Art Dramas, Inc., intends to issue a weekly magazine, dealing with Art Dramas generally and specifically, and containing, besides news, advertising suggestions, clip sheets, and other publicity material.

The publication, which is to be known as Timely Topics, consists of eight pages, 8½x11¾ inches, printed on best grade calendared paper and plentifully illustrated.

Each issue will contain press sheet matter for the current release, and also editorials, comments on the films, special articles on different phases of the film industry and other departments of the regulation trade papers.

It will be the aim of the editors, Harry Ennis and Patrick Kearney, to make it interesting to the general reader as well as of practical value to the exhibitor. Mr. Ennis was for a number of years motion picture editor of the New York Clipper, while Mr. Kearney was until recently editor of the Motion Picture Mail.

THREE NEW FOX COMEDIES COMPLETED.

Hank Mann, Charles Parrott and Tom Mix have just completed new Foxfilm comedies in the Hollywood studios. In the cast with Mann will be Rena Rogers, Katherine Griffith, Eva Nelson, Jess Weldon and Harry Moody. Miss Rogers has gained fame and success in the two Foxfilm comedies which she made with Tom Mix recently. Mrs. Griffith is an addition to the list of Fox fun-makers. She was well represented, however, by her daughter, Gertrude, who is appearing in the Henry Lehrman Sunshine comedies for William Fox.

Hank Mann's new comedy will revolve around happenings at the beach.

The Tom Mix picture will once more include in its cast Tom himself, Victoria Forde, Billy Mason, Violet Eddy, Pat Chrisman and Sid Jordan. A flirtatious "vampire" has been added to this number of well-known names in the person of Reba Haines.

"Mary Moreland" Leads Mutual July 9

Marjorie Rambeau Has the Title Role—"The Trap" Is the Helen Holmes Number.

A PICTURE dramatization of Marie Van Vorst's popular novel, "Mary Moreland," with Marjorie Rambeau in the title role, leads Mutual's schedule for the week of July 9. "Mary Moreland" is the sixth of Miss Rambeau's productions for Mutual. The player has repeated her success before the footlights during her brief career on the screen. "Mary Moreland" is the story of a very ordinary girl from a very ordinary suburban home who, in her career as a stenographer, became a most extraordinary young woman. She won the love of a rich married man. How she resisted the temptation of love and won is the story that the picture tells.

"The Trap" is the title of the fourteenth installment of "The Railroad Raiders," Mutual-Signal photonovel, released July 9. Helen Holmes, playing the leading role, makes a daring leap from a moving train, crossing a viaduct, into a river and rescues the hero. Miss Holmes' exploits in "The Railroad Raiders" have been the most sensational of her sensational screen career.

George Ovey's Horsley-Mutual one-reel comedy, "Jerry at the Waldorf," is scheduled for release July 12. Jerry beats his board bill, and gets into a fashionable hotel, where his experiences in hunting a bathroom create wild commotion and eventually land Jerry in jail.

Hawaiian atmosphere has been introduced into the La Salle comedy, "When Lulu Danced the Hula," on the Mutual schedule for July 10. Grass begirdled Hawaiian girls take a conspicuous part in the one-reel laugh provoker.

Mutual Tours, released July 10, show Havana, capital of Cuba; Aigues Mortes, a city of the Crusades, and picture a trip up the Nile. Reel Life, the one-reel magazine, released July 12, contains "A Submarine of the Past," "A Square Deal for the Baby," "Whale Meat," "Camp Fire Signal Girls," "A Hasty Pudding," "Professional Etiquette" and animated drawings from Life. The Mutual weekly released July 11 carries the latest news of the world.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE FINISHES "THE LESSON."

Constance Talmadge's first Selznick-Picture, "The Lesson"—the first picture in which she has appeared as an independent star—has been completed. Director Giblyn made remarkable speed in this production, and within four weeks of the date that Miss Talmadge was announced as a star her picture was on the film. The release date soon will be announced.

"The Lesson" is from a story by Virginia Terhune Van De Water. The first series of scenes deal with life in a small country town.

Constance Talmadge has the role of a girl just out of school in the first part of the picture, a young wife in the second, and in the third she is the mature product of all her experiences.

Director Giblyn has devised a number of novel and interesting effects in this photodrama, and it will be a worthy introduction of this latest of Selznick stars.

"LOVE BEHIND BARS" (L-Ko Comedies).

Phil Dunham, Myrtle Sterling and Lucille Hutton will be featured in the latest comedy Vin Moore has produced, under the general direction of J. G. Blystone, for the L-Ko Comedies. There will be new effects used in provoking laughter and a bevy of pretty girls will add an unusual interest to the proceedings. The girls will be concerned in scenes representing events in a young women's seminary, with Miss Sterling and Miss Hutton leading the mischief makers through many lively demonstrations.

Scene from "Love Behind the Bars" (L-Ko).

A BIG FOUR FOR PATHE SERIAL.

Four screen favorites have been engaged by Pathe for the production of a new serial which will be released under the title "The Hidden Hand." They are Doris Kenyon, who will be starred in the production, and Arline Pretty, Sheldon Lewis and Mahlon Hamilton, who will be features.

This is the first serial in which Miss Kenyon has appeared, but she has made a screen name for herself in the features in which she has been starred by a number of companies. Miss Pretty has one serial to her credit. She was the featured member of the cast in "The Secret Kingdom."

Sheldon Lewis is a veteran of the serial. This is the third of the chapter pictures in which he has appeared. As the Clutching Hand in the "Exploits of Elaine" he won popularity. His reputation was enhanced by his work as the "Iron Claw" in the Pathe serial of that name. Mr. Hamilton has been leading man for Olga Petrova. His latest picture is the Lasky production called "The Undying Flame."

The story for "The Hidden Hand" is the work of Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. Carroll Fleming, for three years general stage director of the Hippodrome, is the director.

PALMER RELEASING THROUGH EDUCATIONAL.

Harry Palmer leaves the Mutual Program to produce cartoons under his own name, Harry Palmer, Inc. He will release his cartoons every week through the Educational Film Corporation of America. Mr. Palmer was the creator of such well-known comic cartoons as "Babbling Bess," "'Twas Ever Thus," "That Elusive Nest Egg," etc. His cartoons graced the papers of the largest daily and Sunday papers in the country. He is a pioneer of animated cartoons.

Mr. Palmer in the past five years has been connected with the General, Kriterion, Paramount and Mutual programs.

Mr. Palmer's cartoons dealing with timely subjects will appear weekly on the same reel with the Raymond L. Ditmar animal pictures—the first release date will be the 25th of June.

"STRICTLY BUSINESS" A NEW O. HENRY.

All the subtle humor of which O. Henry could boast is centered in the latest of his stories to be released through General Film in its series of twenty two-reel Broadway Star Features by this noted author. In "Strictly Business" the platonic relations of a pair of vaudeville artists, who travel together in a successful sketch, but who appear off stage on purely formal terms, is made the background for a great dramatic climax—followed by the inimitable comedy anticlimax which O. Henry uses with such galvanic effect in his short stories.

Alice Rodier, who plays the girl in "No Story," another recent O. Henry success, is seen as the vaudeville actress. J. Frank Glendon reappears in this number.

IVAN'S "BABBLING TONGUES" READY FOR RELEASE.

"Babbling Tongues," the new Ivan superplay, is ready for immediate release. William Humphrey, who directed this picture, has been engaged three months in the making of this production. An all-star cast, headed by James Morrison and Grace Valentine, have labored valiantly to make it a noteworthy release. Others in the cast are Arthur Donaldson, Paul Capellani, Louise Beaudet, Gladden James, Carolyn Birch, Richard Tucker, all well-known screen and stage stars.

The story of "Babbling Tongues" was written by Mr. Humphrey and George E. Hall.

K-E-S-E NOW RELEASING 15 REELS WEEKLY.

George Kleine's distributing organization, K-E-S-E, is now releasing fifteen reels each week—a K-E-S-E feature of five reels, a series of "Do Children Count?" (Essanay), two reels each, a Selig Charles Hoyt comedy of two reels every other week, averaging one reel a week, and seven reels of Conquest Pictures. In addition to this Mr. Kleine's organization is releasing three series of Musty Suffer comedies and is still booking the Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," with a steady call for it. He is also offering the George Kleine Cycle of Film Classics, several strong super-features and many splendid educational and scenic subjects.

"THE LAST OF THE CARNABYS" (Pathe).

Gladys Hulette, who radiates optimism, laughter and sunshine in her pictures, stars in the Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Last of the Carnabys," to be released July 22. In many respects this play is the most pretentious in which she has appeared, being strongly dramatic, with many tense situations, and that without depriving her of the kind of part in which she appears at her best, a part of innocence, sweetness and youth. William Parke directed the picture. Philip Bartholomae wrote the story.

"THE BARRIER" CONTINUES BIG BUSINESS.

Reports from the theaters which have been booking "The Barrier" continue to arrive at the Lewis J. Selznick offices, with nothing but the highest praise for the picture and the business it draws.

Glaum and Desmond Head Triangle July 8

Bessie Love in Circus Story, "The Sawdust Ring," Will Appear July 15, with Enid Bennett in "Mother Instinct."

LOUISE GLAUM in "A Strange Transgressor," and William Desmond in "Time Locks and Diamonds" are featured on the Triangle program for the week of July 8. As Lola Montrose in "A Strange Transgressor," directed by Reginald Barker from the story by J. G. Hawks and John Lynch, Miss Glaum gives a sympathetic delineation of a woman who has cared only for indolence and luxury until her maternal instinct causes her to make a great sacrifice for the life of her little son.

The star is supported by an exceptional cast of players, including J. Barney Sherry, May Giraci, Colin Chase and Dorcas Matthews. The extraordinary gowns worn by Miss Glaum and the magnificent settings required by the story lend aesthetic qualities to the vigorous drama.

In "Time Locks and Diamonds" William Desmond appears as "Silver Jim" Farrell, whose robberies have annoyed the police from New York to Rome. In order to raise money for a former associate, "Silver Jim" calmly removes a famous diamond necklace from under the eyes of its owner. This is his last theft, however, for he is taken voluntary captive by a woman.

The play was pictured by J. G. Hawks from a story by John Lynch and was directed by Walter Edwards. A new leading woman, Gloria Hope, makes her entrance to Triangle pictures as the sister of "Silver Jim." Others who have important roles are: Robert McKim, Rowland Lee, Mildred Harris, George Beranger, Thomas Guise and Milton Ross.

Due to a change of schedule, "The Sawdust Ring," the widely-heralded circus play starring Bessie Love, will be released the week of July 15 instead of July 29. This will mark the first appearance of the girl star since "Cheerful Givers," and is said to be the most elaborate production in which she has ever been featured. Enid Bennett in "The Mother Instinct" will be the other attraction on the program. Margery Wilson, who has been promoted to stardom, will appear in support of Miss Bennett.

AEROPLANE ACCIDENT FITTED THE SCRIPT.

Tex LeGrane, an aviator instructor at the Staten Island Aviation School at Midland Beach, Staten Island, unwittingly saved the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation a thousand dollars the other day, but cost his employers a brand new Curtiss bi-plane. He was making some flight scenes for Mr. Brenon in the concluding scene of "The Lone Wolf," and as he started up he accidentally deflected one of his rising rudders while about 25 feet off the ground. The machine at once dove to the ground and was completely wrecked, although LeGrane was fortunate to escape with a few bruises and a slight shaking up. As the cameraman was vigorously turning the crank all through the operation he secured a splendid piece of action film.

The aeroplane scene which gives the "big punch" to "The Lone Wolf" as laid out by the author shows "The Lone Wolf" and the heroine of the story escaping from France to England in an aeroplane. They are pursued by a crowd of international crooks in another plane which is wrecked, killing its occupants. Mr. Brenon intended to build a "wrecked" machine, and it would have been flashed on the screen with the dead aviator lying in the wreckage. LeGrane's accidental tumble furnished both the fall and the wrecked machine without additional cost.

Scene from "The Lone Wolf" (Brenon).

"WHAT MONEY CAN'T BUY" (PARAMOUNT).

"What Money Can't Buy," an adaptation of George Broadhurst's popular play of that name, starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, will be released by Paramount on July 16. This is the fourth production in which Jack Pickford and Miss Huff have appeared together. Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen" created a most happy impression concerning the ability of this youthful pair of co-stars, which Dickens' "Great Expectations" and Gene Stratton Porter's "Freckles" served to augment.

An exceptional cast is assembled in support, including Theodore Roberts, Hobart Bosworth, Raymond Hatton, James Cruze, James Neill and Bliss Chevalier.

Fields Working on "The Corner Grocer"

William A. Brady Announces, Too, the Coming Issue of Another Grandaise Play, "When True Love Dawns."

LEW FIELDS is at work in the Peerless studio, Fort Lee, upon the second of the series of photoplays in which he is to appear for World-Pictures Brady-Made. This is a screen version of "The Corner Grocer," which is said to have had the longest New York run as a spoken comedy drama that ever was recorded. "The Corner Grocer" was written and produced by Adolph Phillip, at the German theater in New York, where its career continued for 1,007 performances, outdistancing "The Old Homestead," which held the record up to that time. This achievement was the more remarkable for the reason that the piece was played in a foreign tongue and could not appeal to anything like the entire populace.

"When True Love Dawns," the last of the series of French photoplays purchased by the Brady International Service for the World-Pictures program, is about to be published. Susan Grandaise, called "the sweetest girl in Europe," is the star of this play, and the cast also includes Albert Signer, whose really remarkable acting attracted general attention in Sarah Bernhardt's "Mothers of France" and Regina Badet's "Atonement."

"When True Love Dawns" is said by its American sponsors to contain certain unique features, among them a set of characters and a story without one thought of evil. It was directed by Louis Mercanton.

Miss Grandaise is expected to come to America in person under consignment to World-Pictures Brady-Made, as soon as she finishes the play upon which she is working with Mr. Mercanton at present "somewhere in France." Director General Brady has already provided himself with several scenarios for the use of Miss Grandaise. These are all on American topics.

Regina Badet, the "vampire of France," who has been seen in this country in "Atonement" and "The Golden Lotus," will not join the forces of World-Pictures for three or four months.

NEW STAGE FOR LASKY STUDIO.

The tremendous production schedule which has been laid out by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its preparation of Artcraft and Paramount photoplays has rendered necessary the erection of still another new stage at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. For the last two years the work of increasing the productive capacities of the studio has been going on almost ceaselessly.

A short time ago, after the completion of stage Number 3, work was begun upon the building of a huge swimming tank in the yard. With the completion of this tank, work has been begun on stage Number 4, adjacent to the tank and so arranged that stage and tank can be used simultaneously.

The new platform will be 200 by 80 feet, the same size as stages Numbers 2 and 3. It will be fully equipped with the latest electrical appliances and telephonic devices. It is planned to devote it almost exclusively to Artcraft productions. It is planned to have a number of stars now in the East transferred to the West Coast during the summer. It is most highly probable that the first photoplay to be staged on Number 4 will be Geraldine Farrar's first picture of the summer.

JACK SHERRILL IN STIFF TRAINING.

"Live in the atmosphere of a character to be played" has evidently become the motto of Jack Sherrill, the popular Froman Amusement Corporation juvenile star. For the past three weeks, since the completion of his enacting of the leading juvenile role in the Author's Film Corp. production of Otto Hauerbach's sensational Broadway play, "The Silent Witness," young Sherrill has been hard at work under the tutelage of a prominent ex-lightweight champion of the padded ring, putting himself in shape for the lead which he will play in a coming Frohman super-production.

The part to be played by Jack Sherrill calls for some extraordinary athletic stunts, for which the actor is especially well equipped through the training and success of his college life.

MARGERY WILSON A TRIANGLE STAR.

Margery Wilson, who as a leading woman has won a following among the motion picture fans, has signed a three years' extension of her present Triangle contract and in the future will be featured.

"She has been elected to stardom by the public, not by the producers," is the statement issued by Triangle. Miss Wilson's latest appearance was in "The Clodhopper," in which she had the leading feminine role opposite Charles Ray. She will also appear in support of Enid Bennett in "The Mother Instinct," to be released July 15. Among other Triangle successes that have presented her in leading parts are "Wolf Lowry," "The Desert Man," "The Last of the Ingrams," "The Gun-Fighter" and "The Bride of Fate."

"MARY MORELAND" (Mutual).

Love and business furnish the theme for Marjorie Rambeau's sixth Mutual star production, "Mary Moreland," scheduled for release July 9. The photodrama is a screen adaptation of Marie Van Vorst's novel, of the same title, one of the most popular pieces of fiction published in a long time. It was produced under the direction of Frank Powell by the Powell Producing corporation at the College Point studios.

Robert Elliott appears with Miss Rambeau in the role of Thomas Maughm, Wall Street broker. Gene LaMoth, Augusta Burmester, Fraser Tarbutt and Edna M. Holland compose the supporting cast. The same cast has played with Miss Rambeau in most of her Mutual productions. "Mary Moreland" provides many tense dramatic situations in which Miss Rambeau has an opportunity to display her ability to great advantage.

Scene from "Mary Moreland" (Mutual).

"ON-THE-SQUARE GIRL" COMING PATHE.

Mollie King, who is fast becoming one of the most popular stars on the screen, will appear in "The On-the-Square Girl," a Pathe Gold Rooster play to be released at the end of July. This is an Astra production under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, with a splendid cast, composed of L. Rogers Lytton, Aimee Dalmores, Donald Hall and Ernest Lawford, who support beautiful Mollie King.

"The On-the-Square Girl" is a fast-moving, interest-holding feature, dealing with a little known phase of New York life, the speedy suburban club, town and country set.

CANADIAN GENERAL IN AMERICAN FILM.

Major General Logie, general officer commanding Military District No. 2, Canada, and commandant of Camp Borden, the big training camp near Toronto, himself appears in "For Liberty," Edwin Bower Hesser's story of the American Legion, which is being directed by Romaine Fielding. Another high officer who gave his aid was Brigadier General Fages, commanding Camp Valcartier, Quebec. It is in the role of a young American officer of the Canadian army that E. K. Lincoln is starred, Romaine Fielding playing the "heavy" role, and Miss Barbara Castleton is a charming heroine.

JAPANESE PICTURES DRAWING AT RIALTO.

Continued success at the Rialto theater has been the record of "The Land of the Rising Sun," the ten-episode film in Japan, to be released serially in July, at the rate of one reel a week, by the Japan-America Pictures Corporation, 15 William street, New York City. Unusual interest has been taken in these films by the Rialto patronage, who have been seeing them at the rate of two episodes weekly.

HATCH HEAD OF K-E-S-E AT CINCINNATI.

S. W. Hatch, a widely known exchange manager of Cincinnati, has assumed the position as branch manager of George Kleine's K-E-S-E branch at Cincinnati. Mr. Hatch stands well with the trade, having served as branch manager for the General Film Company, Mutual and more recently the V-L-S-E at St. Louis and Cincinnati.

DETROIT EXCHANGE CANCELS JULY BOOKINGS.

The Madison Film Exchange of Detroit has cancelled all bookings on "The Crisis" and "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for the month of July. This being Michigan's hottest month, John H. Kunsky, proprietor, felt that it would be better to shelve the pictures during that period and give them to exhibitors when it would be certain they would make money.

"SUDDEN JIM" RELEASED JULY 22.

Since the announcement that Triangle was to produce "Sudden Jim," the Saturday Evening Post story by Charles Buddington Kelland, now one of the best sellers among novels, many inquiries have been made by exhibitors and fans as to when it will be released and whether or not it will be on the regular program. The date of release has been set for July 22. Although the picture may exceed the standard five-reel length, it will be a program feature.

ANNA LEHR RETURNS TO TRIANGLE.

Anna Lehr, who will be remembered by critics and fans for her splendid emotional work in "Civilization's Child" and "The Bugle Call," has returned to Triangle and will appear in the leading feminine role opposite Jack Devereaux in a picture now being produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan at the Yonkers studio.

An exceptional supporting cast has been assembled. It includes George Siegmann, Frank Currier and Ed. Gillespie.

BOBBY BUMPS AND PUP CELEBRATE FOURTH.

Of course, Bobby Bumps, like any other youthful American, considers every day but a fill-in between the three most important days of the year—Thanksgiving, Christmas and Fourth of July—and probably the best of the three is the glorious Fourth. In Paramount-Bray Pictographs, release No. 75, Earl Hurd will show Paramount audiences how Bobby and his pup celebrate the day of days.

ARTCRAFT EXHIBITORS PREPARE FOR FOURTH.

Artcraft exhibitors throughout the country have made special preparations for the presentation of Mary Pickford's big patriotic picture, "The Little American," for presentation during the Fourth of July week. The appeal of this photoplay, it is announced, is particularly timely and deals with the present war. Battle scenes of immense proportions and faithfully depicting past incidents in connection with the great conflict are promised by the producers.

PUZZLES IN PICTOGRAPHS.

In place of the regular cartoon subject in the seventy-fourth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs the comedy is supplied by another set of the popular "Picto-Puzzles" by Sam Lloyd the famous puzzle man.

Unquestionably the Picto-Puzzles will be met with delight by theater patrons.

WAR TIME ECONOMY.

The picture entitled "War Time Economy" which forms part of the seventy-fourth release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, has to do with a subject in everyone's mind at this time. The working out of the food problem confronting the government and one means of solving it is shown in this picture.

CLOWN TOTO IS ON THE JOB.

Word comes from the Pacific coast that Toto, the famous clown, recently engaged to appear in Pathe comedies produced by Rolin, is at work at the Rolin studio, under the direction of Hal Roach, the man who made Lonesome Luke famous. It is claimed the Toto comedies will be something new in the annals of the screen and that in the near future they will be seen on Broadway.

WELCH SUBJECT ON ART DRAMAS PROGRAM.

In spite of the announcement made last week, that Joe Welch's "The Peddler" would be released on Art Dramas Program, some confusion still exists on the matter. The production will not be a special, as first intended. It will be a regular U. S. Amusement Corporation release on the program, following "The Road Between," an Erbograph picture.

Director W. W. Beaudine is filming at Universal City a one reel comedy entitled "A Jungle Cruise," featuring William Franey, with Lillian Peacock playing opposite, and with Za Su Pitts and Milburn Moranti as his principal supporting players.

"The Boots of Beatrice" is nearing its completion in five reels at Universal City under the direction of Louis W. Chaudet. Ruth Stonehouse plays the featured role with a large supporting cast, including Roy Stewart, Kingsley Benedict, Harry Dunkinson and Walter Belasco.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, with Edith Roberts, are playing the principal roles in "Impatient Patients," a one reel comedy being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Roy Clements.

Carlyle Blackwell is working on "Jack the Good-for-Nothing," one of the far ahead releases with which the shelves of World Pictures Brady-Made are piled up systematically. In this play Mr. Blackwell has the aid of Evelyn Greeley and Muriel Ostriche

Upon the heels of the concluding scenes of "Her Excellency the Governor," Director Albert Parker of the Yonkers Triangle studio has begun work on another play featuring Wilfred Lucas and Edna Miller. Among the supporting cast will be Edward Walton, Maggie Breyer, Oliver S. Putnam and Tom Gunn. The production will be under the supervision of Allan Dwan.

George Archainbaud has "signed up" with World-Pictures Brady-Made to direct a new series of photoplays. He has just completed "The Brand of Satan," in which Montagu Love makes his first appearance as a star, to be published July 9. Mr. Archainbaud's next World picture will be "Fatherhood," in which Arthur Ashley, Gerda Holmes and Edward Langford have the leading roles.

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

New Brunswick League Makes Good

Bill to Tax Motion Picture Tickets Is Introduced at Frederickton—Delegates Wait on Legislature and Members Back Up Plea Successfully.

By Alice Fairweather, The Standard, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The value of organized effort has been demonstrated in the case of the exhibitors of New Brunswick. A bill was proposed in the Provincial Legislature to tax motion picture theater tickets. A delegation representing the Motion Picture League of the Maritime Provinces went up to Fredericton to discuss the matter with the Government.

The delegation met the Government by appointment at 11:30 Tuesday morning, those present being President of the League W. H. Golding, W. C. McKay, S. C. Hurley of St. John, F. W. Winter of Moncton, Charles Staples of St. Stephen, G. Babineau of Chatham and W. Richards of Newcastle.

Mr. Winter was appointed spokesman. He dwelt merely on the question of municipalities being controlled by the Government so far as taxation is concerned, and cited several instances where the civic taxes were most extreme, such as Fredericton, Moncton and other towns throughout the Provinces.

Premier Foster agreed with the speaker that this matter was worthy of every consideration by the Government and promised to give it. Other members of the Government agreed with the premier's opinion in this regard. Premier Foster then intimated the fact that the Government had prepared a bill whereby theater patrons would be taxed for each and every ticket purchased, and a copy of the bill was submitted to the delegation, who found in it some measures which were rather excessive, and if allowed to pass would place a burden on patrons of the theaters as well as the managers themselves. A head tax was asked on all tickets up to twenty-six cents and then a scale of larger amounts according to the price of tickets. After several arguments were offered a clause was penciled in the bill that a tax be graded somewhat after the manner of the Nova Scotia Act, that is, one cent tax on all tickets up to twenty-six cents. It was also penciled in the bill that patrons of any theater, circus carnival, baseball game, etc., etc., or any legitimate pastime be taxed according to the scale. The meeting with the Government lasted about forty-five minutes.

Just before the delegation left Fredericton it was ascertained that there was a possibility of the two-cent tax being imposed, and information to this effect was wired to the delegates of the different labor councils throughout the provinces, and night letters were sent to all exhibitors in New Brunswick, asking them to immediately wire the sitting member of their constituency, asking for his support in doing away with the two-cent tax. The bill was introduced at the session of the House June 21. A discussion was held over the bill, those opposing it taking the stand that it was taxing the amusement of the people; those in favor using the argument that so much more money was needed for patriotic causes that the people who paid for amusements could easily pay the extra cent on every ticket.

On June 22 the bill was withdrawn Members had received so many requests to be heard in opposition that it is left over till the next session, put off for 12 months at least.

The question will be thoroughly discussed, but for the present the New Brunswick exhibitors are free from any provincial tax.

The delegation was entertained by Fredericton motion picture men with W. W. O. Fenerty as head of the committee.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob Kalter, Newark, N. J.

Big Features at Goodwin.

NEWARK, N. J.—During the week of June 25 four big features were exhibited by Mrs. L. H. Webbe at her Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street. They are "Within the Law," "The Garden of Allah," "Joan the Woman," "The Bar Sinister." It seems that the Newark public will take nothing short of the best.

Bayonne Amusement Incorporation.

Bayonne, N. J.—The Peoples Amusement Company, with registered offices at 500 Broadway, filed articles of incorporation last week at the office of the secretary of state. The authorized agent of the concern is Aaron Binkow. The incorporators of the company, which is capitalized at $30,000, are Jacob Schecter, Wolf Bass, and Morris Schecter.

New Roadmen at Universal.

Newark, N. J.—S. E. Fried, manager of the local Universal office, at 286 Market street, announces the appointment of several new roadmen. They are John Blum, Louis Kutinsky and Andrew Cohen. Business is reported as exceptionally good for this time of the year. Manager Fried reports the business on the Current Events is much better than the Weekly.

Exhibitors also welcomed delightedly the announcement that Jerry Kraker is back again at his old job of booker at the office. Miss Sally Uslander is office assistant at the branch.

Jersey Amusement Corporation Formed

Camden, N. J.—The Jersey Amusement Corporation has been organized here, with Haney & Carr, of Fourth and Market streets, as registered agents. The concern has an authorized capitalization of $125,000. The incorporators are Harry K. Oakford, Jr., William R. Stanert and Emma D. Snyder.

S. O. Siegel with Eugenic.

Newark, N. J.—Samuel A. Siegel, formerly manager of the Newark Film Exchange, is now connected as traveling representative through New Jersey for the Eugenic Film Corporation, of the Candler building, New York. Mr. Siegel will handle "Birth," and he has already booked it for four days at the Terminal theater, the William Fox house, situated on Park place and Broad street.

Playhouse, Arlington, Sold.

Arlington, N. J.—The Playhouse, 572 Kearny avenue, formerly owned by Cheyney Brothers, has been purchased by a corporation, which filed papers June 19 at Trenton. The concern's trade name is given as the High Class Amusement Company, and the registered agent is Hyman Britwar. The purpose of the concern is stated as promoting amusement enterprises, and the capitalization is $2,100. The incorporators include Morris Schecter, Hyman Britwar and Jacob Schecter.

Herbert Blache Appointed Agent.

Fort Lee, N. J.—Herbert Blache, of Lemoine avenue, this place, has been appointed New Jersey agent for the United States Amusement Company, incorporated under the laws of Virginia.

Exhibitor Peter J. Power Meets Tragic End

Picture Man Found Dead Near Wrecked Automobile at Presque Isle Bridge, Maine—Was One of State's Leading Exhibitors.

From John P. Flanagan, 151 Park View Ave., Bangor, Me.

BANGOR, ME.—His fellow exhibitors of Maine will learn with unfeigned sorrow of the tragic death of Peter J. Powers, of Caribou, who was killed in an automobile accident at the Presque Isle bridge on Tuesday, June 26. Just how the accident happened can only be conjectured from the position of the car when found. The indications are that he was coasting down the hill that leads to the approach of the bridge, and in some manner lost control of the machine. The planks and road indicate that he first struck the rails that guard the embankment on the west side of the road, and then shot across the road, tore through the fence and plunged over the bank, which at that point is about ten feet below the road. When discovered, the machine was standing right side up in neutral gear. He lay between the road and automobile, and must have been killed instantly.

Mr. Powers, who was one of the best known picture men in Maine, was born near the village of Caribou, and had lived there nearly 60 years. He owned and [illegible] the new [illegible] theater, one of the finest theaters in northern Maine, and was connected with other enterprises which benefited his town. He was a warm hearted public spirited man, and always had a cheerful word for those he met in his daily life. His sudden death has cast a gloom over all who knew him. A widow and four daughters survive.

SEATTLE NEWS NOTES.

H. G. Rosebaum Unites Paramount-Artcraft Offices in Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—The Paramount-Artcraft offices in Seattle were joined this week under the management of H. G. Rosebaum, recently manager of the local Artcraft office. The combined forces will continue at the old address of the Paramount offices, 202 Central building, until a new exchange building is finished for them farther uptown in the vicinity of the other new exchange buildings.

Reckoning for Operators' Prize.

Seattle, Wash.—The catalog of prizes for operators to be given by the World Film Corp. has been received in the Seattle World office, and the office staff has already begun adding and subtracting points on the "report cards" of the different operators. These prizes are given for the return of World films in good condition; and it is not a contest, for each article listed is to be had for so many points. Mr. Koerpel states that the condition of the films returned is already proving this innovation to be effective.

New Houses and Improvements.

Northport, Wash.—W. H. Robinson is building a new concrete theater with [illegible] seating capacity. It will be completed about August first.

Valdez, Alaska.—Miss Rose Johnson is building a new theater at a mining town near Valdez.

Bremerton, Wash.—[illegible] Williams has bought the Eagle's Hall and has remodeled it and opened it as a motion picture theater.

Enterprise, Ore.—Messrs. Miller and Akin have remodeled their Rex theater and put in complete new equipment.

Gooding, Idaho.—A. J. Schubert, of the Arcade Grand, invested in a new Power's 6B machine when on a recent trip to Seattle.

Vancouver Exchange Men Form Organization

British Columbia Exchange Managers Protective Association Will Work to Benefit Exchange Business and Trade Generally—New Officers.

By Chas. S. Thomson, 645 Burrard St., Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Realizing the value of organization, and with a view to bettering conditions all around, the exchange men of this province have formed the British Columbia Exchange Managers Protective Association. This association has been planned on similar lines to those so successfully in operation in the provinces of Manitoba and Alberta. The exchange men feel that in taking this step they are not only working for their mutual advantage, but it will redound to the benefit of everyone concerned, including exhibitors both large and small. The president of the new organization is Mr. DeWees, well known as both an exhibitor and exchange manager, while the secretarial duties have been laid on Mr. [illegible], representative for the [illegible].

Government Considering League's Petition.

Vancouver, B. C.—In view of the unsettled conditions now prevailing in the motion picture business in British Columbia, the Government has been strongly urged to refrain from putting its War Tax Measure into active operation until later in the year. On behalf of the Exhibitors' Association, Hector Quagliotti, acting secretary, wrote to the Hon. H. C. Brewster, Prime Minister of the Province, asking for the postponement of the act until September, and also suggesting that the Government provide each theater with a ticket chopper. Mr. Quagliotti has just received the following letter from the Premier:

Victoria, June 14.

Hector Quagliotti, Esq.,
Vancouver, B. C.

Dear Sir:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 12th inst., re putting into force the "Amusement Tax Act," and your intimation that a ticket chopper be provided for each theater free of charge.

I am referring your letter to Hon. J. W. deB Farris, Attorney-General, who is conferring with the Hon. John Hart, Minister of Finance, in respect to the administration of this Act. Your recommendation will have their careful consideration.

Yours truly,
H. C. BREWSTER.

It is to be sincerely hoped that the Attorney-General and the Minister of Finance will see their way clear to act in accordance with the suggestions of the Exhibitors' Association. As matters stand at present, any additional burden upon the theaters might be the last straw that would "break the camel's back."

Working to End Street Car Strike.

Vancouver, B. C.—The street car strike on the B. C. Electric Railway system still continues to have its disastrous effect upon the business of the centrally located theaters. Last Saturday was a record-breaker in nonattendance. The crowds at the boxoffices were conspicuous by their absence. The eager and expectant throngs who patiently wait in line to get inside the doors on Saturday nights were nowhere to be seen. The cashiers of the Granville and Hastings street theaters looked bored to death as their audiences straggled in by twos and threes. Anybody could get a seat at any time of the evening, a condition never before known on a Saturday night. The strike has now become general. At first only Vancouver and New Westminster were affected, but to cap the climax, the epidemic has spread to Victoria, and conditions there are now on a par with those in Vancouver. A Victoria exhibitor who is spending today in Vancouver, on being asked the question "How's business?" reverently took off his hat and exclaimed "Speak respectfully of the dead." Nobody is cussing the strike more than the operators. Fully two-thirds of them live in the suburban districts, and the only means of transportation apart from "Shanks' mare" is an occasional over-crowded jitney car. Yesterday one of the principal theaters was late in opening on account of the operator being unable to get down on time. The civic authorities and all the business interests in town are now getting busy to see what they can do to bring the strike to a termination. The Government is being asked to appoint a commission to take the matter in hand at once, and pending the decision of this commission, the men will be asked to lay aside their grievances and resume work. Probably by the time these lines appear the trouble will be over.

"Battle Cry of Peace" Back in Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager Brown of the Maple Leaf, is now showing "The Battle Cry of Peace" at his Granville street theater. It is a remarkable thing that although this picture was written specially for, and specially aimed at, the American public, it has nevertheless had more repeat performances in this city than any other picture ever exhibited. Its present engagement at the Maple Leaf makes the sixth time it has been exhibited in Vancouver. It appeared twice last year, and now after running its second week at the Rex, it has been shown at three other theaters in succession, appearing three days in each to capacity houses. Really a remarkable record!

Seattle Film Men Aid in Red Cross Drive

Picture Business Takes Lead in Work to Raise Millions for Relief of Wounded—Slides in Every Theater—"Mercy Monday" Benefits.

By S. J. Anderson, [illegible] Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Motion pictures have done more than their share in aiding the Red Cross drive for funds in Seattle. At every theater slides are being shown at every performance illustrating the work of the Red Cross and urging each person to do his share. At the Coliseum one evening an army officer who is campaigning for the Red Cross addressed the audiences and a nice sum was collected at the close of each [illegible]. The front of the Clemmer was decorated with some of the huge red crosses that have been walking about the street with no visible method of transportation until one looked close enough at the bottom to see the two feet of a small boy.

On June 25, set apart as "Mercy Monday," the entire receipts of the Clemmer and the salaries of all the employees as well were donated to the Red Cross. On that day, also, there was an open air meeting in Bon Marcha Park, a small square in the midst of the shopping district, where motion pictures of the Red Cross at work were shown, and the Sarah Bernhardt feature, "Mothers of France," completed the picture program.

The H. A. Johnson Company handled the slides for the society and A. E. Lightfoot, one of Mr. Johnson's former employees, gave up his own business for the present in order to be constantly on the job and see to it that all the exhibitors get a chance to show the slides.

In fact, in patriotic work, no one class of men in Seattle are doing more, if as much, as the men in the picture industry.

Seattle Vitagraph Manager Narrowly Escapes Drowning

Seattle, Wash.—A. [illegible] Faris, manager of the local Vitagraph office, was nearly drowned when his canoe capsized in Puget Sound off Bainbridge Island on June 10. Mr. Faris was spending the week-end at a friend's summer home on the island and had gone out for an early morning's canoeing, when a sudden heavy swell upset the boat. Although a good swimmer, Mr. Faris' strength was not equal to the shock of the intensely cold water, combined with the treacherous undercurrents and the heavy weight of his clothing; and, after swimming a hundred feet or more he began to call for help. Fortunately, Richard Corbaley, a 13-year-old Boy Scout, was standing on the shore; and, quickly throwing off his uniform, he swam to the rescue. Owing to Mr. Faris' self-control in not struggling, the boy was able to tow him to the shore and another Boy Scout aided in dragging the exhausted man onto the dock. Mr. Faris is asking his friends now if any of them want to buy a canoe. He doesn't think he'll need it any more this summer, anyway.

New Film Advertising Exchange For Seattle

Seattle, Wash.—J. H. Ringwood has opened up the offices of the Acme Film Advertising Service at 419 Joshua Green building. His stock in trade will be animated cartoons and educational and industrial films.

Paramount Makes Contract in Philadelphia

Producer and F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger Make Contract Direct on Open Booking Plan —First Runs in Nine Philadelphia Theaters—Big Sum Involved.

From F. O. Armoto, 144 Mt. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The signing of a contract between the Paramount-Famous Players' Exchange and F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, will now give the theatrical man of this city the first run of Paramount features at his nine theaters. The Paramount Corporation under the new policy gives the exhibitor the privilege of dealing directly with the producer.

The Paramount-Nirdlinger contract is said to be one of the largest ever made between producer and exhibitor. It was negotiated by Columbus Stamper, representing Nirdlinger, and Edgar Moss, of the Paramount exchange, in this city.

New Carr & Schad Theater Puts Old Out of Business.

Reading, Pa.—The Empire, one of Carr and Schads' theaters, having a capacity of 600 seats, was compelled to close recently. After 9 years of continuous success the end came, after the New Colonial theater belonging to the same interests had opened its doors. The Colonial, considered one of the handsomest and most modern of photoplays, having a seating capacity of 2,000, just naturally attracted the public until it was noticed that the patronage had almost deserted the Empire after which it wisely retired from the field.

Jay Emanuel Back at His Desk.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Jay Emanuel, manager of the Park and Jefferson, has just returned from his honeymoon and will settle down for a good summer season. He was married to Miss Belle Flock on June the 5th.

H. M. S. Kendrick Representing "Gray Ghost."

Philadelphia, Pa.—Manager H. M. S. Kendrick will present the "Gray Ghost" serial beginning Friday, June 29,. for the next fifteen weeks.

"Wild and Wooly" at the Stanley.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Douglas Fairbanks in "Wild and Wooly" received a big ovation upon its premier showing at the Stanley on Monday, June 25, where it will continue throughout the week. In addition to the usual presence of a large number of autos parked on both sides of Market street, there was a line of people on the outside awaiting admission for the evening performance until 9 o'clock.

A group of about fifty sailors who were present at the evening performance gave three hearty cheers for Fairbanks upon leaving the theater.

Local Theaters Aid Red Cross.

Philadelphia, Pa.—In the final drive for Philadelphia's subscription to her $3,000,000 Red Cross Fund, the society has received the co-operation of our largest theaters and photoplay houses. At the Stanley and Strand on Monday night, June 24, two pretty girls with the red cross band around the arm were in the lobby of the theater to take contributions. The Family, Victoria, Palace, Great Northern, Alhambra and a large number of other theaters all over the city are doing the same thing.

Few Airdomes Hereabouts.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Airdomes are gradually becoming extinct here. This year there have not been any additions and the number remaining is very small. Uncertainty of the weather and the modern cooling facilities of the present theaters are attributed the scarcity of them.

"Serpent's Tooth" Passes Censors.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"The Serpent's Tooth" a Mutual feature with Gail Kane in the stellar role has been passed by the board of censors with a few changes in the subtitles. The production has already been shown at the Troga theater with good results.

Abe Compertz Has Charge of Amber Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Abe Compertz is now managing the Amber theater at Frankford avenue and Norris street.

W. D. Reel at Helm of Ruby Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. D. Reel, the new manager of the Ruby theater, has had a long and varied theatrical career and has also been an officer in the United States Navy. His new appointment was the outcome of his successful efforts at the 333 Market Street theater where he was formerly employed.

Nickelodeum Transformed Into Family Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Family theater which was practically rebuilt under the personal supervision of Alexander R. Boyd is a worthy model of up-to-date enterprise. This one-time nickelodeum has been richly decorated, handsomely furnished and thoroughly ventilated. It has also been equipped with a beautiful Kimball organ and two new projection machines.

Allen May Now with Bluebird.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Allen May who recently joined the Lewis J. Selzwick forces has received the appointment of the Bluebird photoplays' distribution here. Mr. May's popularity is well-known throughout the territory.

Geo. T. Ames Will Manage at Goldwyn Office.

Philadelphia, Pa.—George T. Ames, formerly district manager of the General Film Company, will manage the distribution of the new Goldwyn program from his new office at 13th and Vine streets.

New Features This Week.

Philadelphia, Pa.—First run productions to make their initial presentation here were Douglas Fairbanks in "Wild and Woolly" at the Stanley.

Ethel Barrymore in "Her Greatest Power" at the Victoria.

Alice Brady in "The Divorce Game" at the Strand with Antonio Moreno in "A Son of the Hills."

Also Valeska Suratt in "The Street" at the Palace. The Arcadia will show "Her Condoned Sin" for an entire week.

M. P. Employees' Association Arranges Metropolitan Picnic.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Motion Picture Employees' Association have secured the Philadelphia & Reading's best date for their annual excursion to New York and Coney Island, which occurs on Sunday, July 15. The film people, as usual, have arranged things beforehand for the comfort and enjoyment of the excursionists. The train will leave the Reading Terminal, 12th and Market streets, at 8 a. m., and returning, will leave Liberty street, New York, at 10 p. m. This trip gives the people a chance to see the world's famous city with its mansions and skyscrapers, also the Great White Way and thousands of other interesting sights. Those wishing to visit the nation's most famous playground, Coney Island, can make arrangements immediately either at Liberty street or 23rd street stations. The season at Coney Island will then be in full swing, and the visitors can enjoy themselves to their hearts' content, even as far as taking a dip in the ocean. The excursion is being managed by Dave Lodge, of 1332 Arch street, Philadelphia.

Members of Local 307 Back from Tours.

Philadelphia.—Walter G. Murrey of Local No. 307 has just returned from a successful tour with "Civilization." Abott Oliver and Clement Rizzo of the above local have also returned with the close of an eventful season with "Intolerance."

William Booger Buys the Tioga Theater

Philadelphia.—William Booger of the Dreamland has purchased the Tioga theater at 17th and Venango streets. He will not, however, take over the active management of the house until late in the fall.

Gave Film Party to Bluejackets.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Over 150 Bluejackets were the guests of The Mothers' Army and Navy Camp Committee at a motion picture entertainment furnished by The Press-Evening Telegraph, Thursday and Saturday evening June 21 and 23. Pictures were contributed by Paramount, Triangle, Metro, Fox, K-E-S-E and the General Film Co. The Mothers' Army and Navy Camp Committee consist of a number of society women who have made it their purpose to find proper entertainment for soldiers or sailors on leave.

Philadelphia.—The Savoy, 1211 Market street, has just made alterations which include the completion of a ladies' retiring room and a gents' smoking room in the basement of the theater. The whole arrangement was carefull supervised during its construction by General Manager Frank Buhler, of the Central Market Street Company, who saw that the appointments included the latest and most up-to-date furnishings.

Philadelphia.—P. A. Bloch, manager of the local General Film Exchange, announces that twenty $50 Liberty Bonds have been subscribed by the employees of this office. All but three of the men employed here are subject to draft and quite a serious problem remains to be dealt with when they are called for service next fall.

Pittsburgh News Letter

Specialty Film Opens West Virginia Exchange.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Specialty Film Company, 938 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has opened its new West Virginia branch office at Wheeling and placed in charge J. A. Stout as manager. Attractive quarters have been taken at 1400 Market street, where a large stock of films is now being carried. The office will specialize in regular service, although the firm's line of features will be at the disposal of West Virginia exhibitors. Mr. Stout is well known among the trade throughout the state, having been with the Mutual and General in Wheeling for four years, and the success of the new Specialty branch seems assured.

Pitt Theater Gives Liberty Bonds to Lucky Seat Holders.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, carried out a timely and effective advertising plan during the week of June 25 by giving away ten $50 Liberty bonds to the lucky seat-holders for the opening performances of "The Bar Sinister." Much additional interest was stimulated by the offer of the bonds, which were purchased by Manager William Moore Patch for this purpose.

C. C. McKibbon in Charge of Goldwyn Office.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has established an office in the Seltzer Film building, Pittsburgh, and the initial business of the new branch has been highly gratifying. C. C. McKibbon, formerly manager here for the Triangle Film and one of the best-known men of the trade, is in charge.

J. K. Grier Will Manage Triangle Exchange.

MORE PITTSBURGH NOTES.

E. J. McGurty, head of the National Film Booking Service, reports much success with its special feature, "Her Condoned Sin," which is now having a remarkable run at the Olympic theater, McKeesport, and states that the Motoy Comedies are also booking heavily. Word was received from the State Censor Board on June 25 that it had reversed its decision by which several eliminations had been made in "Her Condoned Sin" and that the subject can be shown in this state exactly as produced.

The Quality Film Company, 404-406 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, reports that the Billy West comedies are meeting with a lively demand in this territory, and the most important bookings being the east end Cameraphone theater and the downtown Cameraphone, each to run two days. Other recent bookings are the Majestic theater, Ellwood City, and the Olympic theater, Greenville.

Takes Show on Motor from Town to Town

Ohio Has a Traveling Exhibitor Who Makes a Round of Country Villages and Plays for a Night or Two, Then Passes on to the Next Stand.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Any person who says the movies have their theaters in every little town or village in the country is mistaken.

There are a lot of little "cross-road" places that have no theaters. And this has opened up a field for business for an Elyria man, H. M. Orvis, 631 West River street. For three years he has had a traveling picture show under a tent, making the smallest towns. Here is what he says:

"I go from town to town with my outfit loaded upon a motor truck. Sometimes my jumps are ten miles, sometimes thirty. I don't advertise in advance that I am coming. I stay three nights usually, and after the first night I have big crowds. The farmers come from miles around to see the show.

"For instance, the two weeks beginning today, June 19, I will show in La Grange, Spencer, Sullivan, South Amherst, Kipton and Wakeman. Just imagine living in such a town all winter or on a farm. No movies to see, nothing. Then when I come along the folks think it's great. I don't show them features with famous stars because they are too expensive for me. I have found, however, that although they never saw Chaplin, the people in these communities want to see him.

"This year the farmers tell me they enjoy the pictures more than ever. They are working hard to increase the crops and need some recreation. Another thing, our show will please the farm hands who are going from the city. My show returns to the same places several times a season."

Cleveland, O.—Rose Tapley, former Vitagraph player, now touring the United States in the interest of better films, arrived in Cleveland June 25.

She gave several talks in theaters, including the Stillman, Monarch, Homestead and Wind-a-meer, also at the Screen club and before the Y. W. C. A. and church audiences.

Miss Tapley's engagements were arranged by the Cleveland Cinema club.

Cleveland, O.—The Lake Erie College for Women at Painesville, near Cleveland, has just completed a course in photoplay writing, under Miss Esther E. Shaw, professor of English.

It was an experiment in which Miss Shaw sought to show the faculty that writing for the screen is just as important a literary work nowadays as writing for the stage or for books.

Cincinnati News Letter.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

Plans for New Theater Become Definite.

CINCINNATI, O.—The plans of McMahan & Jackson for their new house on Sixth street have reached definite shape, and application has been made to the city authorities for the building permit required to enable them to remodel the property which will be used for the purpose. The Greater Cincinnati Amusement Company made the application, indicating in it that the plans hertofore announced, for a large auditorium, with a main entrance and lobby on Sixth street and another entrance on Vine, will be fully carried out. The cost of the work will be in the neighborhood of $22,000, exclusive of the equipment which will be subsequently placed in the theater.

Piqua Amusement Co. Incorporated.

Piqua, O.—The Piqua Amusement Co. has been incorporated by Harry W. and O. G. Kress, J. C. Hughes, A. W. DeWeese and W. F. Henne. The company is capitalized at $30,000, and will operate an up-to-date photoplay house.

S. Hickenlooper Sells Interest in Park Hall Theater.

Oakley, O.—Smith Hickenlooper, who has for a long time owned a one-third interest in the Park Hall theater, a big house on Madison road in Oakley, has disposed of his interest to William John and Bert Moorman, who own the other two-thirds, thus making Messrs. John and Moorman sole owners of the theater. The house is the largest east of the Orpheum and has been a pronounced success since its construction a few years ago. Mr. John has managed it from the start and has maintained a policy of showing only high-class feature pictures at reasonable admission prices.

"Vicar of Wakefield" Booked in Several Cincinnati Houses.

Cincinnati, O.—The engagements booked at several Cincinnati houses, starting with the downtown theaters, of Frederick Warde's production of "The Vicar of Wakefield," indicates one of the first fruits of the work of the new Cincinnati Screen League on behalf of better films. It is stated that there were many leading people, prominent in civic work, who urged the booking of this and similar films, and that exhibitors who were approached on the subject readily consented to the plan, pointing out that they are entirely willing to show classic films if their patrons will come to see them.

"Mothers of France" Seen at Big Benefit.

Cincinnati, O.—A complimentary showing of the great Bernhardt film, "Mothers of France," by the World Film Corporation, was given at the Hotel Sinton on Monday evening under the auspices of the Cincinnati branch of the National Association of the Orphans of the War, a French organization which is headed locally by Eugene C. Pociey, the French consul. The exhibition was in the nature of a benefit for the organization, no admission being charged, but a voluntary offering being taken, which gave a very handsome sum for the benefit of the orphans. The film was loaned without charge by the World office, while the Hotel Sinton gave the use of the big auditorium on the ninth floor.

Red Cross Benefit at Majestic in Athens.

Athens, O.—The management of the Majestic theater, with the co-operation of the Boy Scouts of Athens, gathered in several hundred dollars for the Red Cross at six performances of the war picture, "Womanhood." More than 1,500 persons saw the picture, tickets being sold all over the city by the youngsters in the Scouts.

Lon S. Muchmore New Triangle Manager.

Cincinnati, O.—Lon S. Muchmore, the new manager of the Triangle, succeeding C. C. Hite, furnishes a fine example of the way a good man can go up in the film business. Three years ago he started as a salesman for the Mutual, later becoming assistant manager, moving to the Triangle in a similar capacity, and is now bossing the Triangle exchange.

New Goldwyn Offices at 215 E. Fifth St., Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, O.—The new Cincinnati offices of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, of which C. C. Hite is manager, have been established at 215 E. Fifth street, occupying the quarters recently vacated by the Pathe Film Corporation.

Cincinnati Theater and Business Notes.

The Colonial has been running some first-class attractions lately, from box-office and artistic standpoints alike. Marjorie Rambeau in "The Mirror" was one of these, while Charles Chaplin in "The Immigrant" made a tremendous hit, as the little comedian's pictures usually do.

"Womanhood," a patriotic spectacle, held the boards for a week at the Grand Opera house, a Blackton-Brady production which made a popular hit on account of its timely nature. The war is beginning to make an impression, and so are pictures dealing with the war.

The Film Exchange Building, at Seventh and Main, is an accomplished success. The Pathe, World and other exchanges there are now thoroughly at home and are getting along nicely in the same building, in spite of the dark predictions made by some that it wouldn't work for several exchanges to be housed together.

Cincinnati, O.—The success of the newest Chaplain release, "The Immigrant," at the Family theater, caused Manager Libson to break his new rule for three programs a week, the demands of his patrons for another chance to see the film inducing him to give it two-thirds of the week instead of the one-third originally intended.

Buffalo News Letter.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Red Cross Day Observed by Local Theaters.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Saturday was "Red Cross Moving Picture Day," on which the local exhibitors contributed 25 per cent of their gross receipts to the $1,500,000 Red Cross fund raised in Buffalo.

Houses Observing Red Cross Day.

Manager Mosher of the Palace, Manager Crabb of the Strand and Manager Franklin of the Hippodrome, were among the promoters of "Red Cross Day at the Theaters." They were joined by the managers of these houses: Shea's Olympic, Academy, Lyric, Family, Keith's New, Happy Hour, Regent, New Aerial, Majestic Habit, Emblem, Liberty, Jefferson, Linden, Amherst, Jubilee, Grant, Try-It, Park, Elmwood, Victoria, Ellen Terry, Circle, Frontier, Pastime, Rialto, Allendale, Marlowe, Premier, Central Park, Kensington, Marine, Cazenovia, Como, Abbott, Red Jacket, Oakdale, Masque, Unique, Clinton, Elk, Venus, Columbia, Colonial, Variety, Kusciosko, Broadway Lyceum, Fillmore, Art, Savoy, Temple, Plaza, New Arcadia, Sun, Sylvia, Fillmore Palace, Lilly, Lincoln, Sheldon, Cozy Corner, Bison, Victor, Oriole, Casino, Lovejoy, Hope, Star and Elite.

At the performance at the Temple theater, Rochester, under the auspices of the Red Cross, the Pathe film, "The Battle of the Somme," was shown. Various scenes at the front and many arguments and appeals for contributions were also shown. It was expected that the Red Cross committee would also show the Pathe picture, "The Tanks," at the Temple, Rochester.

G. H. Christoffers to Manage Victor Service.

Buffalo, N. Y.—G. H. Christoffers has been appointed manager of the Victor Film Service, Buffalo, which handles the Universal output. Mr. Christoffers has been covering the state for the Victor

Co. and therefore numbers among his personal friends a long list of exhibitors. He is president of the Buffalo Screen Club and has been responsible for many of the activities of that organization. Now that he is permanently located in Buffalo he is planning to inject new life into the club and impress on the members the advantages of having regular business meetings and outings during the summer. Mr. Christoffers has always been a stickler in giving the exhibitors gilt-edge service. This policy he will [illegible] follow at the Victor exchange.

More than [illegible] miles of electric wire was used in the construction of the machine, which is operated by electric power. The largest pipe of the organ is [illegible] feet long and [illegible] inches in diameter, while the smallest pipe is the size of a straw and is three-quarters of an inch long.

Exchanges Will Have to Get Rid of Lost Motion.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The moving picture industry and other lines will be confronted in a very short time with a great shortage of labor, according to an expert who recently addressed an association of Buffalo business men. In proposing a solution of the difficulty he [illegible] should take in men whose sole job will be to constructively criticise the business methods of the firm and thereby eliminate unnecessary operations. The speaker said his company recently hired six young students to criticise and suggest better methods for the concern. The improvements suggested by the young men surprised even old experienced managers and considerably increased the business. The speaker said the business manager was immersed in routine and was unable to see his business as a whole, while the youths, on the other hand, were free to spend their time in watching the entire operations of the company.

World Film Prize for Condition of Film.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. E. Kimberley, manager of the World Film, Buffalo, is conducting an operators' contest in which considerable interest is being taken. Each month a prize will be given to the operator who returns the company's films in the very best condition. Close tabs are being kept on the condition of the film when it goes out and when it returns. Deductions will be made from a maximum percentage according to the damage done to the film and the operator in this territory who shows the highest record receives the prize. The winner for June will be announced shortly after the end of the month. Manager Kimberley is visiting the exhibitors of his territory. He will be absent two weeks. He has appointed Jean J. Crandall Eastern representative of the World. G. L. Le Sage, traveling representative, has been transferred from Buffalo to the World's New York office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—W. F. Seymour of the Triangle, Buffalo, has returned from a visit to the company's New York office. He has appointed Edward Callahan road representative, handling Keystone comedies.

Toronto Needs Money---May Tax Theaters

City Can Levy on Each Theater Only $150 a Year, But This Is Three Times the Present Municipal Tax—Film Men Look for An Increase.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—According to a report submitted to the Board of Control by City Solicitor Johnston, the municipality can impose a fee upon moving picture theaters no greater than the maximum imposed by the Province under the Theaters and Cinematographs Act of Ontario. This means that the city's efforts to increase the revenue from the theaters will be limited to $150 per theater, but this is $100 more than is collected yearly by the city at present. In other words, the city will be able to triple the revenue from the moving picture theaters, it is declared.

"The city is bankrupt," declared Controller Foster, recently, when discussing the civic finances. "When we consider a [illegible] of money, we first have to find out if the bank will [illegible]."

This statement [illegible] the strait in which the city finds itself and the film men around town fully expect an increase in taxation upon the various theaters. [illegible]

David Stewart Now Owns Red Mill Theater.

Hamilton, Ont.—Manager David Stewart of the Red Mill theater, Hamilton, has assumed ownership of the house through a reorganization of the operating company. It is understood that T. J. Stewart, a member of Parliament, has disposed of his interest in the theater.

David Stewart has gained the reputation of being one of the best showmen in Ontario and the Red Mill has been considerably improved and enlarged during the several years that he has been in charge of the house as manager. It is a notable fact that Stewart has dealt throughout, from the beginning, with the Universal Film Company and he has always stated that considerable of his success [illegible] to the reliability of Universal releases.

New Jottings Caught in Passing.

Toronto—Official advices from Gananoque, Ontario, contain the information that Sanford Delaney of that town has engaged Architect B. Dillon of Brookville to draw plans for the the rebuilding of his theater in Gananoque, the cost of the work to be $4,000. The improvements, which will consist of general alterations, will be done by day labor this summer under Dillon's supervision.

Toronto—A. J. Reddy, for several months the Toronto branch manager of the General Film Company, has severed his connection with the company and is identifying himself with another corporation.

Toronto—The Pathescope of Canada, Limited, is on a still hunt for camera men throughout Ontario prepartory to the releasing of a news weekly to be known as the "All Canadian News Service."

What Toronto Theaters Do in Summer

Diversified Methods Used By Local Exhibitors to Attract Audiences Through the Heated Period—Other Notes of the Trade.

TORONTO, ONT.—It is [illegible] to note the widely diverging methods employed by the managers of leading picture theaters in Toronto to retain patronage during the warm weather.

The summer policy of the Strand theater, according to a recent announcement by Manager Clarence Robson, will be to change the program [illegible] week. Robson is getting the best available pictures of [illegible] and he is calling the theater the "House of Big Stars." Incidentally, when the theater was opened on Monday morning, June 25, the patrons discovered that the whole interior had been redecorated with festoons of flowers, cool-looking chintzes and cretonnes for drapings and mural decorations and flower-decked pillars while the lighting effect had also been changed.

Manager Roberts of the Regent made it known that the cooling system of his big house was once more in commission and the quality of pictures would be raised, if anything, during the hot weather. There would be only one change of programme per week at this house. Furthermore, Roberts increased the size of his large orchestra to sixteen players. Whenever the automobiles of the officials of the Regent theater are available, Manager Roberts sends the cars to various local military hospitals to get an assortment of returned convalescent soldiers. They are brought to the theater for a show and then are taken back to their respective hospital addresses without charge.

Previous to Saturday, June 23, Manager Robertson of the Regent sent out invitations to every school principal in Toronto for a special children's matinee on the Saturday morning, the programme for which consisted of Douglas Fairbanks' "In Again, Out Again," an educational, a comedy and a news weekly. This was practically all the advertising that Roberts did for the special performance but the house was almost packed at 10 cents a throw.

Manager Willis of the Rialto has been making a special feature of lobby displays and these have become very attractive since the arrival of suitable weather for unusual effects. He has also been mentioning the cooling system of the house while his pictures are well up to standard.

Since the coming of warmer weather, the manager of the Photodrome has also taken to attractive lobby displays. One particularly effective scene arranged was a winter view, with falling paper snow, to advertise "The End of the Trail."

Effect of Negro Exodus on Picture Theaters

Thousands of the Colored Population Moving Northward Cause But Little Decline in Receipts of the Negro Theaters—The Situation in Nashville.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Upward of five hundred negro men have left the city of Nashville alone during the reecnt northward movement of the blacks, a large part of whom leave dependent families here. Nashville, like most large southern cities, has a heavy negro population, but owing to the strong race prejudices existing in this part of the country, separate theaters are in all cases maintained for the white and black races. A number of prosperous theaters for negro patronage are located in the central portion of the city, with a goodly number scattered around the outskirts, and while the theater managers state that the several hundred negroes with their families who have gone north have necessarily affected their box office receipts to a certain extent, in most cases business has been picking up. This is accounted for in a measure by the fact that wages are getting better in the South, railroad shops are paying bigger money, contractors are vieing with farmers for labor, etc., which results in a heavy salary increase for those who remain behind and apply their energies to a useful cause. This necessarily redounds to the benefit of the theater men, who are at present enjoying one of the most prosperous seasons ever experienced in Nashville, in spite of the negro exodus northward.

The opinion has been voiced, however, that if the migration to the northern states continues to the extent it has in the past few months, it will materially affect the receipts of the negro houses in the South. With a check in sight, however, through the refusal of certain railroad lines to provide the passengers with advance transportation facilities, exclusion of labor agents from the confines of a number of states, including Tennessee, and a general lull in the mad rush to cross the Mason-Dixon line, it appears that the negroes will be held closer to the Southland in future. As early in the game as it is a few of the runaways have begun to wander back to the land of sunshine and cotton, fully convinced that the North is not the veritable "Negro Heaven" pictured to them in the majority of cases by designing labor agents, and that the prices they will have to pay "across the river" far exceed their customary expenditures.

A city like Memphis, for instance, embracing a negro population of practically one-third its entire citizenship, would rapidly lose ground should a large per cent. of the negro inhabitants leave for the North. With probably as many, or more negro picture theaters than any other city in Dixie, not only would the amusement people suffer, but business in general would feel the effect of the situation. It is a source of gratification to the theater men that a means of checking the rapid outlet of blacks to the North has been discovered.

Kevstones Back in Nashville

Nashville, Tenn.—The local comedy-loving public received with open arms the announcement that Manager Wassman has again secured the Sennett Keystone comedies at his Fifth avenue house, the Crystal, where they are being shown on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. The Fox-films, Lonesome Luke, Flora Finch, etc., are included in the splendid comedy service which Mr. Wassman is offering his patrons at the Crystal.

Richard Travers Coming to Nashville.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Carson Bradford of the Strand announces that he will present in person to the Nashville public the eminent screen star, Richard C. Travers, K-E-S-E, on Monday, July 2, at which time he will deliver an address at the Strand. Mr. Travers will be accompanied by one of his most popular Essanay productions, "The Man Trail," which he will show during his stay. Mr. Travers will appear first at 10:30 A. M., then after each showing of the film until closing time. Nashville has been exceedingly fortunate this year for a Southern city in having the screen stars appear in person, and in addition to Mr. Travers has seen such favorites as Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Helen Dunbar, Warren Kerrigan and Rose Tapley.

Pennybacker Succeeds Rife at Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Memphis branch of the Mutual Film, announces the appointment of Mr. [illegible] of that office, succeeding E. L. Rife, who resigned several weeks ago. Mr. Pennybacker has entered upon his new duties, and is rapidly learning the requirements of his trade. He is well posted on exchange matters, having been connected with the New Orleans Mutual office prior to his affiliation with the local division.

Tennessee Film News Topics.

Nashville, Tenn.—During Red Cross campaign week, Manager Harry Sudekum had a number of prominent speakers deliver speeches from the stage of the Princess during intermissions, which proved a stimulus to the cause of contributions in Nashville.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Memphis theater managers are still turning over their Sunday receipts to the Associated Charities, which arrangement was put into effect following the recent Sunday closing agitation.

Memphis, Tenn.—H. E. Williams, a prominent exhibitor of Milan, Tenn., was a recent visitor to local exchanges.

Violet Mersereau's Birmingham Dance.

Birmingham, Ala.—Violet Mersereau, popular screen favorite, was recently entertained on her visit to this city with a dance for the Red Cross at the Jefferson County Bank roof garden, following her appearance at the Bijou theater in person. The dance was held under the auspices of the Phelan Park Playground Association, and the proceeds were donated to the Red Cross fund.

Illinois News Letter.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Expect Jackson Bill to Be Vetoed.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Governor Frank O. Lowden is at this writing expected to veto the Jackson bill, which provides the exhibition of pictures tending to incite race hatred. The bill was aimed at "The Birth of a Nation." Attorney General Brundage submitted an opinion that this bill was open to the same objections as the one vetoed several weeks ago, that it is too broad in its provisions and under it almost any picture or show could be prohibited.

Operator Gets Letters Patent.

[illegible], Ill.—Glen Spellman, operator at the Academy theater, has been granted a patent for an automatic cut-out device for moving picture machines.

Theaters and Exhibitors in Illinois.

Tolono, Ill.—C. D. Baker has sold the Dime theater to Basil Simmons and Carl Craemer. The new proprietors will charge ten cents for children as well as for adults.

Paxton, Ill.—E. E. Alger now controls [illegible] theaters in Paxton, having purchased the Crystal theater from Mr. and Mrs. George Cyphers and Dave Udell. This makes the fourth theater he has conducted in Paxton. He built the Crystal and designed both the [illegible] and Crystal theaters. This makes fourteen theaters that he has successfully conducted.

Colfax, Ill.—H. A. Arnold will begin the construction of a new opera house.

Oak Park, Ill.—J. G. Hodgson, Jr., has leased the Oak Park theater to Lubliner & Trinz of Chicago. They will conduct it as a part of their chain. The prices have been reduced to 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. The orchestra will be enlarged.

[illegible], Ill.—[illegible], who recently purchased the Tilford theater, has changed the name to the Liberty theater.

[illegible], Ill.—[illegible], manager of the Strand theater, has taken the lease on the Grand and purchased the moving picture equipment of H. E. Otey. He will operate both houses, but the Grand will give shows only on Saturday nights except on special occasions.

Waukegan, Ill.—Meyer Newfeld is reported to have taken a lease on the Schwartz theater and hotel. A new front for the theater is planned.

Good Airdome Weather Hits Louisville

Sultry Spell Takes Good Business from Indoor, Downtown Theaters—Excellent Business During Past Weeks Leaves No Cause for Complaint.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The [illegible] period of prosperity enjoyed by the Louisville exhibitors apparently has given away to the hot weather. The theaters have been untenable. As a rule the downtown theaters are doing practically nothing either in day or night runs for the present, but had such an excellent run of business during the long favorable period that there is not much kicking being done. The airdomes and parks are getting a big run of business for the present, and the former can certainly afford a bit of good weather, things having been against them for the past two seasons.

The Free and Easy Airdomes.

Operators of airdomes have been having some slight difficulty in keeping baby buggies out of the aisles in such amusement places. State laws prohibit buggies in aisles at regular closed houses, but there is no law on the subject in so far as the airdome is concerned. The public is in the habit of taking far greater liberties in the open air house, smoking, taking off their coats, and sprawling about, and [illegible] feel that they should be allowed to distribute buggies in the aisles. Of course, there is no fire danger, in case some one falls over a go cart, buggy or similar vehicle, and is hurt, the chances are that a suit will be filed against the management. The side lights have to be kept off, especially on bright nights, but persons coming in fresh from a glare of lights are still unable to see clearly in the aisles. For some unknown reason owners of such vehicles never care to park them in the rear and stay on the rear seats, but always want to get about half way down. The result is that neighborhood airdomes are generally to be found with the aisles well obstructed with such vehicles.

Why Local Theaters Dislike Long Intervals.

Louisville, Ky.—The old days of bicycling films from one house to another and using the same reels on two or more houses during the same evening have not been forgotten by the public, although this practice has been stopped by practically all of the exhibitors. In many of the suburban houses which were formerly addicted to this habit the first thought when a long break occurs between films is—the boy hasn't got back yet. Such talk as "get him a new bicycle," or "buy him a Ford," can generally be heard amongst the would-be wits. It is said that bicycling films is not entirely dead even yet, but it has been eliminated until it hardly constitutes an evil.

Theaters to the Fore in Patriotic Work.

Louisville, Ky.—The moving picture theaters have been a great aid to the various patriotic movements, both locally and out through the state. During the recent Red Cross war fund campaign the local theaters ran slides free of charge during the entire campaign, in which Louisville easily raised her quota of the national fund.

Louisville, Ky.—News was received last week to the effect that A. Paul Keith and E. F. Albee, of the Keith interests, had subscribed a lump sum of $10,000 for all of the Keith interests, instead of allowing the individual houses to subscribe individual amounts to the Red Cross fund.

Lexington, Ky.—Friday, June 22, was Red Cross day at the Ben Ali theater, the entire receipts of the day being turned over to the Red Cross Fund. A patriotic program, starring Jack Devereaux in "America—That's All," was featured, while Gregg's symphony orchestra rendered a special musical program.

Winchester, Ky.—Military Day was observed at the Pastime theater on Thursday, June 21, and the entire proceeds of the day were donated to the use of the Second Kentucky Regimental Band. The band gave concerts at the theater. July 2 was designated as Red Cross day, receipts to go to the Red Cross fund.

Paducah's Princess Theater Opens.

Paducah, Ky.—The Princess is the name of the latest acquisition to local theatrical circles, this theater having opened its doors on June 25, with a mixed bill of vaudeville and pictures at both afternoon and evening performances. While the name is new the theater is not a new one, it having formerly been the Majestic, but has been entirely overhauled and rejuvenated from end to end. Charles Carney, late assistant manager of the Kentucky theater, is in charge of the house, and promises good pictures and better vaudeville than is commonly seen in the city.

Outside Capital Plans Theater Near Camp.

Louisville, Ky.—According to a story circulated in Louisville during the past few days a party of Chicago theatrical men, who conducted a circuit of theaters on the Mexican border while the troops were there and also near the Canadian camps, are planning to erect a theater or theaters in the vicinity of the army cantonment. Work on this camp was started recently, and the property now has the appearance of a beehive, hundreds of men being busy getting up the camp buildings.

Stolen Paradise Pleases at Alamo.

Louisville, Ky.—Ethel Clayton, in the five-reel world drama, "The Stolen Paradise," made a very good impression on the audiences at the Alamo theater, and in spite of the exceedingly hot weather a fair attendance was registered.

Special Pictures and Prices---A Discussion

Does It Pay a Theater to Raise Its Admission When a Special Attraction Is Booked? Some Exhibitors Protest Against the Requirement.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Among the many diversified problems which constantly are confronting the exchange, the producer and the exhibitor is one in particular which involves the [illegible] ing prices for special productions. Should a theater establish precedence with a regular day-in and day-out scale of prices or should he charge according to what the attraction [illegible]

Many salesmen for state right exchanges who have been through the state lately have run across exhibitors by the score who don't mind playing the pictures, either straight rental or percentage, but they do object strenuously to the clause in some of the contracts, which asks that they charge an increased admission.

"I have built up this theater at 10 and 15 cent prices and I'll play no picture at a higher scale," says the protesting exhibitor. "I don't want the big special productions if I have to charge more for them [illegible] inferior picture that is not worth the price and they never kick, so I believe in giving them the good with the bad for the same price."

Ira H. Cohen to Steer Toledo Universal.

Toledo, Ohio.—Ira H. Cohen has been appointed manager of the Toledo branch of the Universal to succeed Charles A. [illegible] the job through his long association in the film business, particularly in the selling end. For a while he represented the serial department for Metro, although for [illegible] the Universal at Detroit and has shown [illegible]

Majestic Reduces Price for Summer.

Detroit, Mich.—The Majestic theater, Detroit, announces a slight reduction in prices for the summer, ending September 2, all seats at night being 25 cents instead of a good portion of the house at 50 cents. However, while the price has been reduced the shows are just as good as ever. It's one thing that M. W. McGee, manager, is a crank on—the very best show every week out of the year. As an example, here's the show for the week of June 24: Organ selection; overture; topical review; travelog; comedy, scenic; educational subject; vocal solos by trio; Paramount feature and exit march, a total of eleven numbers on the program. Is it any wonder that business holds up so satisfactorily even during the hot weather months at the Majestic? [illegible]

New Appointments at Paramount-Artcraft.

Detroit, Mich.—The following [illegible] changes and appointments are announced for the Paramount-Artcraft exchange at 278 East Jefferson avenue, Detroit: H. A. Ross is general manager, with special supervision over sales, which means Michigan, sixteen counties in Ohio and six in Indiana. G. L. Allmart, who has been with the exchange for some time, is now office manager and will look after all of the office details, thus relieving Manager Ross of that work. Lew W. Foster is city sales representative. Geoffrey Jefferson, a former exhibitor, is in full charge of publicity, and G. Knox Hadow is in charge of the booking department.

Mr. Ross is planning a number of important changes in the building, such as putting the shipping department in the basement, the installation of a mezzanine floor and the installation of a projection room.

Shift in Local Plans of Projector Companies.

Detroit, Mich.—There has been quite a shift in the representatives of leading projection machines in Detroit. The Power's will hereafter be distributed exclusively in Michigan through the Detroit and Grand Rapids offices of the United Theater Equipment Corp., while the Simplex projector will be distributed exclusively through the Gardiner Theater Equipment Co., 101 West Fort street. A. P. Lombard, former Michigan representative for Simplex, has been made special representative and for a while will work out of the Gardiner office.

A. P. Coleman Heads Grand Rapids Equipment Co.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—A. F. Coleman has been appointed manager of the Grand Rapids office of the United Theater Equipment Corporation.

Butterfield to Build Two Theaters.

Battle Creek, Mich.—Col. W. S. Butterfield [illegible] that two new theaters will be erected in Battle Creek, Mich. Both houses will seat about 1,200 people and all the seats will be on one floor. Work will probably start by the 15th of July. What probably stimulated Col. Butterfield to build these houses is the fact that the U. S. Government is establishing a cantonment at Battle Creek that will house 20,000 people.

Pontiac, Mich.—The Howland theater, Pontiac, is undergoing alterations that will cost $10,000 or more. Practically the entire theater is being redecorated, and complete new theater equipment installed. A. J. Kleist, proprietor of the Howland, has also placed an order for two new Style S, Simplex machines to be installed in the New Eagle theater, which he owns in addition to the Howland.

MICHIGAN NEWS NOTES.

By F. H. Madison.

New Theaters in Michigan—Notes.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—O. Rippy has sold the Apollo theater to J. S. David, who will make a number of changes including redecorating. Universal service will be used.

Muskegon Heights, Mich.—Lewis Caplan of Baldwin, Mich., is the organizer of a company which will erect a $20,000 theater at Jefferson street and McKinney avenue. It will be a one-story brick and will be patterned after the "Robinhood" in Grand Haven.

Flint, Mich.—The Garden theater, one of the Butterfield houses, will be remodeled, John Everson, architect of Chicago, having made plans. Changes include a new seating arrangement, heating plant, redecorating, ventilation and additional exits.

Wisconsin Theater Changes—Snap Shots.

Two Rivers, Wis.—The Opera House moving picture show is under the management of Frank Rehrauer, effective July 1. He will give three shows a week, Sunday, Wednesday and Saturday nights. The Gloe-Naidl Orchestra, which has been managing two theaters, will continue to operate its own picture show.

Antigo, Wis.—John Hanousek has purchased the Antigo theater for $10,000, and will remodel it for use as an armory for the National Guard.

Hard to Collect Sunday Show Donations

Indianapolis Exhibitors Fall Behind in Pro Rata Charity for Privilege of Keeping Open Sundays—Tax Levied by Local Picture Men's Association.

(Special to Moving Picture World, from Indiana Trade News Service.)

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—A complaint, charging two policemen with attempting to "scare" him into contributing to the Bell charity fund, maintained by contributions from Indianapolis moving picture show owners who operate their places on Sundays, was made public last week by Frank W. Noble, proprietor of the Pleasant Hour theater, a neighborhood picture house at Roosevelt and Sheldon avenues.

Mr. Noble charges that the two patrolmen annoyed the patrons of his theater last Sunday by standing in front of the building and asking all those who entered for their names and addresses. He said he had been informed previously that he is in arrears in his payments to the charity fund, and that he is expected to settle the account or he will "be in trouble."

Mr. Noble says his allotment for this fund is $2 a week, the money paid by theater owners being fixed according to the capacity of the theaters. He says that for a long time he had been a regular contributor to the fund, but that some time ago he decided that "charity begins at home," and instead of paying $2 a week to the Bell charity fund he took up personal charity work in his own vicinity and gave amounts varying from $5 to $15 a week to persons he knew were in urgent need of assistance.

Soon afterward, according to Mr. Noble, he was informed that the charity fund managers demanded that he continue his payment to the fund, and he was advised to call at the office of Samuel V. Perrott, chief of police, to make arrangements for a settlement. He said he visited the office of the chief of police several times, but was unable to find Mr. Perrott there. A short time after his visits a sergeant told him, he says, that it would not be well for him and the police force to disagree and advised him to take the matter up again. He said he then went to the headquarters of the charity fund and was told that he owed about $178. He announced last week that all the money taken in by the theater Friday night would be turned over to the Red Cross.

H. G. Spellman, chairman of the Bell fund committee, said he wished to make it plain that the committee had nothing whatsoever to do with the alleged actions of the police at Noble's theater. He said every reasonable effort has been made to get theater owners to contribute to the fund, and that Mr. Perrott, chief of police, had shown an effort to try to help the fund, but that anything Perrott did was done on his own responsibility.

Mr. Spellman said that A. C. Zaring, secretary of the motion picture men's organization in Indianapolis, had complained at times because more vigorous efforts were not made to make some of the delinquent theater men pay up. He said lists showing the record of payments made and due are handed every month to Mr. Zaring and the chief of police.

Mr. Spellman explained that last January he made the proposition to the picture men that all delinquents' dues be scratched off the books and a new start be made. This was done, but some of the men failed to pay the assessments, which were fixed by the motion picture men's association, he said. He said Mr. Noble is back in his dues only since January and owes $48 instead of $178.

The only paid employee of the fund committee is the woman who has charge of the office. Mr. Spellman said the fund was doing a worthy work, and that the books, which are open to inspection, show the exact disposition of the money. The fund was the outgrowth of a movement started by the motion picture men to contribute a part of their Sunday receipts to charity, as they cannot open legally on Sunday.

Just what right the police had in interfering with the crowd at Noble's theater could not be explained by members of the fund committee. Samuel V. Perrott, chief of police, is on trial in the Federal Court on a poll fraud conspiracy charge and could not be asked for a statement regarding the matter.

Newcastle's Southside Theater Opens.

Newcastle, Ind.—The Southside theater, Newcastle's latest addition to the motion picture field, will be opened for the first time this week. The new theater is located at the corner of Eighteenth street and C avenue, in a new building built especially for that purpose. Ralph Brayton, the manager, has spared no pains to make a clean, comfortable, up-to-date theater for the residents of that section of the city. The theater will be opened with a Mutual program of five reels.

Clara Kimball Young in Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN—Clara Kimball Young surprised the film fans of Minneapolis on Monday morning, June 25, when with her manager, H. I. Garson, she arrived from Kansas City in a rainstorm to spend two days of her vacation here, and incidentally to assist the Red Cross campaign.

Owen Agnew Succombs to Short Illness

Minneapolis, Minn.—Owen Agnew, for some time connected with the Lake Amusement Co., controlling a chain of four neighborhood theaters in the Twin Cities, died suddenly Sunday, June 24, following a short struggle with spinal meningitis.

Washburn and Daly at Lyric Here.

Minneapolis, Minn.—It has been rumored that Bryant Washburn and Hazel Daly may appear at the Lyric theater here July 1, when Washburn's latest, "The Man Who Was Afraid," is shown at the R. & F. theater.

Twin City Screen Club Disbands.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Twin City Screen Club has formally disbanded and each of sixty-six members is to receive this week $2.91 as his share of what was left in the club treasury at the time of its decision to disband.

New Majestic Discontinues Pictures.

St. Paul, Minn.—The new Majestic theater, owned by Ruben & Finkelstein, and for some time conducted as an exclusive Paramount photoplay house, has been converted into a home for a light musical comedy company. The new policy went into effect on Sunday, June 24, and it is expected that in the future all Paramount pictures will be shown at the new Princess, another R. & F. theater, several doors distant from the new Majestic.

Harry L. Hartman on Fishing Trip.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Harry L. Hartman, president of the North Dakota branch of the Exhibitors' League, is spending his annual vacation fishing at Lindstrom, Minn., and watching the Shriners in convention in Minneapolis. Mr. Hartman states that everything is fine and rosey around his home town of Mandan, and that in all probability the number of Dakota theaters to close during the summer will not amount to more than two per cent. It is expected that conditions in the small towns of Minnesota will also be some better than last year, unless the Government begins drafting immediately. The war has had little effect upon the business of the small town exhibitor, according to opinions of several out-of-town theater managers.

L. C. Maas Joins Fox Forces.

L. O. Maas has resigned from the sales force of the Pathe exchange and joined the ranks of the Fox exchange. Mr. Maas has taken his Ford and gone into the wilds of the Dakotas in an effort to boost summer photoplay business by putting Fox features and comedies into Dakota theaters.

Business Notes from the Exchanges.

Manager Newton Davis, of the Bluebird, has booked first run features in three Twin City leading downtown theaters for the week of June 24, namely, the Strand, St. Paul, and the Strand and the Lyric, Minneapolis.

Manager George Law, of the Mutual exchange, staged a special showing of the Mutual war film, "Heroic France," at the Lyric theater, Minneapolis, Tuesday morning June 19. The film was well received, as several contracts indicate.

The Lochren laboratories turned out some speedy service June 25 on the occasion of Clara Kimball Young's visit here. Pictures of Miss Young's arrival at the station, downtown section, and at the Strand were photographed at noon, and at three thirty the same afternoon they were running at the theater, art titles, colored and all. Earl C. Sly and Arthur Lund were the spring behind the "service."

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager E. C. Davies, of the Saxe Brothers exchange, has returned to the city after a short business trip through central and northern Minnesota. He has booked the feature "Enlighten Thy Daughter" in the Blue Mouse theater, St. Paul, Minn., for a week run.

G. P. Bradford, Missouri and Arkansas salesman for the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, was a visitor at the Kansas City office last week.

J. H. Blawitz, salesman for the Kansas City Feature Film Company in Nebraska and western Kansas, was a visitor in the Kansas City office last week. He said that the moving picture industry is very instrumental in aiding the selling of Liberty Bonds and in recruiting.

P. L. Ryan, sales manager for the Standard Film Corporation, returned from an extensive trip over the Standard territory. Mr. Ryan returned unexpectedly as he was not expected for a week longer. He reports good business throughout the territory and says he will use a lot of new ideas he has picked up on his trip. Mr. Ryan has been in consultation with Mr. Cropper.

B. G. Weaire, auditor at the Standard's Kansas City office, went to Des Moines last week to line up the accounting system there with the one at Kansas City.

George H. Charno, general representative for the General Film Company, was a visitor at the Kansas City office

New 1,400 Seat Theater at Junction City, Kan.—Changes in Personnel at Local Distributing Offices—Notes from Theaters and Exhibitors.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Notes From Local Universal Office.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. O. Reese, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company at Kansas City, made a hurry-up trip over the territory last week, visiting the exhibitors in southern Kansas and Missouri.

D. O. Reese.

Jerry Abrams, assistant to the exchange manager, Goldstein, of the New York office, left Kansas City for St. Louis, Mo., June 22.

Wichita Enthusiastic Over "Womanhood."

Wichita, Kan.—F. F. Nine, manager of the Greater Vitagraph office at Kansas City, Mo., was in Wichita, Kan., June [illegible] for the opening show of "Womanhood." Wichita made the showing of this picture a thing that will not soon be forgotten. At three o'clock of the opening day a parade was held which included three bands and the entire crew of seven armored trucks of the Sweeney Automobile School of Kansas City, Mo. These trucks had traveled overland from Kansas City for the occasion. After the parade a fireworks display was held in which fifty bombs were shot off. There was also a tabloid of five acts given before the show proper, which was preceded by speeches from prominent Wichita men. Wichita took an unusual interest in this picture and the soda fountains were selling "Womanhood" frapes, and the hotels announced the picture on their menus.

Standard's Exhibitors' Aid Department Meets With Wide Approval.

Kansas City, Mo.—Since the announcement made several weeks ago that the Standard Film Corporation had secured the services of L. D. Balsly as manager of a newly inaugurated department, "The Exhibitor's Aid and Promotion Department," thousands of inquiries and requests for advertising help have been pouring into Mr. Balsly's office.

The ready response which was made to the Standard's announcement of Mr. Balsly's department shows that the live exhibitor is not an extinct specimen, but on the contrary is present in every community possessing a real motion picture theater. The kind of exhibitor who believes that he is neither too wise or too old, or both, to need new ideas and friendly aid in the building up of business, or who thinks that a sacrifice of pride is necessary in taking advantage of such a service as Mr. Balsly's, is the kind of exhibitor who will let his competitor collect the profits that ought to have gone toward swelling the box office receipts of said foresight-lacking exhibitor.

Kansas City Business Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the home office of the Greater Vitagraph at New York, was a visitor at the local exchange on June 13 and 14. Mr. Goff found the office very prosperous, as the week preceding his visit was the banner week for the Kansas City exchange. Mr. Goff is now making his regular round of visits to the exchanges.

J. T. Haggart, southern Kansas representative for Greater Vitagraph, was in Kansas City, June 23. He has just completed the management of "Womanhood" at Wichita, Kansas, where he assisted Harry Ford, of the Marple theatre. The engagement was a big success there.

New 1,400-Seat Junction City Theater.

JUNCTION CITY, KAN.—A company of Salina men will build a theater at Junction City, Kan., to cost $30,000. The seating capacity will be about 1,400. The building will be of brick and reniforced concrete. This no doubt will prove a good business venture as Fort Riley, the government training camp, is only a short distance away, and Junction City is an outlet for pleasure and business for the soldiers in training.

New Men Added to Mid-West Sales Forces.

Kansas City, Mo.—S. Goldflam and W. H. Rosenbloom have been added to the sales force of the Mid-West Photo Play Corporation. They are now taking the course of training preliminary to the covering of an outside territory. The Mid-West Photo Play Corporation has secured the Trust for distribution. This picture passed the Kansas State Board of Censors with honors. This picture makes the sixteenth of a group of big pictures that this company is handling, all of which are being heavily contracted for by exhibitors in [illegible] Des Moines, Iowa, Omaha, Nebraska and Wichita, Kansas.

Donations to Red Cross Fund.

The Kansas City Feature Film Company and the Art Craft Pictures Corporation contributed $250 to the Red Cross Fund last week.

Independence, Mo.—The Fox Film made a contribution to the Red Cross in the form of a gift picture. This company gave the Lewis theater of Independence, Mo., Theda Bara in "Under Two Flags." The proceeds of this show went wholly to the Red Cross.

O. M. Solinger Joins Standard Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—O. M. Solinger has been added to the sales force of the Standard Film Corporation. He was formerly captain of the Minute Men's Aero Squad here. He has not been assigned a territory yet.

M. G. McCleary Will Boost Educational Films for P. C. Feature Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—M. G. McCleary, formerly superintendent of schools at Syracuse, Kansas, will travel in the vicinity of Syracuse for the Kansas City Feature Film Company. He will specialize in the educational side of the work, attempting to place good pictures in the theaters which have been showing only the cheaper class. Mr. McCleary has had remarkable success with moving pictures at the Community Center at Syracuse and thus attracted the attention of the Paramount people.

C. G. Oliver Promoted to Be Head Booker.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. G. Oliver, formerly assistant booker at the Greater Vitagraph exchange at Kansas City, has been promoted to head booker at the St. Louis, Missouri, office. Mr. Oliver was at the Kansas City office for about seven months.

The Little American Opened at Royal July 2.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Feature Film Co. held a private showing of "The Little American" featuring Mary Pickford, in their new private theater at the plant. This review was attended by local exhibitors to whom invitations were sent out by the company. This picture was shown at the Royal in Kansas City the week of July 2.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Frankel Bros. and Camp Theatrical agency, have incorporated with $10,000 capital stock by Chas. H. Camp, Sol Frankel and L. E. Erwin.

Bluebird, Okla.—Prof. C. N. Patterson has purchased a half interest in the Bluebird theater.

Duncan, Okla.—Manager Burns has recently acquired the Lyric theater, which will hereafter be known as the Bungalow.

Bartlesville, Okla.—Carl Gray has opened a new theater to be known as the New Lyric.

Purcell, Olka.—Work has been begun on the new airdome.

Dilworth, Okla.—Fred Delausanne has leased the Electric theater and has taken charge.

Duncan, Okla.—The Lyric theater has been sold by Bert Isbell to J. F. Burns.

William B. Emrich Dies.

Springfield, Mo.—William B. Emrich, former manager of the Bluebird office and later representative of the Standard Film Corporation, died at Springfield, Mo., June 20. Mr. Emrich was very popular over the territory and numbered his friends among the hundreds. His death was caused by complications setting in after an operation performed last spring, from which he never fully recovered.

Montgomery, Ala., Has Fine New Theater

H. C. Farley's New Empire Motion Picture Theater Opens July 1—Comfort Is the House's Special Aim—Main Floor Has 1,000 Opera Chairs.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—Montgomery is to have an up-to-the-minute motion picture theater in the New Empire, which was scheduled to open on July 1. In this modern house the dream of the manager, H. C. Farley, has about been realized. The New Empire is one of the most beautiful photoplay theaters in the South and it is a pride as well as a credit to the Alabama capital. It was erected at a cost of over $70,000 and is equipped with every appliance that will in any manner add to comfort and perfect projection of pictures. Manager Farley has planned liberally for its fitting out and expense has been secondary. The building is 75x100 feet and there are no galleries. The main floor will have 1,000 opera chairs. Personal comfort is a great asset with the pleasure-loving people in the South and it has as much of an appeal as the character of the pictures. With this in view, Manager Farley has equipped the theater with a ventilating system which represents an independent outlay of $9,200. The air for the auditorium is washed through a spray system and then passed through a refrigerator before being forced into the theater, thus insuring perfect sanitation and comfort. A $7,500 pipe organ has been installed as a supplemental musical provision to the eight-piece orchestra, which will be a permanent feature. The best program and independent pictures will be the policy.

C. W. Greenblatt to Manage Globe Theater.

New Orleans, La.—President E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement company, southern members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announces the purchase of the first feature under the policy of the organization to buy pictures outright. The production is "On Trial" and is to be shown at the Globe theater, which has been taken over by the Saenger interests and has been converted into a first-class house. The Globe has been placed under the management of C. W. Greenblatt, an experienced motion picture theater manager of Texarkana, Texas, and it is the intention to make radical changes in the interior arrangement of the theater and give it a modernizing overhauling.

Exhibitor Also Grows Strawberries.

New Orleans, La.—Bernard Anthony combines motion picture exhibiting and other enterprises at Patchoula, La., and is making a marked success of his ventures. Upon a recent visit to New Orleans he informed the envious denizens of Exchange Row that in addition to doing a reasonably good business in his theater at Patchoula, he has shipped fifteen carloads of strawberries during the season just closed upon which he made a fine profit. In his district more than a million and a half dollars was received during the season for strawberries and this extra money makes the picture business of the town good.

Miss Pauline Taylor Visiting Mae Murray.

New Orleans, La.—Miss Pauline Taylor, of the Southern Paramount Pictures exchange, has gone to New York, where she will be the guest of her friend, Mae Murray, one of the Paramount stars.

Promotions in Local Mutual Office.

New Orleans, La.—Manager Stephens of the New Orleans exchange has been making changes and promotions in his office. In addition to transfers of deserving employes to Memphis, which has already been noted, he has promoted Albert Pirolle to the office of assistant manager and Robert Kelly to chief clerk.

New Orleans, La.—Charles A. Meade, special representative of Pathe exchange, Inc., in New York, spent several days here recently looking over the local conditions. Mr. Meade is an old exchange man and has an intimate knowledge of the conditions in the South.

Iowa Blue Laws Wait for Supreme Court

New Cases Brought Up By Attorney Havner Dismissed By Des Moines Judge—Police Directed to Make No More Arrests Till Supreme Court Decides.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES IA.—When the violators of the Sunday closing law were brought to trial last week Prosecuting Attorney Havner was dealt a decided knockout when Municipal Judge Mershon dismissed the cases on the grounds that decisions had once been granted for their acquittal, and that that was sufficient until the Supreme Court reverses the decisions already handed down in the test cases. Furthermore, Judge Mershon ordered Chief of Police Jackson to ignore Attorney General Havner and to make no more arrests for Sunday closing violations.

So, until a new move comes up the Iowa exhibitors can continue their Sunday shows.

"Barrier" Ends a Record Breaking Run.

Des Moines, Ia.—""The Barrier" closed its five-day run at the Garden Friday, June 22. This splendid picture met with the greatest approval of any production ever shown at the Garden, the house of successful pictures. The last day was better than the first and "lock-outs" were the rule afternoon and evening of every day. "The Barrier" will be returned to Des Moines at an early date. It is booking great all over the territory and is now available in four states, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska.

Marty Williams Back at His Desk.

Des Moines, Ia.—Marty Williams, the popular manager of the local Standard office, is back on the job after a ten-day illness. Phil L. Ryan, the sales manager for the Art Dramas, took care of the office during Mr. Williams' absence.

New Paramount Office Planned Here.

Des Moines, Ia.—It is strongly rumored that the Paramount is planning to open a new Paramount office in Des Moines to be under the management of R. C. LiBeau, present manager of the Des Moines Film and Supply Company. With the new arrangement for Paramount releases, the new office is looked for some time next month.

W. C. O'Hare to Manage Majestic Theater.

Des Moines, Ia.—William C. O'Hare has succeeded Mr. Knapp in the management of the Majestic theater. Mr. Knapp has returned to New York to his beloved legitimate work. O'Hare was formerly with the Laemmle Film of this city in the capacity of salesman, and it is understood that he has purchased stock in the Majestic.

Chas. D. Wells to Conduct Isis Theater in Cedar Rapids.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Isis theater in Cedar Rapids, formerly managed by James Clark, has reverted back to its owner, W. F. Clement, and will be under the management of Chas. D. Wells, former salesman for K-E-S-E out of Minneapolis. Mr. Wells has thoroughly changed the system of the Isis and plans to run the Isis in a most up-to-date manner.

Gulfport's New Dixie Theater Changes Hands

E. N. Hirsch, Exhibitor of Hattiesburg, Takes Over Amusement Concessions at Great Seaside Resort of South—Camp Will Be Nearby.

Edgar N. Hirsch.

GULFPORT, MISS.—E. N. Hirsh, who made an eminent success as a motion picture exhibitor in Hattiesburg, Miss., before he disposed of his interests there to A. J. Xydies, has now bought the New Dixie theater and airdome from Fred Abbly, of Gulfport, and will proceed at once to remodel and thoroughly modernize both. This, however, is but the first step in the plans of this enterprising amusement promoter. He announces that he has secured the concession for the amusements at the Centennial Exposition grounds and is making extensive preparations to erect one of the most diversified institutions for pleasure lovers ever seen in connection with an exposition of this kind. The concessions under the Hirsh enterprise are to be known in their entire grouping as "The Dixie Reef" and every approved form of amusement is to be provided. The fact that the exposition at Gulfport has been postponed until 1919 would make this announcement of little consequence at this time were it not for the tentative arrangements which are expected to demand immediate operations.

The United States in all probability will make a training camp for the marine arm of the service at the Centennial grounds, where a good many of the buildings have already been completed and it is expected that about 10,000 naval recruits will be sent there for training. One of the requirements of the government in the location of a training camp is that the soldiers be provided with motion picture amusement and Manager Hirsh states that his intentions are to have a commodious theater ready for operation with the coming of the troops. This theater is to be at the head of the "Dixie Reef" and it is to be complete in every detail. The plans have been submitted to Director of Concessions and Admissions Osborne and await his approval. In conjunction with the motion picture theater, the Southern Film company has been formed and it is the intention to take moving pictures of interesting events on the camp ground and exhibit them the same day in the theater so the boys can see themselves. That Manager Hirsh has secured a valuable proposition if all of his plans work out, is the concensus of opinion of the motion picture interests.

Gathered Items From Over the State.

Lennox, Ia.—William Holben has installed a Velvetone Gold Fibre screen in his theater in Lennox.

Creston, Ia.—Henry Hoffman, who recently took over the Willard theater in Creston, is said to be making a tremendous success of his new venture. Mr. Hoffman owns the Hoffman theater in Sac City, leaving the management in the hands of Mrs. Hoffman.

Knoxville, Ia.—H. M. Sterne has opened the Opera House in Knoxville and will run first-class motion pictures. Mr. Sterne was in Des Moines last week.

Estherville, Ia.—F. H. Graaf has let the contract for the erection of a new theater building on the site of his old Grand, which burned to the ground last winter. The site has been cleared away and the new $100,000 building will be started at once. A Minneapolis firm secured the contract.

Chariton, Ia.—Henry Leisure has opened a new airdome at Chariton and has engaged Bob Percefield to manage it.

Osceola, Ia.—Sam Adler, formerly an exchangeman in Omaha, has opened the Opera House in Osceola.

Northern California Notes.

Chico, Cal.—Anderson & Wood have sold the Majestic and Broadway theaters, and an airdome, to John Daly. Mr. Anderson will remain with the new owner until September 1. He retains his interests in the house at Redding.

Oakland, Cal.—Larry Lund, formerly of the Pickwick theater, San Diego, has purchased the Broadway theater here.

Oakland, Cal.—Rex Midley, formerly of the Franklin theater, is preparing to open the Reliance theater on San Pablo avenue.

Visalia, Cal.—The Theater Visalia has installed a fine new screen of California manufacture.

Corte Madera, Cal.—An international carnival was here in the Rainbow Film Studio on June 22 for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Boulder Creek, Cal.—Beatriz Michelena and a large company have commenced work on a series of feature productions.

Speedometers Govern Operators at Oakland Kinema.

Oakland, Cal.—The Oakland Kinema, which has been conducted for several months by the Kehrleins, is steadily increasing in favor under the present painstaking management and is meeting with the success achieved by the same interests at Fresno. Since taking over this house about $10,000 have been spent in remodeling and refurnishing it, and it has the appearance of a new theater. The seating arrangements on the lower floor have been changed so that no posts are in the line of vision, loge chairs that are at once roomy and comfortable have been installed, a new organ embodying many original ideas has been put in, a marquee has been added and the front has been improved by the addition of a unique lighting system. Programs in this house are not put on in a haphazard manner, but every change is rehearsed two or three times with the musical accompaniment. The synchronism of music and pictures is a feature in which much pride is taken by Manager Kehrlein and one that is appreciated by discriminating patrons. To secure perfect synchronism, and to run films at speeds best suited to different subjects, automobile speedometers have been installed on the driving mechanism of the projection machines.

Harry Lustig Visits Metro.

San Francisco, Cal.—Harry Lustig, formerly branch manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation at Los Angeles, and also at Denver, but now special representative of this concern, recently spent a week visiting the local branch, coming by way of the Northwest. He will return to his Denver headquarters by way of Los Angeles.

Unprecedented Hot Wave Hits California

Theater Business Hampered by High Temperatures That Drive People to the Beaches—Theater-Going Made Uncomfortable.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—A hot spell of unprecedented intensity and duration has held California in its grip for the past ten days and the theater box-office receipts have slumped in a manner that has caused exhibitors to complain bitterly. This unfavorable weather, following a curtailment in business incident to the talk of war, drafting for military service and the floating of the Liberty Bond Loan, is affecting the amusement business to a degree experienced before by but few exhibitors. In some interior towns airdomes had been opened before the hot spell commenced, but the spring had been such a cold one up to this time that fewer of these were in operation than usual.

The intensity of the heat may be judged from the Government records which indicate that for several days the temperature reached 117 in the shade at San Bernardino, Riverside and other places in Southern California, with Fresno, Sacramento, Red Bluff, San Luis Obispo and other cities in the San Francisco territory touching the 116 mark. Usually a warm wave of this kind lasts for but two or three days, but this one has been on for ten days and is still unbroken. At San Francisco temperatures have been above normal, but 84 degrees above zero has been the highest recorded this year. This has not made theater-going uncomfortable, but has made the many beaches in the vicinity so attractive that moving pictures have been somewhat neglected.

Fox Manager Off for New York.

San Francisco, Cal.—William [illegible], manager of the local Fox exchange, is off this week for New York to attend the annual meeting of branch managers of the William Fox Film Corporation. He expects to be gone about two weeks and will bring exhibitors a fund of information concerning new releases, new stars and any changes that may be made in the system of distribution.

Nat Magner Back from Buying Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—Nat. A. Magner, of the company bearing his name, is back from a buying trip to New York and announces that he has secured the California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaiian Island rights to "The [illegible]," a production with which he was greatly impressed. Copies of this film are expected shortly and a trade showing will then be given.

"The Planter" Soon to Be Released.

San Francisco, Cal.—Harry C. Drum, producer of "The Planter," the scenes of which were made in Guatemala and California, is in San Francisco awaiting the developing and printing of the film by the Duhem Company. The production will be presented first in Nevada and Mr. Drum will then go East to arrange for its release throughout the country.

Ben Brodsky Visits U. S. Again.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ben Brodsky, who has chosen China for his field of operations, and who brought some wonderful Chinese pictures to this country last year, is back again from the Orient and left for New York on urgent business after a short stay here.

Big Features Booked for Market St. Theater.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Market Street theater has booked "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Civilization," "War Brides" and "The Whip" for early presentation. Each of these features have already been shown for three weeks at downtown houses, demonstrating the fact that long runs are possible and profitable here.

Comedy Program Big Hit.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager Roth, of the Portola theater, believes in giving his patrons an occasional change from the regular diet of drama and during the third week in June put on a comedy bill that kept the house packed and all patrons in good humor, despite the warm weather. The bill consisted of "The Immigrant," with Charlie Chaplin; "Her Torpedoed Love," with Ford Sterling, another Keystone comedy, and a Mutual Weekly.

Mary Pickford in Person Delights Thousands.

San Jose, Cal.—Mary Pickford, whose presence in person has been sought by so many enterprising theater managers throughout the country, but almost invariably in vain, broke one of her rules while working in the Livermore valley near here and appeared twice one evening on the stage of the T. & D. theater in a benefit entertainment for the Home of Benevolence. Manager E. V. Clover of this house worked hard to secure her consent to appear, and it was finally the thought that she might bring happiness to the children that led her to come. The film attraction for the evening was "A Romance of the Redwoods," taken a few miles from San Jose, and a number of those who have been working with Miss Pickford were on the stage with her, following the screening, including Charles Ogle, her leading man; Margery Daw, Josephine Crowell, Maym Kelso, Jane Wolfe and Helen Eddy. An admission of 25 cents was charged, the full proceeds being given over to the Home of Benevolence, and thousands were unable to gain admission to the house.

San Francisco Briefs.

The local Moving Picture Operators' Union is making plans for its annual ball to be held within the next two months.

O. V. Traggadh is making a great success with "America's Peril" and has purchased a Studebaker car with which to tour the Pacific Coast with this production.

Charles I. Luntz, representing the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has returned from a trip through the Sacramento valley. Despite the heat, he succeeded in booking the Art Drama program in almost every town and also did well on the big special features of this concern.

Walter Preddey recently disposed of a projection machine to P. C. Meinhardt, of Fetter's Springs, and has also sold an outfit to the Davies Box & Lumber Company of Blairsden, to be used in its lumber camp.

Mrs. P. T. Sherman, widow of the late owner of the Liberty theater on Haight street, has disposed of this house.

G. Ceccehini has purchased the Victoria theater at Sixteenth and Mission streets, San Francisco.

C. R. Coulter, formerly a State right buyer in the Northwest, but now handling the Motoy comedies, was a recent business visitor.

Miles Bros., Inc., and the Golden Gate Film exchange have petitioned the Superior Court for dissolution. Both have been out of business for some time, their work now being carried on under different names.

The Pathescope Company of Northern California, T. W. John, manager, has failed with debts of $18,967 and assets of $13,464.

East and West in Contrast

Portland, Ore., Theater Manager and President of the Oregon Exhibitors' League Returns from New York City and Tells What He Observed—Astonished at Long Eastern Shows—Tells Exhibitors to Prepare for Open Bookings.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—C. W. Meighan, manager of the Peoples Amusement Company and president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, gathered much data valuable to the western exhibitor on his twenty-one days' visit to New York City and Washington, D. C.

What impressed Mr. Meighan perhaps more than anything else with respect to moving picture shows was the wide difference between exhibiting conditions in the East and West. In the West, particularly in the Pacific Northwest, exhibitors depend much on personal service in getting patronage. In the eastern cities that Mr. Meighan visited he was impressed with the fact that very little effort toward personal service was made, which surprised him, inasmuch as where personal service was featured, the best business was noticed.

He says he found many of the eastern theaters backward in exploitation and presentation of pictures as compared to the West, there being, of course, notable exceptions.

The long shows in New York City were another surprise to Mr. Meighan. In the Pacific Northwest, seven or eight reels as a rule constitute a program. In the thirty theaters in New York City visited by Mr. Meighan, ten to fourteen reels were found to be the length of the average show. The usual excuse for the long show was that the competing exhibitor persisted in the lengthy entertainment. The public seemed to take well to the long shows, however, said Mr. Meighan.

An important change in the industry noted by Mr. Meighan and now going on, the significance of which is not appreciated by the average Northwest exhibitor, is the adoption of the open booking system by prominent distributing concerns. From his interviews with producers, Mr. Meighan gathered the idea that in a short time there will not be much left in the regular program line and that all exhibitors had better prepare themselves to do business on the open booking plan.

Meets "Kirk" at Chicago.

At Chicago, Mr. Meighan was the guest of A. S. Kirkpatrick, formerly of Portland and now with the executive office of Mutual. "Kirk" asked to be remembered to all the boys in the Portland territory.

Walla Walla Theater Opens Soon.

Walla Walla, Wash.—A. W. Eiler expects to have his new theater completed by the latter part of July or the first of August. The name of the show house has not yet been selected. Its seating capacity is 1,000. The building is being erected by Mr. Eiler for show house purposes only and is modern in every detail. It is located opposite the Bijou Grand, Mr. Eiler's present theater.

Bandon Theater to Reopen.

Portland, Ore.—Mrs. E. A. Hartman, of this city, owner of the Orpheum theater property at Bandon, Ore., is about to reopen her show house with new equipment. G. J. Lemansky conducted this theater until recently. Mrs. Hartman formerly managed the house, leasing it out about three years ago. It seats 400.

Local Pathe Progresses.

Portland, Ore.—W. W. Kofeldt, local manager for Pathe, reports that business is increasing every month. "Each of the past three months has been better than the previous month," is the way Mr. Kofeldt expressed it, "and each month has been a record breaker."

The "Vicar of Wakefield," Pathe's first superfeature, has been booked to show at the Columbia for three days commencing July 12, incidental to the convention of the National Educational Association to be held in Portland at that time.

Mooney Pictures at the Lyric.

Portland, Ore.—Adolph Mayer, moving picture cameraman from San Francisco, and Selig Schulberg, representing the International Workers Defense League, were in Portland with their five-reel picture of the Mooney trial and booked their show at the Lyric. This theater will close to musical comedy to show the picture.

Sunday School at the Circle.

Portland, Ore.—A few months ago a Methodist congregation inaugurated church services at the Circle theater on Sunday mornings, the picture program beginning immediately upon the close of the church at 12:15. The church has been such a success that a Sunday school has been added and Manager G. T. Holtzclaw, of the theater, has cut forty-five minutes from his show time to accommodate the Sunday school.

Brief Oregon Film News Items.

Portland, Ore.—Miss Susie Scholes, popular stenographer at the local Mutual office, was married recently to F. W. McElroy, secretary at the Y. M. C. A. Her husband leaves for the front soon to serve the Red Cross.

Athena, Ore.—F. E. Alderman, who purchased the Peoples theater from Lester Martin, was formerly an operator for Guy Matlick at Pendleton, holding a record of working three years steady with only two weeks' vacation.

Gresham, Ore.—Claude Smith has sold his theater.

Rainer, Ore.—The Grand theater has reopened under new management.

Walla Walla, Wash.—Doc. C. S. Crews, owner of the Liberty, showed Mutual's "Heroic France" for three days, commencing June 17, for the benefit of the Red Cross and did an excellent business for a good cause.

Portland, Ore.—Among the recent infrequent visitors on film row were: E. B. Schultz, Rainbow theater, McMinnville, Ore.; M. G. Cooley, Gem theater, Silverton, Ore.; A. E. Bradley, Wheeler, Ore., and John Wesley, Scio, Ore.

Spokane Film Trade Letter.

By S. Clark Patchin, East 1811 11th Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Want Clemmer in New Theater Corporation.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Business men who recently formed the Columbia Theater Corporation, in Wenatchee, Wash., with the intention of building, at once, a $60,000 modern theater in the "Apple City," are negotiating with Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater, of Spokane, and are urging him to accept the management and supervision of the new house in conjunction with his activities in Spokane, according to Jack Howard, representing the corporation, who was a visitor in Spokane. Dr. Clemmer would continue to operate the Clemmer and make his home in Spokane, under the plan, but would have a personal representative in Wenatchee.

"If Dr. Clemmer accepts our proposition," said Mr. Howard, "the Wenatchee theater would be called the Clemmer, and we believe the prestige of the Clemmer name in both Spokane and in Seattle will be a distinct asset. The Clemmer connections would assure us a line of picture productions that we believe no other arrangement would give us. The new theater will play vaudeville, probably two days a week, and will also house the legitimate road show attractions as they are available. Dr. Clemmer would be given full sway in booking attractions."

The Wenatchee business interests are said to have secured the best site in the city, and already have plans prepared for the new theater to cost $60,000, and to seat 900 people. Wenatchee men have subscribed $30,000 to the new enterprise and expect to have their new house completed by November 1.

Dr. Clemmer has taken the Wenatchee proposition under advisement.

Northwest Pictures Corp. Plan Contest for Good Local Players.

Spokane, Wash.—Phil Harding, manager of the recently-formed Northwest Pictures Corporation, of Spokane, announces that the scenic beauties of the Northwest and the Spokane country will brighten the pictures of the company. Work is being done daily at the studios of the corporation on the north side of the city and sets are now being arranged for dramatic and comedy productions. These will be additional to industrial pictures to be shown on weekly programs.

It is announced that prizes amounting to $600 are to be given to the women of the Inland Empire, which includes the territory to the Cascades on the west, into Oregon on the south, and into Montana on the east, with the Canadian boundary making the north line, between the ages of 14 and 40, who are selected as probable players by stockholders of the company. They are to be given at least three months' photoplay instructions under the direction of Mrs. Paul Dustan Belden, and are to be given the finishing touches in technique of photoplay acting under the tutelage of the company's producing director. Later they may possibly be given employment by the concern. The first prize of $200 will be awarded the contestant selected as first choice. Three prizes of $100 each are to be given second, third and fourth selections, and an additional award of $100 will be given as a popularity prize to the contestant who leads in a voting contest.

Speaking of the work, Mr. Harding said: "The great northwest has, until now, been neglected by the motion picture camera. We can outdo the woods of Maine, dwarf the Palisades of the Hudson and eclipse the Adirondacks and the Ozarks. We have our mountain scenes that will rival the Alps.

"Freedom from static electricity, which prematurely exposes the films, is another advantage over other sections, as is the purity of the water, which does not have to be filtered or distilled for photographic purposes.

"We shall produce regularly showings of important happenings and other subjects peculiar to the Northwest."

Good Pictures in Spokane Play Houses.

Spokane, Wash.—Moving picture patrons of this city showed their appreciation of good programs during the week of June 16 to 22 by turning out in force to view Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France," at the Strand; Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in "Freckles," at the Clemmer; and George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones," at the Liberty. All of these attractions drew exceptionally well. Valeska Suratt in "The Slave," at the Casino; and Myrtle Gonzales, Val Paul and George Hernandez in "Mutiny," at the Class A, also played to good houses.

Wayne Field Buys Davenport Theater.

Davenport, Wash.—O. G. Vroman, who has run the Casino theater here for the past year, has sold it to Wayne Field, in partnership with J. A. Hurley at the Hurley theater. This theater seats 500 and will run every night, using Paramount program and Artcraft.

A CANDY JAG.—The cast: Mugsey (Johnny Ray); Mrs. Mugsey (Emma Ray); Helen, the daughter ([illegible] Milholland).

Mugsey buys a new suit. The pants are too long and he asks his wife to shorten them. His wife, taken up with society plans, cannot take time for this domestic duty. Likewise Helen, the daughter, has other things to do and Mugsey finally has the colored cook shorten the trousers. The mother and Helen decide to cut the trousers too, and they each cut a generous slice from the now well cut pants. When Mugsey puts them on they are fit only for a small boy. It is a day of happenings for the unfortunate owner of the mutilated suiting. A delivery boy steals his cigar, only to become sick from the effects of the weed. A policeman tries it and also falls a victim. They return the smoke to Mugsey and on puffing he finds a herring imbedded in the tobacco and he joins the "invalided."

[illegible] with his wife and daughter they proceed to a department store to view a display of lingerie, while Mugsey wanders about the emporium seeking adventure. At the candy counter he buys some brandied drops which have a marked effect upon him. He gets into several mixups with the employees of the store. After wandering through several departments, leaving a wake of disaster after him, the inebriated one finally gets to the toy department. When he sets off a fine fireworks display the limit is reached, and the attaches of the place make a rush to eject the trouble maker. They are forestalled by Mugsey, who cuts the strings attached to many toy baloons, and he joyfully floats upward beyond the reach of the angry mob, seeking new fields of adventure.

THE REST CURE (Pokes and Jabs Comedy—One Reel).—Pokes is weary, worn and tired and goes to a doctor. The patients in the doctor's office do not add at all to Pokes' joy. The doctor is busy—not with a patient, but a sweetheart. Pokes interrupts and for this is given a strenuous examination, and after paying the five dollars fee has to console himself with the advice that he needs a complete rest.

The first haven of rest tried by Pokes is home, but as usual when one seeks peace and quiet, the world seems in opposition. Wifey is sewing on the machine. Daughter is entertaining the count in the parlor where he is showing his operatic powers. Pokes tries the roof, but a summer shower drives him in. There the din continues, and Pokes rushes from the house. After much wandering he arrives at the Hideaway Inn, kept by Jabs. Here he is certain of finding rest and quiet.

Jabs and the bellboy are asleep. Pokes wakes them and finds there are no vacant rooms. As he is about to depart, Jabs tells him he can have a cot in a quiet hallway for the same price as one of his best rooms, and Pokes accepts and is conducted to the hall. He soon falls asleep, but the hotel turns out to be a sanitarium, and the insomina patients make Pokes' existence a very Hades. Finally, in desperation, he spies a fire escape under which is a sign, "In case of fire grab ball, jump out window and bounce to safety." Pokes grabs the ball and makes the leap and sinks in the ground up to his neck. With a disgusted look at the contrivance he murmurs that he thought the darn thing wouldn't work," and placing it under his head for a pillow, succeeds in sleeping the rest of the night in comfort on the cold ground.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE LOVE PHILTRE OF IKEY SCHOENSTEIN (One of the "O. Henry Series"—Two Parts).—The cast: Rosy Riddle (Mildred Manning); Mr. Riddle (William Shea); Mrs. Riddle (Mrs. Nellie Anderson); Ikey Schoenstein (Bernard Siegel); Chunk McGowan (Ned Hays). Directed by Thomas R. Mills.

Ikey Schoenstein is the night clerk in the "Blue Light" drug store. He ate his breakfast and slept in the daytime at Mrs. Riddles on First avenue. She had a daughter Rosy, and she, of course, was the compount extract of all that was desirable to Ikey. But Chunk McGowan was the fly in Ikey's ointment. Ikey fixed Chunk's face up, after one of his numerous escapades, and when he was finished Chunk asked Ikey for some kind of powder that, if given to a girl, would make her love you. Ikey does not claim any knowledge of such a concoction until Chunk tells him that it is Rosy he is thinking of. He tells him that Rosy has promised to run off with him that night, but he is afraid she will renege at the crucial moment.

Ikey tells Chunk that because of his friendship he will fix him up that kind of powder. Back of the prescription case Ikey grinds up a quarter grain of morphine and tells Chunk to drop it in her coffee. Chunk thanks him and exits. Ikey thinks that Rosy will sleep so soundly that she will not keep her appointment with Chunk. Besides this Ikey calls up Mr. Riddle and tells him about the proposition, and Riddle promises to meet Chunk with a shot gun.

All night Ikey waited for news of the tragedy, and when his relief came he hurried down toward his boarding house. On the way he met Chunk, who was smiling broadly. Chunk tells the astonished Ikey that everything came off first rate, and that Rosy cooked the breakfast for him that morning, up at the flat, in a blue kimono. "But the powder," Ikey gasps. "Well, it was this way," exclaims Chunk. "At supper I looked at Rosy and I thought that if I could not win her straight it would be better not at all. So seeing another party present who has not indicated the proper affection toward his coming son-in-law, I watches my chance and dumps the powder in old man Riddle's coffee, see?"

STRICTLY BUSINESS (One of the "O. Henry Series"—Two Parts).—Bob Hart, vaudeville actor, has written a sketch called "Mice Will Play." He has looked in vain for the right woman to play the woman's part with him. One day he sees Cherry in a vaudeville turn and likes her so well that he calls at her boarding house and asks her to take the part. He reads the sketch to her and she makes many changes in it. They each have dreams of what their salaries will bring in it. No nonsense for them. On its try-out performance the sketch is a big success and manager signs it up for a long circuit. That night when Bob takes Cherry home she invites him in and makes a strictly business proposition which will make their $500 a week salary go further. The sketch is a thriller in which a western girl uses a 32 calibre revolver with real cartridges to shoot her rival's photograph.

After two years successful run on circuit, Helen becomes very nervous one night and instead of shooting the picture's face, she shoots Bob in the neck. He falls—she faints and the audience is delighted. A doctor finds Bob's hurt slight, but Cherry being held by three to keep her away from him, thinks she has killed him. A mutual friend of each sees Cherry and then goes to Bob, telling him that the girl is "crying her eyes out for him," "wild about him," "in love with him," etc., etc. To all this Bob is absolutely incredulous. Cherry is "strictly business." The friend replies, "She is calling your name so loud they can't ring up the curtain," and Bob says, "It is too late, man. Why, Cherry and I have been married two years."

KALEM.

ARRAYED WITH THE ENEMY (An episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts). The cast: "Stingaree" (True Boardman); "Howie" (Paul C. Hurst); Harry Summerfield (Barney Furey); Mildred Summerfield (Edythe Sterling); "Black Bill" (G. A. Williams).

Summerfield, a new settler in the back country of Australia, is building a home in the bush waiting to be joined by his wife. He receives a letter from her saying she has sold their property in town for $5,000 cash. "Black Bill," a bandit, while ransacking the cabin finds this letter and adds a few lines to it. He then captures Summerfield and takes him away. Mildred, the wife, arriving, finds this letter which demands $5,000 ransom for Summerfield, and it is signed "Stingaree."

Just about this time "Stingaree," the gentleman outlaw, and his partner Howie, run onto the cabin. Mildred does not take him for an outlaw and shows him the letter. He at once swears vengeance against his impersonator and takes Mildred with him in an effort to rescue her husband. The party is captured by the mounted police, who expose "Stingaree" and Howie to Mildred as bandits. However the police also set out to rescue Summerfield, giving "Stingaree" and Howie a chance to break away from their guard.

Attacking "Black Bill's" stronghold, the troopers are overcome and taken. At the pleadings of Mildred, "Stingaree" undertakes to lead a party to renew the attempt at rescue. After a thrilling encounter this is effected, and "Black Bill" and his gang arrested. In the confusion of the victory "Stingaree" and his pal slip away, and the troopers are dissuaded from following to retake him by the pleading of the grateful wife.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE (An episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts)—The Cast: "Stingaree" (True Boardman); Howie (Hal Clements); "Gypsy Prince" (Frank M. Clark); Nellie Stearns (Edythe Streling); Tom Blanks (Jack Lott).

"Stingaree," gentleman bushranger, taking a strayed lamb to shelter, encounters "Gypsy Prince" a card shark. Playing with Gypsy, "Stingaree" loses money through the gamester's loaded dice. He discovers this after he has returned home. He vows vengeance.

Later he and his pal Howie secure it by holding up a stage coach upon which "Gypsy" is a passenger. Tom Banks is also a passenger. He is a lad returning from the gold diggings so he can marry Nellie Stearns, whose father holds a debt over his mother's home. Tom tells "Stingaree" that he has been fleeced at cards by "Gypsy" and that the latter has several thousand dollars in gold dust. As the gambler had not given up this sum when robbed, "Stingaree" in wrath goes to his cabin and takes it away from him. At about the same time he sends a telegram to Nellie to come out on the stage, and signs it "Tom."

In the meantime Tom loses his way in the bush, trying to get back to civilization. "Stingaree," with the recovered gold, discovers him asleep from exhaustion and fills his canteen with water and pins a letter to his coat giving directions for again reaching the high road. Then he intercepts the stage which is bearing Nellie to her lover, gives the package of gold to the driver to give to Tom when the latter meets the stage further ahead, and having arranged a dramatic reunion of the pair, makes off into the bush for further adventures.

ESSANAY.

A CORNER IN SMITHS (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Isobel Smith (Hazel Daly); Edward S. Jones (Rodney LaRock); J. Smith (Robert Bolder).

J. Smith, a millionaire, hates his name. It is so common, he thinks. He devises a scheme whereby he will exterminate the patronymic by offering $2,000 each to all bachelor Smiths who will agree not to marry, and to all maiden Smiths who will marry and change their name. Eddie Jones, who is "down and out," decides to pose as a Smith and reap the reward. He makes a hit with the old man and is retained as his secretary. While in this work he meets Isobel Smith, the daughter. Mutual love grows. The great scheme fails, of course. There are not enough millions in the world to pay off all the Smiths. And Eddie's plan to marry Isobel almost fails, for Smith avows his daughter shall never wed one of his name. But Eddie confesses his pseudonym and all ends happily.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE IT? (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: James Cadman (Ernest Maupain); Eleanor Cadman (Grace Walsh); David Lee (Mark Ellison); Henry Neville (Rodney LaRock).

Is love blind? Henry Neville, a handsome youth, seeks to impress his fiancee, Eleanor Cadman, with his own good looks by introducing her to David Lee, an exceedingly homely man. Love has not blinded Eleanor's eyes, however. She sees Henry as a parasite while David as a man who does something worth while. Her affection begins to waver. Her father informs Neville he must have $10,000 in the bank before he can marry Eleanor. David sells an invention for just that amount and loyally lends it to his friend, Henry. But Eleanor detects the little plot and rejects Henry. She summons David and, despite his homliness, marries him.

BOMBS AND BANDITS (Two Parts—Rel. Week of July 2).—The cast: Mayor (Vin Moore); Chief of Police (Bill Bevan); Captain of Police (Chas. Inslee); Mayor's Secretary (Sammy Burns); The Stenog (Dolly Dimples). Directed by A. Jassehke.

The Mayor and the Chief of Police have offices in the same building, and are both enamored of the chief's stenographer. She has entangled their middle-aged hearts in her curls and both are determined to win her. Dolly, in the meantime, gives most of her attention to young Sammy, secretary to the Mayor.

The two old chaps each wager ten thousand dollars on the winner of fair Dolly's hand. Each is sure that he is betting on a cinch. They place their money with Sammy, telling him to take it to the bank for them. The temptation is too great. Sammy calls Dolly and tells her that he has just made $20,000 easy money, and invites her to go to Mexico with him. She agrees, and they start in his car.

It is a dull day for Ignatz Tamale and his bandits, for no one has been either killed or tortured so far, since sunrise. When Sammy and Dolly appear in their car, they fall an easy prey to the bandit chief, who decides to hold them for ransom. He sends a wire to the Mayor, telling him that he is holding the secretary and the stenographer. The Mayor and the chief remember their ten thousand dollars simultaneously. They call out the police, the railroad cops and the aerial patrol and all set out for Mexico.

Dolly and Sammy are in a room made of steel, the walls of which are gradually closing in on them. The only open wall leads to a pit of flame. They are pushed nearer and nearer the terrible death, as the hours go on, and the ransom money does not arrive. At last, just as they are about to skid over the edge, the advance guard of police arrives. The bride is saved from a fiery death, but Sammy is heartlessly left to be pushed over the edge, twenty thousand and all.

HEARTS AND FLOUR (Two Parts—July 11).—The cast: The Girl (Eva Novak); The Grocer Boy (Charles Ryckman); The Butcher Boy (Tom Delmar); The Storekeeper (Bob McKenzie). Directed by Dick Smith.

The grocer boy loved the boss's daughter. So did the butcher boy, but Eva favored the former When she showed her preferenec so plainly, it started a fight, in which the stock of the store suffered severely. The boss checked the fray just as it was becoming exciting, and they went reluctantly back to work.

The minister comes in to ask for a subscription, and the boss, giving him one, drops his roll, which the grocer boy finds for him Some gossips come into the store and stay so long that the boys let loose a mouse from the trap to drive them away. This succeeds splendidly, and the boss is pleased with the grocer boy, so the other decided to get even. When the boss carries out a bag of flour on his back, Tom cuts a hole in it, and it pours out. He then blames Ryck. The boss goes into the refrigerator, and Tom shuts him in, letting him out when he is nearly frozen and saying that Ryck did it. Both fall on Ryck and beat him up, but the girl explains the truth.

Tom is sent out to deliver the orders. Ryck fixes the wagon so that on the hill the horse breaks away from it. The wagon runs downhill and is knocked to bits by an auto. Tom returns almost dead. But a small boy has seen Ryck tampering with the wagon and tells on him. So the boss and Tom beat him up again.

Ryck and Eva have planned an elopement, and he puts a ladder up to her window for her to climb out on. Pa sees them, but Ryck ties him to the tail of a huge kite, cuts the string, and Pa falls into the field. Ryck and Eva are just getting out of the window, when Pa takes away the ladder. There is a fight, but Ryck succeeds in getting away with the girl Tom and the boss follow them. Ryck and Eva are in a buggy and the others in a car. They are arrested for speeding. Ryck manages to exchange the buggy for a car, grabs the minister and makes him marry them, while the disappointed Tom "beans" the boss with a flowerpot.

JOKER.

KITCHENELLA (Rel. Week of July 9).—The cast: Kitchenella (Gale Henry); Count Jassbo (Milton Sims); His Confederate (Charles Haefil). Written by C. B. Hoadley. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Kitchenella has two stepsisters who are preparing for the Street Sweepers' ball. She wants to go, too. Count Jassbo has left a note of vital importance in the toe of one of a pair of old slippers for his confederate, Mike. The landlady throws the slippers out of the window, and Kitchenella finds them. She puts them on, takes the window curtains and makes a gown out of them using the workbasket for a hat.

She goes to the ball. So do the count and Mike. They search the feet of every woman in the place hunting for the slippers, but fail to find them. The next day the count puts an ad in the paper that he will marry the girl who has the mate of the slipper which he has found at the ball. Kitchenella has thrown it at her stepsister. She reads the ad and rushes to meet the count. His confederate drops a brick on her head and she collapses into the horse-trough, while the count beats it with the slipper.

While the boys of the Flying W and Circle C are fighting, Neal sits behind the desk in the hotel and reads poetry. Violet arrives with a tale of woe and every one of the boys falls for it. She relieves them of all their money but each thinks himself the only contributor.

Neal thinks Violet his ideal, and is inspired by reading Lochinvar to try to steal her. The boys arrange a championship fight, the loser who represents one side to stay away from Violet. Bill and Skeeter are selected. They commence to train. Violet's brother arrives and goes to her room. She tells him that she is sick of this business of cheating and lying, but he insists upon her going through with it.

He offers to train the boys for the fight. He is a real pugilist, and they prevail upon him to take Skeeter's place. The big fight is staged, and while it is on Neal grabs Violet and runs away with her. He ropes the minister and makes him marry them. When the boys appear he tells them "Meet my wife!"

At the theater Hildreth sits in a box with two crooks, who were there before he arrived. He appreciates Morn Light's beauty and splendid dancing and sympathizes with her when she falls, spraining her ankle. The manager informs the people that Miss Light will appear in the next act, but will be unable to dance again. When the men leave to smoke, Hildreth follows them, and in the smoking-room is handed a program by a boy who whispers to [illegible] inside it. The two crooks are determined not to let Hildreth return to the hotel. Morn Light becomes more [illegible].

The note urges Hildreth to come at once to Morn Light's dressing-room. The maid listens at the door, and realizing this, Morn Light laughs, calls Hildreth by the name of Ted, and then sends the maid to the drug store for a headache powder. Morn Light writes on a piece of paper and hands it to Hildreth; he reads, "For God's sake laugh." The situation [illegible] tells him he is Ted Daly; not to ask any questions, but to meet her at twelve in the private dining-room at Bishop's; to ask for Jacques, who will understand and show him to the room; not to go back to the theater; to say something polite about her injury and not to forget that he is Ted Daly. Just then the maid enters to say that she sent a boy for the headache powder. Hildreth leaves.

Two hours later The Gray Ghost is told by the crooks that they have again been foiled. Hildreth calls up the Arabin home and learns from the butler that Mr. Arabin has not been in New York that day, but is in Boston. Hildreth is flabbergasted, but he goes to the restaurant and asks for Jacques, who shows him a private room, with a special exit. Hildreth sits down to wait.

Morn Light is helped home by her maid, whom she sends to the drug store for a forgotten package. When the girl is gone she rushes to the phone and calls up Hildreth at Bishop's. She is just warning him not to return to his hotel when The Gray Ghost enters her room. She hears him, and changing to a light tone, she laughs and thanks "Ted Daly" for calling her up again. The Ghost says, "I hope this is not a love affair, for remember, you belong to me!" He goes toward her to take her in his arms, but she seizes a paper-knife and keeps him off.

BISON.

DOUBLE SUSPICION (Two Parts—Rel. Week of July 9).—The cast: Neal (Neal Hart); Pop (George Berrell); Joe (Joe Rickson); His Wife (Janet Eastman). Scenario by George Hively. Produced by George Marshall.

Neal, the sheriff of Red Rock County, is trapped by a gang of cattle rustlers. He is fighting desperately when his partner, Pop, comes on him. Pop manages to draw the fire of the rustlers and enables Neal to escape.

In an adjacent town, Joe is chased out of a building which he has robbed and, in the getaway, he wounds one of the men. He escapes and arrives at his nearby camp, where his wife and baby are. They leave town quickly, eluding his pursuers. Several days later Joe arrives at Red Rock. Leaving his wife, who is almost without food, Joe goes to the saloon and starts gambling with the money stolen in the other town.

Neal comes on the wife, and knowing her to be a stranger, asks if there is anything he can do. She tells him about Joe's gambling the money. Neal orders Joe out of the saloon.

Neal tells the proprietor of the store that he has a package coming on the stage that night for Pop's birthday. The storekeeper gives Neal a key to the store, telling him that he will leave the package where Neal can get it. That night Joe breaks into the store. After Pop and Neal have retired, Neal gets up and starts for the store to get the package. Pop, however, wakes and decides to follow him.

Neal gets the package and leaves, but Pop does not see him leave. Pop then goes to the front of the store to see what Neal is doing. Pop sees the figure of Joe through the window, and believes it is Neal and that he has taken this method to obtain money, which they need to develop their mine. Pop enters the store and places some of his belongings near the safe so that the blame for the robbery will be placed on him.

The next morning the robbery is discovered and Neal is sent for. He notices that Pop has not returned during the night. Going to the store he is shown the evidence against Pop and comes to the conclusion that the old man is guilty. A little later Neal finds Pop in the mountains, and he surrenders.

Arriving at the town, Neal takes off his badge and releases Pop, telling the men that he resigns on the spot. He and Pop ride away. Shortly afterward a posse from the town robbed by Joe come upon Joe's trail in the mountains. Pop and Neal cut across to head Joe off. They get into a fight, in which Joe is shot. They find on his body the package of money taken from the Red Rock store. The posse comes up and decides to take Joe to Red Rock.

Neal is again made sheriff. He learns that there is a large reward for Joe's capture. They decide to divide the reward with Joe's wife, and Neal assures her that she will be taken care of. Returning to the cabin, Pop finds the birthday package under his bunk, where Neal had placed it.

REX.

THREE WOMEN OF FRANCE (Two Parts—Rel. Week of July 9).—The cast: Sister Genevieve (Adelaide Woods); Fifi (Irene Hunt); Aimee (Virginia Lee); Lieut. Dubois (Richard Ryan); Raoul Renfret (Jack Mulhall); Doctor (Daniel Leighton). Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

The war had turned a splendid chateau into a hospital. Sister Genevieve, a woman who knew the sorrow of suffering but not the sorrow of sin, helped to care for the wounded soldiers therein. Fifi, on the contrary, had known sin in all its ugliness, but like many another of the half-world, had given everything to the great war, even herself. Fifi was a most carefree sort of girl, and sang for the soldiers and brought them flowers. Sister Genevieve disapproved of Fifi's light-heartedness, especially after she had sung a frivolous song at the request of a dying soldier, but Fifi's answer was that she could see no real difference between a prayer and a song.

Lieutenant Dubois, of the guard, was at the time in love with Aimee Renfret, a pretty woman and a weak one, whose husband was in the trenches. She returned his admiration and made arrangements to go to Paris with him during his furlough. Fifi overheard their talk.

The enemy began a sharp attack and the stream of wounded poured into the hospitals. Among them was Raoul Renfret. When Sister Genevieve saw him, she recalled the days when he and she were sweethearts; they had quarreled and he had never returned. After three years with no word from him, she had become a nun.

While thinking of the past, Sister Genevieve was startled by Fifi, who sank to her knees by the bed of Raoul. Asked by the Sister if she knew him, too, Fifi told her that he was the first man who ever treated her as a good woman. She said that while trying to protect her from a jealous lover, he was stabbed and she had taken care of him for three months. After he had gone, she couldn't go back to the old life.

The doctors said there was no hope for Raoul, who called continually for Aimee. Fifi hastened to her cottage, and in spite of Aimee's protests forced her to come to her dying husband's bedside. The change for the better was so marked when Raoul quieted down with his arm around Aimee, that the doctor said that there was now a chance for his life.

Running to the cottage, Fifi found the lieutenant waiting for Aimee to start to Paris. She told him that Aimee had to stay with her husband, and suggested that he take her to Paris instead. At first astonished, he agreed, for she, too, was a pretty woman. Fifi had made her final sacrifice.

GOLD SEAL.

A LIMB OF SATAN (Three Parts—Rel. Week of July 9).—The cast: Naida (Ruth Stonehouse); Giovanni (Jack Dill); Hugh Converse (Chester Bennett); Mrs. Converse (Mrs. Witting); Mrs. Westlake (Mrs. Pratt); Mr. Westlake (Wadsworth Harris); Matron (Martha Maddox). Written by Elizabeth Mahoney. Produced by Ruth Stonehouse.

Naida, the terror of the orphan asylum, has been adopted three times on probation and each time returned. Unknown to the heads of the institution, Giovanni Rossi, a strolling musician, comes each day to play for Naida. Finally Naida tells him of her loathing for the asylum, and begs him to take her with him. One night Naida escapes from the orphanage, and goes to Giovanni.

Two years later Giovanni is rapidly failing in health, and one day Naida returns to find her only friend dead. Hugh Converse, overtaken by blindness just at the beginning of his career as a sculptor, is now dependent on his mother. Late one evening Mrs. Converse finds Naida on the step. Naida tells the story of her escape from the policeman and the truant officer who tried to take her into custody at the time of Giovanni's death, and, realizing her youth, these two kind people decide to take care of her until a home can be found for her.

Weeks later Naida and Hugh, having become confidential, the child questions him as to whether he would regain his sight if an operation was performed, and being answered in the affirmative, she determines to get that much-needed money. She responds to an advertisement for a maid at the Westlake home, and some time afterward robs Mr. Westlake of five hundred dollars. Then getting a public stenographer to write a note without any address, Naida sends the money to Hugh by a messenger boy.

The loss is discovered. The detective finds a carbon copy of the note in Nadia's pocket. She confesses to having stolen the money, but refuses to tell to whom she sent it. In the juvenile court the problem is taken up. In the hospital where Hugh has been operated on successfully and is now almost recovered, Mrs. Converse sees an account in the paper of the unusual case of Naida Rivers. She and Hugh hasten to the court, and Mr. Westlake takes Hugh's promise that he will repay the money as soon as possible.

With the judge's permission, Mrs. Westlake now adopts Naida and sends her away to school. At the end of a year she returns a much changed person, though it is an effort to repress her natural exuberance of spirit. The Westlakes love her devotedly, and when she goes to visit Hugh and his mother, she finds that Hugh loves her in quite a different manner.

BUTTERFLY.

THE REED CASE (Five Parts—Rel. Week of July 9).—The cast: Jerry Brennon (Allen Holubar); Bull Renfroy (Alfred Allen); Chief Grady (Fred Montague); Senator Reed (George Pearce); John Reed (Sydney Dean); Helen Reed (Louise Lovely); Mrs. John Reed (Nanine Wright); Schuyler Hastings (Ernest Shields); "Red" (Edward Brady). Written and produced by Allen Holubar.

Chief of Police Grady, of the New York Central Office, informed Jerry Brennon and "Bull" Renfroy, the two principal detectives of the force, that the Grayson gang was pulling a haul that night. Jerry caught two crooks in Senator Reed's home. The Senator was so grateful that he offered to do anything for Jerry.

After three years of active service, Brennon reached the point where he faced a nervous breakdown. The doctor and Reed persuaded Jerry to take a rest, and he is sent to the Senator's cabin in the mountains.

Helen Reed was courted by Schuyler Hastings, whom her mother favored. Helen, however, told Schuyler he would have to do something worth while before she would marry him.

Jerry found the cabin lonely enough, but was rather suspicious because of the driver saying that it was haunted. As soon as he arrived a shot was fired at him. That night he slept restlessly. When he woke in the morning, two bullets whizzed past him and lodged in the bed. Then he found a note pinned on the door which warned him to get out.

Jerry discovered a secret door and, upon forcing it, found a girl huddled on a bed, weeping bitterly. It was Helen, and though at first afraid of Jerry, she soon was telling him of her misfortune. While shopping, she had been kidnapped by getting into the wrong taxi. When the gangsters came to the cabin, Jerry climbed into a loft and listened to their planning to return at ten o'clock to remove Helen to a hut ten miles away.

Jerry went quickly to the village where he found the sheriff and with him and some other men rushed back to the cabin. Helen was taken from the room. When the gangsters arrived a fight took place. Grady was delighted with Jerry's success and the Reeds were ready to weep for joy at seeing Helen again. Jerry proudly introduced his future wife. "The Gent" spoke up and told her that Schuyler had hired him to kidnap her; they were to demand a ransom and he was to receive the glory of rescuing her. Even Renfroy had to congratulate Jerry on his success.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 36 (July 10)—The lovely capital of the Pearl of the Antilles, Havana, is shown here in all its tropic beauty. Rising out of the sea to give the city's first greeting to the visitor is El Morro, the grim castle that stands at the mouth of the harbor. An adequate idea of the extent of the largest city of the West Indies is next given by means of a panorama of the city from the Astronomical Observatory. the city is noted and of the Prado, that world famous promenade down to the Malecon. Naturally there are pictures of the spot where the first mass was said by Columbus and where his bones rested before being interred in the neighboring cathedral. San Rafael and Obispo streets are down to give an idea of the shopping district.

The cities of the Nile, a second section of this reel, will prove intensely interesting. There are some which seem to be in the same state of civilization which was familiar to Moses. Among the settlements pictured are Alexandria, Heliopolis, El Badrashein, Mansura, Tanta, and Damietta.

Aigues-Mortes, France, a city that still has about it the atmosphere of the Crusades, is a quaint place which has been photographed to show where romance still lingers. It owes its present fame to the mediaeval fortification which surround it. It was from this town that Louis IX embarked upon the seventh and eighth crusades, in 1248 and 1270. Canals connect the town with the Rhone and the Mediterranean.

REEL LIFE NO. 63 (July 12).—The first actual under-sea vessel built for warfare was constructed in New Orleans by an engineer named Watson. It had only been in Commission a short time when Admiral Farragut captured New Orleans. The vessel was sunk in Lake Pontchatrain to keep it from falling into his hands. It was recovered in 1885, and now is a precious relic at the Confederate Soldiers' Home on Bayou St. John.

"A Square Deal for the Baby" will be a section of this reel of widespread interest. It is a vivid portrayal of the work of settlement home nurses in [illegible] poor mothers how to care for their infants. The pictures are in themselves an education.

The high cost of living is turning the thoughts of the nation toward foods which have never been [illegible] used [illegible] present whale [illegible] suggested for the juicy beefsteak. Whale meat is now sold at some Pacific coast butcher shops at [illegible] cents a pound. The picture of "Whale Meat" upon this reel shows a whaling station and a whale being hauled upon a pier.

"Camp Fire [illegible]" is a [illegible] picture. Since every one is now doing his or her bit, the Camp Fire Girls in some communities are [illegible] the mysteries of heliographing, wigwagging, and other forms of [illegible].

The reel also has two animated drawings from "Life." [illegible] and "Professional Etiquette."

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

MARY MORELAND (Frank Powell—Five Parts—July 9).—The cast: Mary Moreland (Marjorie Rambeau); Thomas Maughm (Robert Elliott); Mrs. Maughm (Gene LaMoth); Mrs. Moreland (Augusta Burmester); Basil Romney (Frazer Tarbutt); Cicely Torrance (Edna M. Holland). Directed by Frank Powell.

Thomas Maughm, Wall Street broker, dictates a letter to his stenographer, Mary Moreland, in which he relates his domestic unhappiness and announces his determination to separate from his wife, Daisy. Before he has finished the letter, Mary realizes that she loves him and he realizes that he loves her. She promises to join him that evening in Boston, but before she leaves Mrs. Maughm sends for her, and when she reaches Boston Mary tells Maughm at the station that he must return to his wife.

Mary quits Maughm's office and secures a position with Basil Romney, cultured English invalid, who writes verse. Romney falls in love with Mary and asks her to marry him. She leaves Romney's employ. Maughm and his wife are partly reconciled by a mutual friend, Cicely Torrance, and by the knowledge that Mrs. Maughm is to become a mother. The wife, suspicious of her husband's relations with Mary Moreland, has her followed. Mary, as public stenographer, learns of a plan to wreck Maughm's biggest business venture. She hurries to his cottage in the Maine woods, where he has gone to minister to the stricken son of one of his guides, to tell him.

Mary is forced to leave home because of the selfishness and extravagance of her mother. Mrs. Maughm offers her money to promise never to see Maughm again. Mary refuses. Then she learns of the approaching domestic event, and knowing Maughm's love of children, goes to Mrs. Maughm and promises. Mary goes to Denver. She returns in six months. Mrs. Maughm has given her life for her child. Maughm's new secretary sends for Mary and in the office where she had heard Maughm's first declaration of love she promises to become his wife.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

CASTE (Five Parts—July 2).—The story tells of a scion of Royalty whose infatuation for a dancing girl of common origin leads to a clandestine marriage. On the eve of the arrival of an heir he is called to the colors. His mother, a haughty Marquise, whose characteristic repugnance for common people she has tried to instill in her more democratic son, learns of his impending departure and hastens to his home. There for the first time she meets her son's wife and disreputable father-in-law and brother-in-law. She learns of her son's marriage, and in his absence attempts to gain possession of the child for a cash settlement. The girl spurns the offer, and the Marquise, broken in spirit, her pride crushed to earth, renounces her son.

The son, after being reported killed in action, arrives in England on a furlough. He hastens to his wife's home, where a touching reunion is held. The two, with their baby, then go to the Marquise's home to reassure her of her son's safety. It is here that filial love scores over class pride, for the Marquise, on seeing her son alive, capitulates and welcomes the girl and child into her heart.

A RAG BABY (Selig—Two Parts—July 9)—The cast: Old Sport (William Fables); Tony Gay (James Harris); Christian Berriel (Edward Allen); Clara (Amy Dennis); Doctor Tooms (Tony West); Dusty Bob (Jim West). Written by Charles Hoyt. Directed by J. A. Richmond.

When Tony Gay arrived at his sister's house he saw sister's husband fleeing with the child. His sister explained that her husband became peeved because she had caught him kissing the cook and had gone away. Sister urges brother to get on the trail.

Just as Tony Gay enters the drug dispensary, the owner receives a letter that the place will be hoisted by a bomb at ten o'clock sharp that night unless ten thousand dollars are left down by the old mill. Tony Gay asks if the druggist desires to sell the store and receives a reply in the affirmative.

Tony Gay plots to run the place and give brother-in-law a dose that will keep him under the covers until he, Tony, collars the baby. Old Sport, the dauntless athlete, training for a battle with Dusty Bob, the Husky Hitter, is hired as drug clerk.

Before any prescriptions are filled the two try them out on the dog with ill effects to the dog. Old Sport shows his skill in dispensing soda-water, but tries to disappear when Dusty Bob, his ancient enemy, appears with blood in his eye. However, Old Sport is victorious. During the melee, a dog placed in a sweat bath is forgotten and emerges in a shrunken condition.

Searching for the lost baby, Tony Gay and Old Sport are mistaken for burglars in a girls' boarding school. In the melee, Tony Gay's sister appears, recognizes him, and is delighted when Old Sport hands over a Rag Baby, which has caused all the misunderstanding.

WHERE IS MY MOTHER? (One of the "Do Children Count?"—Series—Two Parts)—The cast: Nina Burdock (Little Mary McAlister); John Burdock (John Cossar); His Wife (Mabel Bardine); Robert Wilkins (Patrick Calhoun).

Nina Burdock, like every other child, thinks the whole world revolves about her mother. And when, suddenly, her mother disappears, Nina is broken-hearted. Burdock had returned to his home one evening and found his wife apparently in a compromising position with Robert Wilkins, a friend of the family. The couple had had a violent scene which ended in Mrs. Burdock leaving her home. Despite the pleas of his child for her mother, Burdock seeks a divorce. Nina, however, goes to the judge and pleads with him not to take her mother away from her. The judge is so impressed he makes a special investigation and finds that Mrs. Burdock is innocent of her husband's charges. He gets Burdock and his wife into his chambers and, using the child as the "tie that binds," brings about a joyful reconciliation.

LIGHT IN DARKNESS (Edison—Five Parts—July 9).—The cast: Hilary Kenyon (Shirley Mason); Ramsey Latham (Frank Morgan); Deputy Sheriff Brad Milligan (William Tooker); J Arthur Converse, alias "Gentleman Harry" (J. Frank Glendon); Governor of California (George Tremble); DeWitt Pierce (Bigelow Cooper); Sheriff Moody (William Wadsworth).

Ramsey Latham, cashier of the Traders' Bank and Trust Company, discovers the insolvency of his organization, finding that the president, DeWitt Pierce, has withdrawn huge sums for business other than that of the bank. Pierce promises restitution the next day. But, the next day sees him a suicide, and the arrest of Ramsey for the failure of the bank.

On his way to the penitentiary with a prisoner, Sheriff Brad Milligan stops at the Ingleside jail for the night. The next day the jail whistle blows a long blast, announcing the escape of convicts. The guards set out and Moody, the warden, finds that he can spare no one to guard Ramsey during his trip to the penitentiary. Assailed by the public press for favoritism towards Ramsey, Moody feels that he can no longer delay transporting him. Thus Brad Milligan consents to take Ramsey along with his other prisoner.

The door of the prison opens and Hilary Kenyon, accompanied by a matron, steps out. Ramsey looks at her with admiration and she walks toward him. "Ten years," he answers to her question. "Good behavior will shorten your sentence. In five years you will be eligible for parole," she says.

At San Salito station they alight from the train and are transferred to the penitentiary bus. In the office the prisoners are registered. A matron comes out to receive Hilary. He realizes that she, too, is to serve a sentence.

Five years later Hilary is paroled. She makes her way to Greenbrae to take up a position as maid. In his cell Ramsey tells his mate, J. Arthur Converse, alias "Gentleman Harry," of his anticipated parole. His attorneys have written him that near Santa Paula they have purchased a ranch where he is to spend the period of his parole, inasmuch as by the rules of the State, he will not be allowed to engage in business until he shall have received a full discharge. His parole is granted, and Ramsey, trudging the highroad, comes upon Hilary Kenyon, dejected. Sadly she tells of her struggles ever since the day of her parole. The taint of the prison is ineradicable, and restraint and suspicion have made her position impossible. "I left this morning. It was unbearable."

Then follow confidences. She was sentenced because, in defending herself from attack, she killed the man who sought to betray her; and he, because of the bank failure, has suffered for the crime of another. Their fortunes have been cast as in a single mold, and so he leads her to his ranch in Santa Paula—his wife. Two years elapse and over the lives of Ramsey and Hilary and their little baby, falls a shadow of evil. The law of the State forbids marriage to those who are out of prison under parole.

Arthur Converse [illegible] Sheriff Milligan. Suspicious of his visitor, Milligan is forced to [illegible] that Ramsey has married and broken his parole, admit that he is not the parole officer. "There's a reward for a parole violator that might be split." Milligan sees his visitor's game. "Mug that guy and send his picture to San Quentin," he orders one of his deputies. The next day word comes from the penitentiary. The man whose photograph the sheriff has sent is "Gentleman Harry," and then follows a detailed account of his prison record. Harry is [illegible] to stay away from the Santa Paula district.

Sheriff Milligan visits Ramsey and Hilary and the young folks stand petrified. Slowly the horrible truth comes over them, they have broken the law. Milligan sees the terror in their eyes and his nerve fails him. With a mighty effort he hides his feelings and tells them that he has come to congratulate them and to see the baby. Hilary is overjoyed and promises Milligan to name the baby after him. Ramsey walks to the gate with him. "You fooled Hilary, Sheriff, but I know the parole officer is after me." Milligan, however, takes the matter up with the Governor, and is successful in obtaining pardons for Ramsey and Hilary, thereby legitimatizing their child.

HE FELL ON THE BEACH (June 25).—The cast: The Girl (Margaret Gibson); The Boy (Harry Ham); The Boss (Eugene Corey); His Wife (Ethel Lynne).

On Sunday at the beach Harry sees a girl he would like to wed. His advances are repulsed. He sees her from time to time but makes no progress. Harry works for a jealous man who has sent several men to the hospital for flirting with his wife. So Harry does not confide in him, but he does write to Bernice Hardfacts of the [illegible]. She advises him to be persistent, follow the girl, meet her in some way.

The boss tells Harry to come up to his house to dinner so as to be there for a business meeting afterward. On his way up Harry sees the girl and puts the Advice to the Lovelorn into play. The girl doesn't fall for Harry's rush, but calls an officer. Harry gets away, losing the girl.

At the boss's house he sees a picture with inscription leading him to believe it is the jealous employer's wife, and it is the girl of Harry's dreams! Harry begins to say his prayers as the girl comes in and sees him. Taking him for a burglar or worse, she screams for a policeman. The boss comes running in and Harry falls at his feet as the girl denounces the masher. Harry thinks each moment is his last as he says, "Honestly, boss, I didn't know she was your wife!" "She isn't my wife but my cousin," says the boss. "Here comes my wife." So it turns out that Bernice Hardfacts gave the right advice.

HATER OF MEN (Five Parts—June 24).—The cast: Janice Salsbury (Bessie Barriscale); Phillips Hartley (Charles K. French); Billy Williams (Jack Gilbert).

Janice Salsbury, a special writer for a newspaper, is engaged to Billy Williams, another reporter, and feels qualms for her future as she watches him listening with keen enjoyment to the testimony of a fashionable divorce trial which introduces half the chorus of a Broadway show.

A few evenings later she attends a dinner where Phillips Hartley, known as "the drawing room philosopher," is a guest. He is in love with her, but has never spoken of his affection. Janice breaks her engagement with Billy because of his jealousy and lets it be known that she is not the marrying kind.

She enters the Bohemian life and Hartley watches her with regret, knowing that she is on the wrong track. He tries to show her that she is living in a land of tinsel, but she fails to see the change in the attitude of her friends toward her. How she is finally brought to her senses and her eyes opened by the man she really loves is shown in the episodes that follow.

THE FLAME OF THE YUKON (Seven Parts—[illegible]).—The cast: Ethel Evans (Dorothy Dalton); "Black Jack" Hovey (Melbourne McDowell); George Fowler (Kenneth Harlan); Dolly (Margaret Thompson); [illegible] Fowler (Carl Ullman); Mrs. George Fowler (May Palmer).

THE VILLAIN (Two Parts—July 15).—Billy, a confidence man, arrives in Squashville, a lumber town, and sees Babe, the daughter of the village doctor, disporting herself on the banks of the river. Learning that her father is the richest man in the village, Billy begins to beguile the unsophisticated Babe with tales of life in the big city. The innocent miss falls into his trap and gives her tender heart to the black rascal. Billy, scenting spoils that far exceeds his expectations, summons Florence, his confederate, and two crooks to come to his assistance. Budd, the village boob and life-long suitor of Babe's, is the one stumbling block in Billy's path to the successful culmination of his plans. The doctor, returning after a professional visit, discovers Billy about to make off with all the money in the doctor's safe. Learning from Babe that the villain has tempted her into opening the safe, the doctor orders Billy out of the house and administers a well-deserved spanking to his too trusting daughter.

Upon the arrival of Florence and the crooks, Billy orders his woman confederate to win the love of Budd, and to keep him out of the way of the others. Florence ensnares the country boy and succeeds in keeping him at a safe distance, leaving the villain Billy to work in safety. Taking the place of a man who has been shot in a gambling fight, Billy succeeds in gaining entrance into the doctor's home and persuading Babe to elope with him. The doctor, discovering the plot, rushes to the church just in time to stop the marriage and drags Babe back to the house.

Infuriated at the continued failure of his plans, Billy resorts to violence and has his two confederates seize the doctor and carry him to the sawmill. Here Budd discovers confederates placing the doctor upon a log and threatening to saw him into halves unless he consents to the marriage of Billy and Babe. Horrified at the sight, Budd rushes off to notify Babe and to secure aid of the local police force. They appear on the scene just in time to save her father from the cruel saw and the police force shortly after arrest Billy and incarcerate him in the local jail. Florence and the two crooks, who managed to avoid arrest, decided to steal the jail. Placing the jail on a commandeered wagon, the crooks drive off with the police force in pursuit. Inside the jail Billy is urging his pals to greater efforts when a wheel of the wagon breaks off, and the jail and its sole tenant is hurled into the water. Florence's devotion to her lord comes to the surface and, diving into the water, she reaches the jail, and the two drift far out of the confines of the little village, while Babe, realizing the worth of the love of her rustic sweetheart, Budd, finds contentment and peace in his arms.

TWO LITTLE IMPS (Five Parts—July 8).—The cast: Jane (Jane Lee); Katherine (Katherine Lee); Billy Parke, their uncle (Leslie Austen); Betty Murray (Edna Hunter); William Murray, her father (Edwin Holt); Boy Murray, his dissolute son (Stuart Sage); Burglar (Sidney D'Albrook); His Pal (William Harvey). Written by Mary Murillio. Directed by Kenean Buel.

Jane and Katherine are the sweetest youngsters in the world—in their mother's eyes. The family is summering at a seaside resort when mamma is called to town for a week. Not wishing to interrupt her darling's good time she has her young bachelor brother come to the hotel to take care of the children until she returns. "Billy" Parke undertakes the job. On the way to the resort he meets Betty Murray. It is a case of love at first sight. Betty and he are bound for the same hotel.

Billy would have enjoyed the bus ride from the station to the hotel with Betty if his nieces hadn't entered, recognized him and made themselves at home on his lap after being drenched when they drove an electric wheel chair into the surf. He has to neglect Betty on reaching the hotel to get the youngsters dry clothing and clean them up.

Soon after her arrival at the hotel Betty and her father enter the dining room at the same time Billy and Katherine appear. Katherine had previously met Mr. Murray and introduces Uncle Billy to Mr. Murray and Betty. They are eating when Jane, who had been left in her room asleep, appears in an exceedingly brief costume on the trail of something to eat. Billy grabs her and bundles her back up stairs.

Jane and Katherine keep the hotel in a turmoil. Every time Billy tries to advance his suit for Betty is an opportunity for a new escapade by the youngsters. On one of her trips about the resort Katherine comes upon Bob Murray, the son of Mr. Murray, who had been cast out by his father for forging a check. Bob is in a bad way when Katherine finds him. The little girl's motherly attentions awake the deadened manliness in him, and Bob promises her to go straight and get his father's forgiveness.

Meantime Mr. Murray confides in Katherine his great sorrow. Katherine asks him why he doesn't ask his prodigal son to return, to which the elderly man replies that he would if he could find the boy. Katherine promises to help him.

A few nights later two crooks with whom Bob was connected plan to rob the Murray apartment in the hotel. Bob, though not knowing his pals were planning to rob his father, tries to quit the job, but is finally prevailed upon to undertake it. The first thing the boy's flashlight hits on entering the apartment is a picture of his dead mother. He refuses to go farther and telephones to the hotel desk asking for help just as one of the crooks fells him.

The thieves flee from the room just as Mr. Murray enters and finds his son. They take refuge in Jane's room. Recognizing the men as crooks she slips from bed and hides in a bureau drawer. Uncle Billy enters, grapples with the men and is being overcome when Jane hits one of the robbers on the head with an iron. Billy soon quiets the other.

The racket attracts Mr. Murray and hotel attendants, who arrest the crooks. After the excitement subsides Mr. Murray embraces his son and restores him to his estate; Billy and Betty withdraw and decide there is no blessedness in being single, and Jane and Katherine watch with mingled pleasure and surprise the outcome of the events in which they were small but important factors.

WORLD PICTURES.

THE PRICE OF PRIDE (Peerless—Five Parts—July 2).—The cast: David and William (Carlyle Blackwell); Nan Westland (June Elvidge); Jeffrey Arnold Black (Frank Mills); Kathleen May (Evelyn Greeley); Ben Richardson (George MacQuarrie); Judge Endicott (Charles Charles); Madge Endicott Black (Pinna Nesbit). Directed by Harley Knoles.

On her son David's second birthday, Madge Black witnesses her best chum, Nan Westland, kissing Jeffrey Arnold Black, her husband, a successful lawyer. Madge orders Nan from the house. Angered, Jeffrey does not explain that it is his money which maintains the home, and not her father's as Madge believes. Jeffrey leaves his wife and son. On board a westbound train, Jeffrey meets Nan. She explains that she has been compromised, and that she is going away to hide. Touched by her apparent sorrow, Jeffrey tells her that, though he doesn't love her, he will try to protect her. In love with him, Nan is willing to accept him on any terms.

A year later a son is born to Nan and Jeffrey. She pleads with him to divorce Madge and marry her, for the sake of their child, William's name, but he will not hear of it. Ben Richardson, Jeffrey's client, is a frequent visitor at their home. Richardson's sincerity eventually wins Nan, and, goaded by Jeffrey's indifference, she leaves him and their child, to become Richardson's wife.

Twenty years later David Black has developed into a splendid specimen of manhood, while his half brother, William, has become the leader of a lawless band. David goes West to take charge of a mining plant.

Happily married, Ben Richardson and Nan have become owners of Chanceland, a gambling house in Colorado. "Rodeo," as William Arnold is known, goes to Chanceland to try his luck, but he loses all his money. He sees Nan in the music room adjoining, and eager to make an impression on her, he saunters in. When Nan asks his name, he says they call him "Rodeo—the bandit." His real name—William Arnold, son of Jeffrey Arnold, from whom he had run away at fourteen. Never knew his mother, he guesses he'd better be going or he'd get sentimental. Not revealing her identity, Nan presses a ring into his hand, and tells him to come to her if he should be in trouble. Believing that he has surely "caught" the Queen, he strolls out.

In the same town, his half brother, David Black, is working on his mining schemes. In the doorway of Chanceland, "Rodeo" passes David Black, and both are struck by the remarkable resemblance to each other. David receives a telegram from Kathleen May, his fiancee, asking him to meet her at the train which is to arrive the next morning. That night "Rodeo" and his men hold up the train. While "Rodeo" is relieving the passengers of their valuables, the conductor leaps on him, and the bandana which concealed the bandit's features, is torn away, revealing him to Kathleen. She believes him to be David. The bandit effects a getaway. When David comes to get Kathleen, the next day, she snubs him and walks past him.

Ben Richardson's servant sees "Rodeo" and his men dividing the plunder, and reports to Richardson. The latter intimates to Nan that the young fellow she was interested in is suspected of a number of crimes. She realizes that her son is in danger. Disconsolate, David tries to find solace in Chanceland where he is arrested on the charge of robbing the mails and holding up the train.

Deciding on a bold stroke, "Rodeo" goes to see Nan. She discloses herself as his mother and pleads with him to be careful, for as soon as the prisoner proves an alibi the sheriff will be after "Rodeo." Hearing Richardson, she pushes her son into her bedroom. Richardson, suspecting that Nan is hiding her lover, dashes into the room and fires at "Rodeo." "Rodeo" is taken to court where David is being tried for the bandit's crimes.

Nan confesses to Richardson that "Rodeo" is her son, and hastens to court. Also in the courtroom are Kathleen and Madge, David's mother. The presiding judge is Jeffrey Arnold Black, father of the prisoner. When "Rodeo" is brought in, a dramatic scene ensues, during which the two half brothers face each other. Nan embraces her wayward son while he bewails the fact that he had found his mother only to lose her, and draws his last breath after vindicating David.

A tender reconciliation follows between Madge, Jeffrey and their son David. Richardson seeks and obtains Nan's forgiveness for his suspicions of her. David and Kathleen May embrace, and then discuss their hopes of a little cottage for two.

pard, a medical student. One evening she is assaulted by Manuel Le Grange, an escaped murderer, who strangles her father when the latter attempts to save her. Hearing of Villier's murder, Despard returns to Christine, but she does not tell him of the attack. The next morning Christine leaves her home. In Paris her son is born and christened Jacques Cordet. Twenty-nine years pass.

Jacques Cordet, now criminal prosecutor for the State, lives with his mother, who is respected as the Widow Cordet. Jacques, the victim of a strange malady, is afflicted with severe headaches. While under their torture he acquires another personality, that of Lazard—"The Strangler." As Lazard he is the leader of a band of Apaches. Their rendezvous is The Scarlet Sun Inn. Here Lazard reads of the Prosecutor's fight against the Apaches and his efforts to arrest the fiend, "The Strangler." In the personality of Lazard, he does not remember that he is Cordet, whom he hopes to outwit.

Marie Sechard objects to her father taking a stranger, Manuel, to board with them. For thirty years Manuel has been lurking in Paris. Later Manuel robs Sechard and kills him. Dragging Marie with him to the Scarlet Inn, he shows her off to his Apache friends. Lazard wins her from Manuel in a fight in which Lazard's wrist is wounded. He falls asleep, and when he awakes, he is unconscious of what his other self passed through in the night.

At his office, Jacques, receiving "The Strangler's" letter, is amazed at the resemblance to his own handwriting. Jacques Despard, now a noted surgeon, entertains his medical colleagues and Jacques Cordet. Despard introduces Cordet to his daughter, Natalia. Cordet is seized with an attack of headache. Noting his illness, Despard and Natalia accompany him to his home. There Despard and Christine are startled at their recognition of each other. Jacques goes to his room, and Christine, believing him to be asleep, receives Despard. She tells her old lover of Manuel's assault on her and of the birth of her son, who was christened Jacques Cordet.

Meanwhile, Jacques in the personality of Lazard, has gone to Marie. She tells him that it was Manuel who killed her father. As the days pass, Jacques, in love with Natalia, spends his idle hours at the home of Dr. Despard. Marie prepares to avenge her father's death. Following Manuel, she sees him enter a residence. It is the home of Dr. Despard. Natalia has given the family jewels to the butler to put into the safe. There is a scream. Natalia and the servants rush in to find the butler dead and the jewels gone. The police pronounce it the work of "The Strangler." Manuel is followed and captured with the jewels in his possession.

Three weeks later, at the close of Manuel's trial, Cordet is seen as State Prosecutor. To hear the words that will send Manuel to his doom Marie visits the court for the first time. She recognizes the Prosecutor as Lazard, her sweetheart. Christine visits the court on the final day. She almost swoons when she sees that he is Manuel. Condemned to die, he is led away.

Jacques asks Dr. Despard for Natalia's hand, but he refuses, saying that some day he hopes Christine will tell Jacques about the barrier between him and Natalia. Days pass. Although Jacques pleads with his mother, Christine does not tell the story of his birth.

The Apaches, though hating Manuel, vow vengeance upon Cordet. Among them is Jacques in the personality of Lazard. He arranges to have a bomb placed under the Prosecutor's desk. Natalia is attacked. Her father responds to her call for help and they find Jacques Cordet in the personality of Lazard. Brought back to consciousness, he is told that he is Lazard, "The Strangler," whom he has sought. Jacques realizes that he has unjustly convicted Manuel. Despard informs Jacques of the latter's dual personality. Jacques tells his mother that tomorrow he will take Manuel's place at the guillotine. She then confesses that Manuel, though he is Jacques' father, committed a far greater crime against him (Jacques) and herself. He agrees to let Manuel pay for his crime, while he, a murderer, must answer to the law. The next day Manuel is guillotined.

The Apaches have placed a bomb under Cordet's desk. Marie comes to his office. Jacques telephones police headquarters that Manuel has just been executed for a crime which he, Jacques—then the bomb explodes. The room wrecked, Jacques and Marie buried under the debris. Rescued, Marie tells Jacques and the others that she had witnessed the killing of the Despard butler, by Manuel and not Jacques. Jacques cleared, she dies.

At the hospital, the pressure on Jacques' brain is removed by an operation, after which he will no longer suffer the curse of a dual personality. Despard now consents to a marriage between Natalia and Jacques.

[illegible] ER ([illegible])—Five Parts—July 5).—Stella Benton, a young society girl who has lost her beautiful voice through the death of her father, goes to live with her brother Charles, in the lumber camp. Charles Benton is having a struggle to make both ends meet, and when his cook quits, he makes his sister do the work for the hundred men in the lumber camp. Jack Fyfe, a neighboring lumber man, meets Stella and gradually falls in love with her, but love is not reciprocated. Seeing that she is being overworked, Fyfe offers to marry her, in spite of the fact that she does not love him.

A child is born of this loveless marriage, and the couple are reasonably happy, until Walter Monahan, a wealthy lumberman, begins to make love to Stella. She gradually becomes tired of her husband, and when the child dies, decides to leave him. Her voice returns, and she makes a substantial success as a concert singer. Monahan, who has professed love for her, becomes [illegible] and she will not return to Fyfe, in [illegible].

Monahan, jealous of Fyfe's success, sets fire to his holdings and is caught in the act. Friends telephone this fact to Stella, and she immediately returns to the lumber camp, and there, at their home she finds Jack, heartbroken, as his holdings are on fire and there is nothing but a heavy rain which could save them.

She comes to him and offers to use her own money to retrieve his lost fortune, and as she goes into his arms, the heavy downpour of rain comes and they are safe.

THE CIGARETTE GIRL (Astra—Two Parts—July 8).—The cast: The Cigarette Girl (Gladys Hulette); Money Meredith (William Parke, Jr.); Mrs. Wilson (Florence Hamilton); her husband (Warner Oland). Directed by William Parke.

Amid the noise of great revelry, night after night, graciously greeted wherever she stopped, The Cigarette Girl was easily the favorite of the New York restaurant. Carrying her tray of cigars and cigarettes, she knew nothing else, save honesty and a happy childish goodness. Among the crowd one stood out in Cigarette's eyes as being a hero, and this was Trot. Trot, being in a despondent mood, tells Cigarette that he has lost his position through resenting an insult passed about her. Pitying him, The Cigarette Girl brings him home to live with her mother.

Money Meredith, a young millionaire, was a frequent visitor at the New York restaurant, and was particularly struck by Cigarette's honesty. Meredith through his boyish inclinations falls in the clutches of Mrs. Wilson, who with her husband is scheming to secure a large sum from Meredith. Meredith's lawyer hits on an idea, which is to have him marry and sign over his money to his wife, thereby forestalling any suit for alienation of affections.

Attracted by the honesty of The Cigarette Girl, his lawyer advises Meredith to marry her for a month, and at the end of the period she is to receive $5,000. Consulting Trot and influenced by his advice, she accepts. Married, a new life begins. Meredith, always needing money, comes to Cigarette for a check, which he pleads is for Mrs. Wilson. Realizing that he is being defrauded, The Cigarette Girl refuses. Securing some money that Trot had made way with Cigarette returns it to Meredith and at his request signs over his money. Mrs. Wilson, being present, secures the papers and hurries away to cash a check of Meredith's, which she had previously obtained.

THE NEGLECTED WIFE (Episode No 9—"Deepening Degradation"—Two Parts—Balboa—July 28).—The cast: Margaret Warner (Ruth Roland); Horace Kennedy (Roland Bottomley); Mary Kennedy (Corenne Grant); Edgar Doyle (Neil Hardin); Frank Norwood (Philo McCullough).

Kennedy, still weak from the blow he received from one of Doyle's gangsters, finds himself closely held in Margaret's arms. Margaret is startled at the sight of Norwood. Kennedy, realizing the situation, implores Norwood not to say anything of this.

Norwood escorts Margaret home, and arriving at the apartment he tells Margaret he wishes to speak to her. "Tell me what this means? I want to help you," he says. "There is nothing I can tell. I want you to do nothing," she answers. Pleading with Margaret, Norwood bids her good night, very much disappointed.

Hearing Kennedy speaking to Margaret over the telephone, Mary enters. Kennedy, suspecting that she has heard everything he said, remonstrates with her for listening. "I know you are untrue to me and I have a perfect right to listen. She saved our lives, but I never will give her my happiness," his wife replies. "Promise me that you will never see her again." Kennedy makes no reply.

Doyle determines to have revenge upon Kennedy, Norwood and Margaret. Thus planning their destruction, Margaret receives a note telling her that Kennedy is in great danger and if she wishes to save him she must go with the woman in a taxi that now stands in front of her apartment. Thinking of nothing else but to save the man she loves, Margaret does not hesitate, but starts in search of Kennedy. Jumping into the taxi, Margaret discovers the veiled woman, who will not reply to her questions and motions her to wait. Where is this woman leading Margaret?

THE FATAL RING (Episode No. 1—"The Violet Diamond"—Two Parts—Astra—July 8).—Pearl Standish, bored with society and longing for excitement, is held up by a masked man who demands the violet diamond of The Daroon. He tells her that her father bought the diamond from a villainous priest in Arabia who stole it from its rightful owner. The masked man, Nicholas Knox, has been given three days to recover the diamond or die at the hands of the Secret Order at the head of which is a priestess who stops at nothing to gain her end.

The only man that might know something about this diamond is Richard Carslake, her father's former secretary. In spite of the knowledge that her father and he had had a disagreement, she requests him to give her what information he has concerning the violet diamond. Just then Knox enters, Pearl points to him and says, "There is the man who has the gold setting in which the stone belongs."

Immediately Carslake moves toward the door. Locking it and drawing his revolver, he demands the setting for the diamond. Searching Knox he finds the setting and is about to escape when through the window comes the priestess, accompanied by two of her spies, who sneak behind Carslake and knock the revolver from his hand. In the struggle which follows, Knox recovers the setting.

After a struggle Carslake escapes and Pearl finds herself alone with Knox. Wishing to know the identity of the mysterious woman who helped him, Pearl asks Knox. "I can tell you nothing," is his reply.

"Well then if you can tell me nothing, I want you to hand over that aparently much valued setting for the violet diamond," Pearl assures, covering him. Assisted by her butler, Pearl secures this setting, but the spies come to Knox's assistance again and Pearl is attacked by an Arab.

In a struggle with him on the stairs, she is hurled over the rail but catches on to the chandelier and falls to the floor. Knox is finally overpowered by the butler. Standing by a window, Pearl discovers a knife stuck in the wall. Pearl pulls this knife from the wall and discovers a note on it. "Fifteen days are allotted to you to return the violet diamond or die," it reads.

"What is this mysterious diamond, the possession of which means such dangers?" is the question which will bring audiences back for the next chapter.

ORIGINAL IN THE MOTIOGRAPH

The first of this model being sold in 1907—which was many years before the plan was adopted by other manufacturers—and any claim to the contrary is a misrepresentation, as is well known by all who are familiar with the history of motion picture machine progress.

The MOTIOGRAPH is known the world over as a leader in quality and is noted for small up-keep and perfect projection.

Does any projector at any price give more than the MOTIOGRAPH?

JUST A FEW OF ITS IMPORTANT POINTS OF MERIT

LAMPHOUSE—Large, well made and well ventilated.

ARC LAMP—[illegible] 8 in. lower and 12 in. upper [illegible] has 8 different adjustments.

CONDENSER MOUNT—So arranged that either condenser may be removed separately when desired; one of the latest improvements on the MOTIOGRAPH.

MECHANISM—Runs quiet, requires very little attention from operator, projects rock-steady picture, due to accuracy in manufacturing.

STAR AND CAM—Accurately ground and run in oil bath.

NEW PATENTED SLIDING DISC CONNECTION—Which has been used in the MOTIOGRAPH for [illegible] is becoming more popular every day with the users, due to its "no wear" qualities and rigidity produced in the framing device. (Ball [illegible])

[illegible] and steadi- [illegible]

PEDESTAL—Heavy; designed so as to eliminate vibration.

MAGAZINES—Made of heavy material, will hold 2,000 feet of film.

[illegible] (Machine can be purchased [illegible])

RHEOSTAT—Adjustable, 20 to 55 amperes.

REGULAR MOTIOGRAPH LENS with each equipment.

OUTSIDE SHUTTER—Now used on the MOTIOGRAPH instead of inside shutter, as on former models.

Price Complete $305.00

Maximum Current Gives High Intensity

For the projection of well defined pictures a clear light of high intensity is absolutely necessary. To carry the heavy current which must be available to obtain this intense white light, a negative carbon of minimum resistance is needed.

Not until Silvertips with their small diameter and heavy plating appeared on the market did exhibitors rest in their demands for a better carbon.

Today Silvertips and satisfactory projection mean the same thing. Theatre owners the country over feel that this new carbon has answered every demand—they know that Silvertips have made perfect projection a reality.

Send for booklet explaining their points of superiority.

Prospective Theatre Builders and Owners—

EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA has finished a 266-page book on Modern Theatre Construction. This issue, published by the Moving Picture World, has just left the press.

The absence of any serious or exhaustive published treatment of this important topic within the past quarter of a century, coupled with the present general tendency toward architectural uplift throughout this country, which aims at a simpler and truer form of art, renders the occasion opportune for the publication of such a volume as this.

In illustrating or citing the work of other architects the writer disclaims any malicious intention in pointing out faulty features. He simply offers them as examples of defective construction to be avoided.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

"Trained lightning" is the very life's blood of the moving picture industry. J. H. Hallberg has contributed a great deal to the particular kind of "training" which has adapted this "life's blood" to the use of presenting photographic images on the screen.

"MOTION PICTURE ELECTRICITY" gives its readers a comprehensive knowledge of this important subject and enables the manager and operator not only to get the best possible results from the equipment he is using but to save money while he is using it.

NINETEEN YEARS OF DIRECT-TO-THE-CONSUMER PUBLICITY BACK OF THIS PICTURE

AND OVER 200 PERFORMANCES ON BROADWAY —GLOBE THEATRE

Mr. Exhibitor:

Do you realize the possibilities of a picture that has had NINETEEN YEARS OF DIRECT PUBLICITY to the consumer—cumulative publicity on which you have only to CASH IN?

Here are the great, big, hard FACTS:

Benjamin Chapin traveled for 12 years over the United States, giving his Lincoln monologues. He also gave over 2,000 performances in vaudeville, impersonating Lincoln in a series of one-act plays. And several seasons in a four-act drama with a New York production.

The people of this country love Lincoln, and THEY KNOW CHAPIN AS LINCOLN. Their appreciation and patronage made Chapin the highest-salaried lyceum artist, and one of the highest-salaried performers in vaudeville.

Do you grasp what this means? Nothing less than an advance publicity campaign that all the millions of the richest producing company COULD NOT BUY! It means that a $50,000-a-year advance man has COVERED THE COUNTRY, advertising this picture, not for a campaign of months, BUT OF YEARS, as no picture in the history of the industry was ever advertised before.

We don't need to tell you about the picture. You have read the UNPRECEDENTED TRIBUTES which press and public alike have paid to this pictorial triumph of tears, thrills and laughter, personally produced by Benjamin Chapin—"The Call To Arms"—embodying a group of four features from the "Lincoln Cycle," marvelous in its dramatic power and heart appeal.

Are you going to be among those WHO WILL CASH IN?

Benjamin Chapin Studios:

"THE GOLDEN IDIOT"

Featuring

BRYANT WASHBURN

"The Golden Idiot" is another masterpiece so distinctive of Bryant Washburn's inimitable work. It is punctuated with all the subtlety and charm of his personality; is full of quaint humor and laughable situations.

A rich old man tells his two nephews he will leave his money to the one who possesses the most worldly goods when he dies. One nephew is a successful broker, the other a carefree ne'er-do-well.

Which do you think won the fortune? As the story unfolds it amazes and delights all, showing the vicissitudes of life that make rich men poor, and poor men rich.

NEAL HART in "Right-of-Way Casey"

3-Reel Bison, an Unusual Western—A Metropolitan Traffic Cop Licks a Whole Town Single Handed.

HERE'S a Western with an original twist that gives Neal Hart a chance to do some of the cleverest stunts you ever saw. Neal is a traffic cop in this Three Reel Bison released week of July 30, and he gets in bad for making love to his steady while he is on duty. Besides the sergeant is a crook and he wants Casey's girl himself. So he frames the lad, and a couple of crooks rap him over the head after he has caught them with the goods, and they have been released by the sarge. They throw Casey into a box car and he wakes up in a wild and woolly town, terrorized by bad men. What Casey, whose memory is gone, does to the town in his metropolitan uniform is a great story magnificently told. Be sure to book this. It's great.

Live Tips to Exhibitors

We just looked over the releases that they sent in from Universal City for next week, and say Bo, they are some releases. Harry Carey is as fine a shoot-'em-up Harry as any Wild West desperado in "The Soul Herder," the Bison three-reeler. This is the first 101 Bison three-reeler the Universal has made in a long time. But it couldn't be helped. "The Soul Herder" was so good it could not be cut a single foot and so the Boss just took the Gold Seal by the neck and said "one week for you in the rest house, and in the meantime we will have a 101 Bison three-reeler in its place, and this will be it." That's the energetic way they do things in this company. We were all tickled to death and so will you be, too. Harry saves a little child, the daughter of a sky pilot who has just been killed by the Indians. The little girl adopts him on the spot and makes him put her father's clerical vest on. Then you can guess the rest of "The Soul Herder."

Then there's "The Love Slacker," a Nestor. That's some title, too, and a real Nestor comedy, with Eddie Lyons shirking his duty to a fair young thing. Mary Fuller will play one of her best two-reelers in "The Untamed." It's a Kentucky moonshiner story, and Mary makes a fine moonshiner. But the revenue officer gets her at last. Another star for the week is Violet MacMillan in "Like Babes in the Wood," a two-reel Victor comedy drama. Violet is a welcome addition to our ranks and she will be seen in several other pictures, as she is "working regular" at the greatest little picture city. In "Like Babes in the Wood" she is assisted by a wonderful donkey to escape from a polar bear, a lion and a tiger, the greatest collection of manufactured wild animals ever released at Universal City. The greatest animal imitator in the world, Fred Woodruff, is responsible for them. Of course, everybody has heard of Omar, the Tentmaker. Well, when we saw William Franey in the Joker comedy for this week, with one accord we called it "O-my the Tentmover." Of course, it is a burlesque on the rubyat, and Franey is just too funny for words. He is getting to be one of the surest bets at Universal City for comedy.

"Married by Accident"

Nestor 1-Reel Comedy Filled With Funny Situations.

Eddie loved the daughter of the house, and Lee loved the maid. Eddie had no money—Lee had lots. The girl's mother wanted Lee for a son-in-law and could not see Eddie at all. All we propose to tell you here is that there were two weddings and in the end everyone is happy. This entertaining Nestor is released week of July 30. Book it.

POWERS

The Power's split reel for the week of July 30 is made up of a screamingly funny comic cartoon "The Good Liar," and a Ditmar Educational "In Monkey Land." The increasing number of prints necessary to supply the demand for this Power's release is proof that the fans like this sort of entertainment.

Universal Animated Weekly

"PERSHING IN FRANCE"

"ANOTHER Scoop for the Universal Animated" is getting to be a regular war cry these days. The latest big one the Animated put over was to show the first and only pictures of the arrival in France of General Pershing and staff. The pictures were shown in Broadway theatres the evening of the same day the negative was received. Since the first announcement of this brilliant stroke of enterprise the Animated offices have been besieged with bookings and the Universal Exchanges have been hollering for more prints. All of which shows that Exhibitors know a good thing when they see it. NOW—RIGHT NOW—you should get in your order for this unusual special release of the Universal Animated Weekly.

title, released week of July 30. He is managed by the hotel clerk and he does some highly original shadow boxing in the hotel office. All goes well until a masked marvel offers $50 to anyone who can stand up for four rounds. The fact that Bill has been flirting with the marvel's wife doesn't soften any blows and the fight is positively the funniest thing ever screened. You will miss a corker if you don't book this. UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS

CAN you think of any subjects more talked about today than the progress of the war? Of course not. That's the reason why the Universal Current Events is so popular throughout the country. Every week the real movie fans, the kind who are keen for animated or news weeklies, are creating a greater and growing demand for Universal Current Events. The subjects shown are such as you see nowhere else. Activities of the army and navy at home; the training camps; latest inventions and devices applicable to war; prominent people in the work of preparedness; the work of the Red Cross. If you can get "Current Events," beat your competitor to it.

L-KO

Merry School Girls and Boys Put Pep in the Latest L-KO Comedy

TWO full reels of the cleverest sort of comedy [illegible] that tickle the fans to death mark the two-reel L-Ko "Blackboard and Blackmail," released the week of July 30. There is more of a plot than you usually find in an uproarious comedy, and Phil Dunham, Myrta Sterling and Lucille Hutton furnish oodles of fun from start to finish. A pretty school teacher is the cause of all the trouble, also $50,000 that is in the safe of the school superintendent. It is quick, hurry-up comedy such as the fans like and was produced under the personal supervision of J. G. Blystone, director general of the L-Ko Comedy Company. Try this on your next comedy night and give the fans a good laugh.

Gale Henry a Scream in "The Stinger Stung"—One-Reel Joker.

GALE loved a farmer boy, that's why she wasn't interested in the judge when he tried to make love to her. Her lover tried to chase the judge away, but didn't succeed until he let a hive of bees loose where the judge would get the full benefit. He was tried for assault, and part of the evidence was a hive of bees. When they were brought into court, the hive was overturned, and the jury promptly said "Guilty." And you can't blame them. Released July 30.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE:

IN the latest, the current, issue of the Universal Screen Magazine, are some of the most fascinating subjects ever shown by this popular release. Among them is one of the most interesting, as well as one of the longest subjects ever shown in the Screen Magazine. This is a moving picture of all the stages of aeroplane manufacture. You see the shaping of the body, of the planes; the making of the propeller; the installation of the engine; the final assembling; the inspection by Government officials, and the trial flight. It is like visiting the great works where aeroplanes are built and watching each process on the ground. Another subject of great interest is the work of a great state institution for the blind where these unfortunates are taught useful trades, and many examples of the truly marvelous results obtained are shown. As usual, the famous "Miracles in Mud," animated sculpture by the famous Willie Hopkins, are shown. Altogether, with subjects to please everyone, the Universal Screen Magazine has the very best of reasons for the generous bookings accorded it from week to week. Get it now while you can. Released week of July 30.

Letters that MEAN SOMETHING. Letters that give actual facts. Letters that carry steel-bound, convincing proof of the Box Office power of this thrilling serial. Read every word.

I have just finished the first day's showing of Episode 1 of "THE GRAY GHOST" and am mighty pleased to tell you that in spite of the torrid day and a crippled advertising campaign, it has started bigger than any of its predecessors, and you know that is saying a lot. I have spent a lot of money and turned the town upside down in starting several serials before, but when "THE GRAY GHOST" starts off bigger without any effort, I think it is speaking mighty well for the Universal's latest serial production.

ARTHUR M. FORD, Manager Maple Theater, Wichita, Kan.

I ran the first episode of the great Saturday Evening Post serial "THE GRAY GHOST" yesterday, the first one I have had the pleasure of running in my theater, at the 10c admission price. It is also the first Universal serial I have ever run and I can truthfully say that the first espisode sur prised me, and this serial is, in my estimation, the best that I have ever run or seen in my life. It is my honest opinion that it will make more money for exhibitors than any serial they can book and will be the means of many exhibitors keeping open during the summer months.

W. D. SCOVILLE, Manager Idle Hour Theater, Kansas City, Mo.

We have scores of more letters like this and scores coming in daily from every part of the country. THAT'S THE KIND OF EVIDENCE THAT safeguards you in booking serials. The Proof

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1917

'GOD'S MAN' IS SURE TO PLEASE AND CHARM

By "ZIT."

"Is this 945 Bryant?"

"Yes."

"Is 'Zit' in?"

"On the phone. Who is this?"

"This is William L Sherrill."

"Hello, William L. What can I do for you?"

"Zit, I wish you would do me a personal favor."

"Go to it."

"My new feature picture, 'God's Man,' featuring H. B. Warner, directed by George Irving, is playing on the Loew Circuit. Would you mind running over and seeing the picture, and giving me a review on it? I would appreciate it greatly. You know my office is in the Times Building, and I wish you would come down and see me some time."

"I'll do that."

Well, when a big man like William L. Sherrill takes the pains to ask a poor "think-he-is" critic to go and review his latest effort, as Lillian Lorraine sings at the Palace this week, "Says I to Myself, Says I, I Will." So to Loew's midnight aerial roof garden, with movies "as you like them," I took myself all alone.

The only seat I could find in that vast roof garden was one little chair by the music, the place was so crowded. At 9 18 appeared the sign, "William L. Sherrill presents 'God's Man,' with H. B. Warner," and the "God's Man" picture was on. It's seven reels, 15 minutes to a reel, and 15 times 7 are 105 minutes, or one 1 hour and 45 minutes.

What Mr. Sherrill wants me to criticize in this picture I don't know, for there is nothing to criticize. All you can do is to shout its praises. I was held spellbound. It scared me, it pleased me, thrilled me; made me sad, made me glad; and if it did that to me, it's going to do twice as much for anyone else, for surely I am compelled to see probably more pictures than the average picture fan. My only regret was that the picture wasn't three hours and forty-five minutes.

Marcus Loew charges his staple price for admission, and if he had doubled the price, as he does when he plays a pinochle hand in spades, no one would be sorry for what he paid after witnessing "God's Man." It is a moral lesson beyond a doubt. It takes you from the church to race track and gambling, wine, women and song. It shows you the good side of character, the bad side, all the tricks in the underworld, and the good things in the overworld. It shows you what craving for money will do. It is full of love, hate, death, sacrifice. It bring you right back home.

There is only one thing in the picture I did not like. The author, George Bronson Howard, has made New York City the city of vice, the city that corrupts, the city that ruins men and women. George Bronson Howard is a great author, and has probably travelled all over the world, and why he should land on New York as being the only place where a man or woman can be ruined is quite beyond me. Every little town has its Broadway, and if the musical director, Mr. Lutz, who forms the orchestrations for the pictures that play the Loew theatres, had been really smart and had any kind of wit after the slide appeared followed by Broadway and its white lights, the orchestra would have played George M. Cohan's famous song, "Don't Blame It All on Broadway." That would have been a "get back" at the picture, which would have caused a storm of applause. If orchestraters would sometimes select an appropriate melody to accompany a slide or picture, they could cause as much of a laugh as some of the title slides.

The slides in "God's Man" are exceptionally good, witty and up-to-date. It has always been, and I have said many and many a time before, that it is the policy of this department not to divulge the story of a picture.

H. B. Warner, "God's Man," goes through heaven and hell to try to do what's right, and when his entire ordeal is over he really gives himself to God, the Great Judge and Jury of us all.

Don't fail to see "God's Man." The acting is superb, the cast is remarkable, the story intense. It will make a better man of you and give you food for thought when it's all over.

Thank you, Mr. Sherrill, for asking me to go to see it.

La Badie Fans are Everywhere!

And, as you see, they write letters from Japan in German!

BUT to get down to hard facts, Florence La Badie has admirers all over the world, and so have Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels and Gladys Leslie. In America, of course, they are best loved of all. La Badie, Warde, Eagels or Leslie are names that get business whenever an American exhibitor posts them over his theatre door.

DID YOU EVER SEE SUCH NOTICES—

as the press gives the Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster plays in which these favorites appear? If any other producer got 'em he'd fall into the studio tank in amazement. If you don't believe it, read 'em!

"THE WOMAN IN WHITE"—A gripping drama throughout, capably directed and ably acted, and reaches a high water mark in Thanhouser productions."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

"FIRES OF YOUTH"—A typical Thanhouser effort and one that will win on any program, having a special interest for every age." Sunday Telegraph.

"AN AMATEUR ORPHAN"—The success of "The Candy Girl" and its predecessors will be repeated by "An Amateur Orphan."—Moving Picture World.

"THE CANDY GIRL"—Another Gladys Hulette picture, reversing the usual order of the Hulette pictures, but entertains quite as fully as did its predecessors."—Motion Picture News.

"VICAR OF WAKEFIELD" (Special Release)—This subject, in which Frederick Warde was featured at the Rialto, preserves all the qualities which characterize Oliver Goldsmith's classic novel."—Moving Picture World.

"WHEN LOVE IS BLIND"—The characters portrayed will arouse sympathetic interest, while the fine continuity will please. What little of the "sex problem" there is in the story has been handled with great delicacy."—Sunday Telegraph.

"POTS-AND-PANS PEGGY"—Another very entertaining Thanhouser picture. It is a grateful relief to view a picture that avoids the sordid side of modern life."

GOLDWYN, in the motion picture industry, is willing to abide by the maxim of the greatest merchant the world has ever known that "the customer is always right."

Throughout the United States and Canada Goldwyn's representatives are under instruction to keep faith with exhibitors; to live up to every promise; to sell Goldwyn Pictures squarely and honorably and to avoid attacking a competitor's pictures as a means of selling our own productions.

We know it is possible to build a great and enduring business in the motion picture industry, by introducing the high principles and practices of other industries—and we are proceeding on the assumption that great productions linked with exhibitor friendships are the most desirable assets a producer can possess.

Proof of the soundness of these policies is found in the fact that Goldwyn Pictures are being booked under contract—without argument or debate—by the most cautious and alert exhibitors in every part of the nation.

TRIANGLE

This Much Is Certain Concerning Triangle

THE future of TRIANGLE was never more assured than at present. A complete reorganization of producing plants has placed the production of pictures on an accurately scientific business basis. All waste will be eliminated—the entire cost of a production going into the picture itself—a plan not heretofore followed. High quality, however, will not be sacrificed.

FIRST—TRIANGLE productions will be made by the best directors that can be secured.

SECOND—Every completed picture will be passed upon by expert critics. Any picture not meeting the TRIANGLE standard will not be released on the TRIANGLE PROGRAM. This plan assures exhibitors of consistently high quality.

THIRD—There will be stars in future TRIANGLE productions as in the past. Every exhibitor knows that TRIANGLE has made more stars than any other motion picture company.

FOURTH—TRIANGLE will offer a most efficient service to exhibitors in helping them to advertise and promote TRIANGLE productions. Exhibitors will have three valuable assets in every TRIANGLE production—the star, the production and the service.

FIFTH—The TRIANGLE PROGRAM will be sold at equitable prices—each picture to be a valuable asset to any house.

WE submit this proposition to every fair minded exhibitor in the country. Our success lies in the hands of exhibitors and with their cooperation we have no fears.

MR. EXHIBITOR, if our plan of doing business in a real business like way appeals to you, we want to hear from you.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS EXCHANGES

JULY 21, 1917

MUTUAL EXCHANGES STOCKED WITH SUMMER BUSINESS BUILDERS

SUMMER is here. Mutual Exchanges are stocked with vast libraries of just the sort of film subjects that are sought by open air theatres, airdomes, and other houses seeking summer business builders. Among them may be mentioned series of five reelers starring such celebrities as Mary Miles Minter, Nance O'Neil, Marjorie Rambeau, William Russell and others of equal note. Shorter subjects featuring other popular favorites are also available.

Splendid Variety Offered.

Variety of the widest sort is offered by the film obtainable at any Mutual Exchange. One can obtain five reel feature subjects in series—the subjects all featuring some famous and popular star. Among this class of offerings are the Mary Miles Minter Series, the William Russell Series, the Marjorie Rambeau Series, etc. For the exhibitor desiring a shorter series Mutual Exchanges offer a two-subject series of Nance O'Neil Mutual Pictures. One can obtain two reel comedies of snap, action and ginger like the series of Strand Comedies starring Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco. Still another ideal summer attraction is "The Great Stanley Secret," a continued feature in two four-reel chapters This production stars William Russell, Charlotte Burton, William Tedmarsh and Rhea Mitchell. Edward Sloman directed it.

Look Over the List.

A visit to the nearest Mutual Exchange will enable any exhibitor to look over a list of available attractions that in quality and drawing power are second to none. He is sure to find a great number of subjects that will enable him to win and hold business no matter what the weather. To insure securing the attractions he wants when he wants them, the wise exhibitor will make his reservations without delay.

Coming Empire Pictures

Very soon the first releases of the Empire All Star Corporation studios will be announced. These are the subjects chosen from the Charles Frohman stage successes—all of them proven attractions of real drawing power. In each a famous Frohman star is featured. Among those appearing in Empire Pictures already completed may be mentioned Ann Murdock, Julia Sanderson and Olive Tell. Other stars made famous by Charles Frohman are Maude Adams, William Gillette and Billie Burke. See your nearest Mutual Exchange for further particulars, and reservations.

Star Productions for July

Write or visit your nearest Mutual Exchange for release dates.

Title	Lead
The Masked Heart	William Russell
Mary Moreland	Marjorie Rambeau
Betty Be Good	Jackie Saunders
Melissa of the Hills	Mary Miles Minter
Pride and the Man	William Russell

First Juliette Day Subject Is Unique

The vehicle in which Juliette Day will make her debut in Mutual Pictures is a subject of the most unique kind. Its title is "Betty and the Buccaneers." J. Edward Hungerford wrote the story which is a tale of pirates bold, thrilling adventure and romance. Rollin Sturgeon, the director responsible for the first Gail Kane pictures made at the American Studios in Santa Barbara, California, is in charge of production. Every exhibitor knows Sturgeon's attention to detail and the polished, quality atmosphere that pervade all his pictures. "Betty and the Buccaneers" is no exception to the rule, and in some respects outdoes any previous offerings directed by Sturgeon. In the cast supporting Miss Day appear such favorites as Joe King, Charles Marriott, Tote Du Crow, William Kyle, Gordon Russell and Harold Wilson. Reservations for the entire series of Juliette Day pictures can be made now at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

Stunning Frocks Worn by Gail Kane

In her next Mutual Picture Gail Kane will wear some unusually stunning frocks—gowns that will make every feminine patron "sit up and take notice." The story of Miss Kane's next vehicle is a thrilling and sensational one from the pen of Julius Grinnell Furthmann, who has supplied several of the most popular William Russell stories. The picture is peculiarly timely since it has to do with the secret service of several foreign governments now at war. It reveals in detail the workings, plots and counterplots by which the spies of one government learn the most carefully guarded secrets of another kingdom. Miss Kane is supported by Douglas MacLean, Ashton Dearholt and others who have appeared in previous subjects of the Gail Kane series.

JACKIE SAUNDERS IN "BETTY BE GOOD" HAS TOM-BOY ROLE

JACKIE SAUNDERS is the star of the Mutual five reel feature released the week of July 16th. "Betty Be Good" is the title of the attraction. Will M. Ritchey wrote the story. Sherwood MacDonald directed it. William Beckway is responsible for the photography. It affords Miss Saunders another opportunity to play the tom-boy—to romp about in the manner which has endeared her to photoplay patrons the country over.

A Notable Cast.

A notable cast supports Miss Saunders throughout the production. Included in it are such favorites as Arthur Shirley and Captain Leslie T. Peacocke. This is Captain Peacocke's first screen appearance in a long time, though he is known everywhere as a short story writer, poet and playwright of note. He interprets the role of Jackie's millionaire father, who is always cautioning her to "be good!"

Betty in this instance is the daughter of one of the city's wealthiest families—a hoydenish, petted little rich girl possessed with a peculiar mania for getting into trouble no matter what she does. At the time the story opens the food question is playing an important part in the lives of both rich and poor, and bread riots are a not uncommon occurrence. The poor people hold Betty's father responsible for the high cost of living, since he heads one of the largest food products concerns in the city. Betty determines to do her part in relieving the sufferings of the poor, but when she raids a corner grocery and distributes its stock among the clamoring populace she is soundly scolded by her father and warned to "be good!" One adventure follows another, till Betty at length capitulates to the little god of love and promises a strapping big husband to not only "love, honor and obey," but to also "be good."

Directed By Sherwood MacDonald.

"Betty Be Good" was directed by Sherwood MacDonald, the same man who produced previous offerings starring Miss Saunders. Bookings on the entire Jackie Saunders Series can now be made at any Mutual Exchange.

Next Minter Subject

"Melissa of the Hills," a story of a mountain feud, will be the next Mary Miles Minter picture released through Mutual Exchanges. It was written by Maibelle Heikes Justice, who is known to film fans everywhere as one of the most successful scenario writers of the day—an author responsible for the stories of many current film successes.

"BETTY BE GOOD"

A five act drama by Wm. M. Ritchey. Directed by Sherwood MacDonald. Photographed by William Beckway. Released the week of July 16th.

"Photography and settings are good throughout. The offering is a wholesome, enjoyable one which will go well in any neighborhood house and will be liked by the whole family" says Motography in reviewing "A Bit of Kindling," a recent Jackie Saunders-Mutual Picture.

The breezy, wholesome, tom-boy personality of Jackie Saunders inspires a liking in everyone who witnesses her antics on the screen. The productions in which she appears, exhibitors concede, are the kind that appeal to the most exacting type of audiences. For bigger, better business at YOUR theatre, book the entire series of Saunders pictures. Make application at your nearest Mutual Exchange.

ANN MURDOCK

Frohman Stars

THE most celebrated stars in all the world—Charles Frohman Stars—will soon be coming to you in motion pictures. Charles Frohman made famous such stars as Maude Adams, Ann Murdock, William Gillette, Olive Tell, Billie Burke and Julia Sanderson. His reputation is world wide. Now, by special arrangement, the Empire All Star Corporation will present the Charles Frohman successes in motion pictures.

Several companies of Frohman Players have been engaged for several months in the production of Empire Pictures. We are now ready to announce the forthcoming presentation of these renowned Frohman Stars:

Ann Murdock
Julia Sanderson
Olive Tell

These famous stars will be presented, beginning next September, in series of Charles Frohman Successes in motion pictures. Other Frohman stars and plays will be announced later.

All of the unlimited resources of the well known Frohman organization, including plays, players, properties, costumes, etc., are being employed in the making of Empire Pictures. The direction of these productions is in the hands of such notable artists as Albert Capellani and Dell Henderson.

A FOREWORD

My next production, which will be completed, early in August, bears the title of "THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS." It is a story dealing with the incidents which led up to the abdication of Nicholas, Czar of Russia. Primarily, however, it shows the power of one individual over the destiny of a nation, proving once more that genius directed toward evil will, in the end, bring forth but evil.

Rasputin, the peasant power behind the throne, was directly reponsible by his misdeeds for his own death and the fall of the Romanoff Dynasty.

Iliodor, a Priest of the Greek Catholic Church, has recited to the world his version of the intrigues of the Russian court in which Rasputin played the principal role.

This strange young Priest set himself up against Rasputin in an effort to overthrow him and gain for himself the high place at court which the peasant held. Rasputin, however, was far the greater genius of the two, and Iliodor found himself entangled in a web of circumstances which ended in his being unfrocked by the Greek Catholic Church and exiled to America. Iliodor will play himself in this actual reproduction of recent Russian history.

It is hard to believe that such a disgraceful condition of affairs as we are picturing could exist in any government of today; but that the main facts in "THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" are true can be verified by reading the recent books of the historians, who have set down the incidents leading up to the Russian Revolution and the formation of the present Republic.

Austin Strong and George Edwardes Hall have dramatized this remarkable story into a photoplay and, following the example of Alexander Dumas and Sir Walter Scott, blended fact with fiction. As a result I am now producing the most extraordinary photodrama of my career.

Herbert Brenon

Mr. Brenon is personally directing this production by special arrangement with Mr. Lewis J. Selznick and the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation.

Every "POKES and JABS" Comedy is a romp. It is a revel culminating in a sort of "riot." The fun is galvanic. The humor has high voltage. The stunts are electrifying.

Just Try These Six:

Are Actors People?	Here a curious question is raised. Are they? Who dare answer? See the picture
Military Madness	It would peeve anybody who had to go to war and whip both the enemy and his own army.
A Ride for Life	There's a convulsion in every scene of this one, and the climax shows Pokes pedaling on a bike madly out to sea
The Rest Cure	The main accomplishment recorded here is a gink getting completely cured of rest
The Pearls of Pauline	Pauline stays in the background and lets the pearls pulsate. Sleuth stuff, adventure and giggles.

The Beloved Characters of "O. Henry"

Alice Rodier as Ada in "NO STORY"

ADA LOWERY

The girl from Wolfville was faint and hungry. She had struck town one morning via the Liberty street ferry with 25 cents, which was promptly spent for gum drops. These—even the pink ones—are not much in a way of nourishment.

It was her first visit to New York. And after stepping from the boat Ada found herself utterly bewildered. On the old West Side she wandered about, searching. She looked into men's faces. She beheld them either cynical, surprised or savage. To them this strange girl with the rich glint of the orchard sun in her hair and with the yearning eyes and with the new, ill-fitting gown complacently fashioned by some village dressmaker, presented something outside of their philosophy. A simpleton-at-large was the verdict of most. Others were not so generous in thought. She looked into the faces of all of them—too timid to speak—in her quest for George Brown, sweetheart of her school days.

A seedy fellow lurched along, stopped, and regarded her fixedly. He noted her clear-red cheeks and every mark of the rural about her—every high note of the unaccustomed, from her hat of weird straw to the loose buttoned shoes she wore—even the tawdry broken dime carried on her neck chain as her sole talisman in this city of harsh destinies.

And when he walked up to her, she trusted him.

* * * *

O. Henry didn't write it in just these words. They are the beginning of a description of the way "NO STORY"—his story—is interpreted on the film. Talk about Atmosphere—the real "O. Henry" atmosphere—well, there are twenty of these O. Henry stories available for every exhibitor, and each one so throbs with atmosphere it's no wonder the country has gone wild over them already.

MOTION PICTURE ART NUMBER

Progress of Art in Pictures

A Symposium Upon the Various Phases of Motion Picture Production Contributed by Screen Writers, Directors and Players Concerning the Details of Their Day's Work and Their Hopes for Betterment—A Record of the Wonderful Strides Made in Methods by Men of Thought and Action

FOREWORD BY JAMES L. HOFF.

SHALL art in motion pictures become a reality or is it just a pretty phrase to roll under the tongue? It is a subject much written about but practiced indifferently by a great many enthusiastic producers. By calling this issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the "Motion Picture Art Number" it may be that we are commandeering the term "Art" for our own uses; but our intentions were of the best, for the purpose in so naming it was to differentiate between what might be artistic even if it is not, and all that pertains to pure money-getting business.

Believing that motion pictures and art may be and, in some particulars, are very closely associated, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has invited many of the men and women engaged in the work of production to tell what they are doing to further the cause of art in pictures, and why and how. The response has been most liberal. Much that has been written has met the requirements and is herewith published in the following pages. Almost every branch of the work of production has been covered by competent writers who are doing the things they write about or are careful students thereof. Those of our readers who are constrained to read these articles carefully will surely be benefited thereby.

Primarily the making of pictures is an art, but in the making of motion pictures for amusement purposes the demands of business enter so largely into that making that art is, at times, lost sight of—quite effectually buried under monetary exactions. From player and director down through the manufacturer and exchange to the exhibitor the clamor is for the money-getting picture.

Recent years have seen a turn for the better. In the early days—the good old days, when the one-reelers were turned out as grist from the mill—art had little function in a picture studio. The demand was for quantity to meet the requirements of the overworked program serving picture shows changing pictures every day. Then the feature came along, and someone discovered that a good feature could be shown several days in the same theater to a profit. That changed conditions and gave art a look-in.

Features offered to the player opportunities for character work, and there have been screen creations not to be excelled on the speaking stage. The director and the camermen saw their opportunity, too. Then we discovered the art director, and pictures have been developing along lines of art ever since.

For all this improvement there are yet serious obstacles to the progress of art in motion pictures. Too many stories are being written to emphasize the star, ofttimes with utter disregard to the logic of the story and in favor of the questionable drawing power of the alleged star.

Then, too, there is the so-called "punch," which becomes quite inanimate when dragged in by the heels for the purpose of bolstering up an impossible story. It serves, then, but one purpose—the destruction of whatever artistic effort that may happen to be associated with it upon the film.

There is also the miscasting of players, too frequently done to place some favorite not calculated by ability or physical make-up to carry the past assigned.

All these are matters easy of correction when they come to be properly recognized as detrimental to the perfection of artistic portrayal in screen drama.

In the following pages considerable attention is given to the "Story." All of our contributors writing on that subject agree that "the story is the thing," and some of them tell what sort of a "thing" they believe it should be. It is unfortunate that, in many cases, the story is subordinated to the star, whereupon the story might as well be written around a piece of furniture or a suite of scenery when artistic portrayal is sought. And this is the burden of the story writer's complaint.

Attention of our readers will be arrested by the clarity of the description of the work of Hugo Ballin and Everitt Shinn, written by Vivian M. Moses. This is, we believe, the first time that the inner workings of the newer art movement in pictures has been adequately portrayed. How great an influence the work of these two skilled artists may exert upon the future of the motion picture cannot yet be estimated, but there is promise of wonderful results from the painstaking care and excellent taste they are bringing to their work. It may be that they herald a new era in the making of pictures.

There is also an interesting story told of the development of the animated cartoon, which, by the way, is one of the most important steps of progress in motion pictures

Dear Sir:
May
I ask the Moving Picture World's columns to express my regret at my inability to be present at their exposition.
I look forward with pleasure to my adventure upon the screen

MARY GARDEN'S GREETING TO THE MOTION PICTURE MEN AND WOMEN OF AMERICA

When it became certain that Mary Garden would be unable to return to America to keep an engagement to meet the members of the trade at the Chicago Exposition and Convention it was planned that she should express her regrets through the columns of the Moving Picture World. After considerable difficulty, through the activities of the U-boats, the diva was reached in Paris and the letter reproduced above was received in time for publication in this number. The Moving Picture World is pleased to be the medium of communication between so great a prospective motion picture star and joins the craft in wishing her an early and safe return to America and pleasurable excursion into Screenland.

during the recent years. Many readers of the Moving Picture World will recall the first animated cartoon, "Little Nemo in Slumberland," made at the old Vitagraph studio by Winsor McCay, creator of "Little Nemo." It was said of that picture that over 11,000 drawings had to be made and photographed one at a time and that nearly three months was spent in the process. This laborious task has been simplified by the inventions of John Randolph Bray so that the animated cartoons of today are made with a minimum of labor and time. Our readers cannot fail to be interested in Mr. Bray's story of the cartoon.

Another development of these later picture days is noted in the story of the animated news reel, which is the term given to the motion picture newspaper. Probably no one feature of motion picture development is more popular than the "news reel"; surely none has a wider circulation.

There is also an exhaustive article on the "Better Films Movement" written by Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review. Mr. Cocks goes into the subject at length and offers suggestions for the betterment of motion pictures that should serve as a guide to all producers.

Sidney Drew offers a number of suggestions concerning comedy pictures, defining what real comedy is and why. As the Drew comedies are probably the best example of true comedy made today his observations should be a real message to writers who would strive for the lighter effects.

Frank E. Woods, better known to the trade as "Spec" contributes a highly instructive article on the subject "Editing a Motion Picture." Mr. Woods' long association with the motion picture business as a critic, a scenario writer, a director and supervisor of productions under David W. Griffith, puts him in a distinct class as an authority on matters pertaining to pictures.

But enough of this; it is sufficient that we commend the efforts of our gracious contributors to our readers and we do so believing that they will find much that will entertain and instruct.

The Better Films Movement

By ORRIN C. COCKS

WHAT are better films? Everyone from producers and actors to exhibitors and audiences is asking this question throughout the country. If some cut-and-dried definition could be prepared, many wrinkles would disappear from troubled brows. The answer, however, is so elusive that many will remain dissatisfied. It is always easier to talk about the ideal than to attain it.

A few statements may be ventured as a partial description of the unattainable. Certainly the movement aims toward the production of a greater number of pleasing and artistic motion pictures which shall not offend against the fundamental truths of life. Better motion pictures are created with wholesome action and the essence of adventure in God's out-of-doors. They glorify nothing unseemly. They make evil unattractive. They are kindly, happy and inspiring or serious, thoughtful and tragic. They convey the saving qualities of human nature without which no story or drama is healthy or truthful. They help boys and girls to admire the heroic, laugh heartily and love goodness. They tell the clean and fine stories of romance without the intrusion of the sins that so easily beset us. They add to the joy of living and send people away glad that motion pictures have arrived to touch the heartstrings of life. A fine spirit breathes through them which captures the imagination of everyone, even grandfather. Through the years these pictures have been given to us with sufficient frequency to make us feel that the motion picture as a whole has something fine and worthy to confer on humanity.

No Lack of Themes.

There is no want of themes which may be used in infinite combinations for better motion pictures. In their present development the writers and directors charged with creating them have overworked a small number of dramatic ideas for the entertainment of the American people. A number of them have centered around the relationships of men and women before and after marriage. These conventional themes have been worn threadbare, especially when they have illustrated the frailty of human nature when brought into contact with the allurements and temptations of sex. A dash or a hogshead full of crime has often been added to illustrate the triumph of virtue.

The American people, however, attend motion picture entertainments partly because they desire action, movement and adventure, something which will counteract the deadly routine of the machine, the office desk and the cook stove. It does not matter whether the action is physical, as in the case of the heroic cowboy chased by a band of Indians, intellectual, as in the matching of wits of Sherlock Holmes and some criminal, or emotional, as when Oliver Twist causes the whole audience to hunt their handkerchiefs. Half the world loves a hero and the other half is quite as fond of the heroine if only they will make clear in their action the fact that they are deserving of the title. That director or actor has achieved the pinnacle when he awakens in his audiences fine thoughts and aspirations or contentment and purifying emotions.

All these things are achieved in the drama. But some films, while they carry an interesting story, are lifted out of the common run of pictures by their beauty or by the accuracy of the photoplay. Indeed, their values are enhanced or minimized by the settings, backgrounds, distances, color values and tints. Show dog sleds on snow fields, the majesty of the redwoods, a sparkling river with drooping trees, a log drive on an icy river, a lovely set of spring scenes in a fertile countryside, or the movements of the ocean on the shores of Bermuda, New England or Catalina, and the applause is both immediate and spontaneous. These atmospheric aids to drama hold the attention spellbound, they thrill the emotional nature and linger in the mind after the story has faded away.

Mistakes Made in Casting.

There have been many mistakes made in preparing dramatic motion pictures by the poor selection of actors and actresses who take the principal parts. Since pictures are entirely dependent upon action both of face and figure it is increasingly necessary to make careful selections of types who shall carry out the theme without the introduction of gestures, expressions, movements, etc., which are distasteful. It is almost commonplace to remark that two persons can act the same part and the effect on the audiences be absolutely different. Don't be misled! The themes mentioned below are full of "snap," "go" and "punch" if they combine capable direction, good acting and dramatic quality.

These facts demonstrate that fine pictures are the result of an emphasis on theme, actors and surroundings. Many a motion picture would stand out clearly as a gem if more were left to the imagination of the audiences. Others would be hailed with enthusiasm if directors made more sparing use of certain kinds of realistic detail, and still others would rise to the first class if the artistic and appealing theme were not abandoned to wander far afield in side issues which appear to have "punch."

While the following is not in any sense a complete list of the ideas which may be used successfully for inspiring, wholesome and entertaining pictures, they are at least suggestive of types. Needless to say, most stories require the introduction of the love interest as at least a secondary theme.

Subjects Worth While.

"Heroism" has always had its appeal whether it referred to those who effected rescues or those who had performed the far more courageous work of meeting the hard problems of life through a series of years. Not only are Charlotte Corday, Father Damien, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, David Livingstone, Father Marquette and William Tell to be included among this number, but untold numbers of simple people who touch the heartstrings of humanity by their courage in the midst of the disasters of life.

"Devotion" is another theme worthy of consideration, whether it be devotion to family, to duty, to right or to the needy. O. Henry has a pathetic story of a shop girl who goes through a mental struggle in her hall bedroom and finally decides to follow the path of honor and right. Savanarola and John Huss would thrill audiences who attend motion pictures quite as thoroughly as they have captured the imagination of the world for centuries. The love of people manifested by St. Francis of Assisi, the Earl of Shaftsbury, and Jane Addams may not be as exciting as the affairs of Baron Chevriel, but they thrill the imagination of quite as many people. Those who have caught the spirit of the principal character in the film "Christus" may be sure of awakening the same emotions as he.

The subject of "Love" also can be treated in a vast variety of ways. Witness the stories of David and Jonathan, Jean Valjean and Cosette, Ruth and Naomi. In its highest forms suggestions can be found on which to base stories in Henry Drummond's "The Greatest Thing in the World" or the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. Many of the stories of Ian MacLaren are full of this spirit in the shape of the doctor who was devoted to his poor patients in the Highlands of Scotland. Some of the stories of Barrie like "Margaret Ogilvy" may be cited. There are many other tales which show the affection of parents for children or brother for sister which are entirely different from the more or less sensual love described in many modern motion pictures.

Some of the great stories of the world have been written around persons who were ill and have to do with their courage, their influence on society, and the fine traits of character which are brought out in those who have ministered to them. It is impossible to find many stories like "Little Dorrit," "The Life of Stevenson," "The Man Who Laughs" and the "Life of Milton" in modern homes, in the hospitals and among the poor. Somewhat similar are tales which deal with incomparable optimism and cheerfulness in the midst of succeeding disasters which overwhelm and embitter those who are not made of the finest stuff. The classic illustration is Job. In these days when life is so complex, many persons are attacked by forces entirely beyond their own control.

The many personal applications of "War" which has recurred through history offer themes which are inspiring and invigorating. These may be intimate stories of frontier life, of attacks by the Indians such as that of Jane McCrea, or incidents in the "Leatherstocking Tales," stories dealing with individuals in the wars of our own country or tales which have been made dramatic in connection with the Crusades, the Free Companies of Italy, the French Revolution, the Sepoy Rebellion or '61-'65.

A theme of ever-present interest is that of "Adventure." The whole world is open and all the time at the disposal of the person who desires to use this theme. G. A. Henty wrote books which have captured the imagination of young people and which run through time from ancient Egypt to the wars of the Crimea. Who can fail to love John Paul Jones, Paul du Chailleau, Davy Crockett, or David Livingstone? In "Puck of Pook's Hill" Rudyard Kipling tells us many a tale of English history which hold adults as well as children spellbound.

The simple "Life in the Country" has also many themes which will prove of interest. Gene Stratton Porter has given us some of these stories, J. T. Trowbridge still others, and John Fox has made the Cumberland hills attractive to people of all ages.

Intimate "Stories of the Poor," their pathetic sacrifices, their struggle against odds, their success in the midst of almost overwhelming difficulties and their heroic self-sacrifice for family are themes which are far more real than those which show young people suddenly snatched out of such an environment or succumbing to personal temptations because of need. Dickens discovered scores of such humble people in England, from Little Nell to Peggoty, Barrie has charmed us with the dour peasants of Scotland, Balzac has performed the same service for France, and Lincoln has portrayed the charms of the Cape Cod folk.

"Work" has sometimes been regarded as a prosaic theme, but those who dig a little bit beneath the surface will find in this common denominator for society a vast number of intimate, homely and yet inspiring stories of sterling characters able to resist the temptations of life. Charles Reade's "Put Yourself in His Place" and Morrison's "Tales of Mean Streets" are but two of many illustrations.

Another theme worth considering is that which emphasizes "Successful Struggle Against Odds" and difficulties. This is a common experience of the vast majority of mankind. While their lives may appear to be commonplace to them, at least there is a constant fight, and for this reason pictures which will give encouragement and inspiration will touch a common chord, especially in America, where the miracle is being performed daily of transformation of persons from one group or class to another because of their ability to grapple with and overcome obstacles.

Another class of pictures which will meet with appreciation from the mass of people are those which will show in a dramatic form the ability of mankind to make mistakes, fall into error, commit sin, break the law, and win their way back to character and success. It is well worth while making clear in intimate and homely ways or in large and dramatic ways the possibility of another chance. If it were possible to look into the lives of most people, it would be found that somewhere in their careers they have made such mistakes, but have refused to be thrown into the discard or left at the wayside of life because of them.

Many illustrations could be cited of the dramatic possibilities of themes dealing with such ethical subjects as "honesty," "justice," "mercy," "forgiveness" and "magnanimity." These are not dry ethical terms, but are full of life for those who would use them. The stories of Mark Twain and Sir Walter Scott have many modern parallels which lend themselves to the motion picture.

There are many suggestions also from the lives of individuals which will arouse the sentiment of "patriotism" in these days when it is needed. These have been by no means exhausted. In the case of such great men as Lafayette, Lincoln, Gordon, Nathan Hale, Andreas Hofer and Arnold von Winkelried we have classic illustrations.

There is something stimulating in the experiences of pioneers and explorers which interest and inspire readers and audiences. One needs only to call the roll of a few of these to make clear their dramatic possibilities—Sir Walter Raleigh, Daniel Boone, David Livingstone, Sven Hedin, Peary, and Marco Polo.

Sports Offer Wide Field.

The world of "sports" has scarcely been touched. There are fine heroic characters to be found among hunters, trappers, football and baseball players, yachtsmen and the many other activities which develop fair play, the element of suspense, success against competing teams and fine sportsmanship.

Kipling has given us some fine stories and poems of the sea. The whaling industry is painted in interesting fashion by Frank Bullen. Connolly's tales are attractive and the experiences of fishermen on the Newfoundland banks and in the North Sea offer suggestions for splendid sea tales. Many stories also have been written about the South Sea Islands and the far away places of the earth, as well as more peaceable ones dealing with the details of commerce on the high seas which have stimulated persons to love the open places and the freedom of action of the seven seas.

Dramatic "stories of the railroads" also have not been exhausted. Those which have been given us dealing with the stories of the extension of the transcontinental lines including those of Canada and the incidents of the life of railroad men illustrate clearly that this is a field full of possibilities.

Few motion pictures have been made dealing with the thoroughly dramatic phases of missions and the life of missionaries. One has only to read a well-written account of the lives of such men as Taylor, Duff, Paton, and their confreres to see that this theme will command immediate response throughout the country. The stories of modern missionaries and Y. M. C. A. secretaries do not need to be handled with poetic license to make them full of charm and interest.

There remain a vast number of simple stories of heart interest dealing with simple people which will always appeal to the emotions of audiences. The stories of the countryside, of shop girls, of fishing folk, of doctors, mothers, laboring men, negroes, foreigners and children have been made beautiful and lovable by such writers as Ralph Connor, Kate Douglas Wiggin, O. Henry, Joseph Lincoln, Weir Mitchell, Mrs. Porter, Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Dickens.

These and many other themes teaching life as the mass of people know it with the emphasis placed on character rather than the love interest will undoubtedly open up a vast field for the writers of modern motion pictures.

Many such writers or dramatic directors who have handled the themes have seemed to think that it was necessary to illustrate in detail many of the situations which are in themselves offensive in order to be sure that their audiences understood the strength of the temptation and the reasons for disaster. It would be wise if they learned their lesson more thoroughly from the writers of literature. Many of these have discovered that the imagination of their readers depicts with sufficient fullness the details of tragic or evil situations if they are presented only in a phrase or a paragraph. There is a vast difference between the indication of such situations and their illustrations. Many motion pictures have been ruined from the dramatic standpoint by turning aside from the main theme of the story to illustrate situations in disgusting fullness.

"Vampire" Themes Not Desired.

While no two persons will agree about the subjects to be excluded from better motion pictures, there are certain themes which either should disappear or should be treated by indication rather than illustration. Among them are the disruption of the family by the introduction of the tempter or temptress, scenes which reek with sensuality, the realistic presentation of the details of crime, situations in comedy or drama where there is a free or common handling of persons of the opposite sex, the detailed exhibition of events before or after the betrayal of innocence or the fall of virtue, situations which make light of religion whatever that religion may be, or introduce individuals connected with religion in scenes that are degrading or lacking in fundamental respect. The great mass of the American people are thoroughly wholesome and desire to perpetuate those ideals which center around the integrity of the individual, of the family, of the state, and of religion.

The themes of many motion pictures have been devoid of a thoroughgoing respect for things which are intimate, sacred and holy. It might well be the aim of those who desire to make better motion pictures to realize that there are many things in life which the majority honor and respect. It may be difficult to surround pictures with an atmosphere of thoroughgoing reverence when such ideas are introduced, but it will be immensely attractive to people who, beside being patrons of the theater, are also persons with fundamentally religious natures. This will apply equally to the portrayal of personal earnestness of character, of respect and consideration for others as well as of the details of family life and worship.

Study Production to Improve

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Production Heads Must Know Not Alone the Work of Their Own but of Other Companies to Improve the Product.

LATELY we were not a little astonished to hear one of the leading lights of filmdom declare that all British pictures were poor. Coming from a majority of the makers, this would not have been a surprising statement, but the man in question owes his success to a close study of the drama and a quick appreciation of its needs, and we looked to see him become conversant with his subject when he turned his attention to photoplay. Certainly most of the early film productions of Great Britain were cheaply made. They had to be. There was no world market then for British films and investors were not spending more than their probable takings on the making of film. The result was consistently bad; bad enough to establish the general impression that the entire output was bad. But there have been some remarkably good pictures turned out, notably by Hepworth and London Film, and to brand the entire product as poor was to admit, as this producer did, that he was not familiar with the product, but merely accepted the general and established opinion.

Five years ago another, and more experienced film man, admitted that he saw practically nothing beyond the films of his own production. He knew his were the best because everyone told him so. He did not have to worry. He did not have to compare his results with the work of others. Today that man is trailing in the ruck, and very probably he still sees only the work of his own company.

There can be no real or permanent advance so long as there are film makers with such narrow views. It is probable that few of the actual responsible heads of companies ever see the work of their competitors, and in some cases they do not even see all of their own product. They are too busy making selling plans to overlook their own product and compare it with the results obtained by others. This, of course, applies to the executive heads and not to directors or production managers. Such a condition is scarcely understandable in these days of business efficiency. Success is only possible when neither one's own nor rival products are either over or under estimated. Advancement is only to be made with a thorough understanding of the field.

This is particularly true of photoplays. These are not like a standard manufactured product. A constant watch must be kept upon the output. The oil manufactured by the Standard Oil Company is not personally passed upon by Mr. Rockefeller, but the product is kept standardized by expert chemists, whose reports are passed along to reach the chief executives eventually, but there is the ever-present check. A manufacturer of film may not see 25 per cent. of his own output and nothing at all of other makes, and yet he feels that he is keeping in touch with his business. Under such conditions it is not surprising that film is made and sold by yardstick measure. The superior is interested only in the balance sheet.

Read the news in the trade and you will find that this company has been formed to make two-reel comedies. That other is formed to make super-features for state rights disposal. Talk with the promoters of these companies and you will invariably be told that there is little more expense in making two reels of comedy or eight instead of five-reel dramas, and a much larger return. That seems to be all the promoters have in mind. It is not quality, but quantity of product. Film sells at so much per foot. It is made by the foot.

If manufacturers saw more of their own work, and compared it more closely with the work of other companies, there would be a general improvement in production. Self-satisfaction and contempt of rivals are deadly disastrous in any business connection and the makers of film suffer from both. It is manifestly impossible for chief executives to keep in close touch with the entire output of all concerns, but an executive should at least possess a fair first-hand working knowledge of the general trend of film production, and certainly should know his own product intimately. The making of film is not like manufacturing shoes or grinding flour. It is, ,or should be, an artistic endeavor and not a manufacturing business, and the utmost care alone will yield a good product.

The film business is peculiar in many ways. It has been of mushroom growth and there has been no time to establish systematic effort, and in those isolated instances in which such endeavor has been made, the change has been too sudden and too drastic. Efficiency experts have sought to put into practice rules and regulations intended for the government of mechanics. There is a happy medium between chaos and the time clock that must be attained, and business efficiency should start at the top.

The responsible heads should know what is being done by their own companies and by others, and comparison should be made without prejudice either way. Some men can see no good in their own work and others find nothing of value in the work of their opponents. The best leader learns from the merit of others and the faults of himself, adopting one and correcting the other, but he knows what is being done. It is probable that a poll of the responsible heads of all the film companies will show that fully half do not see all of their own product, and not more than one-tenth see the work of other companies save by chance, and that but seldom. Under the circumstances, it is not to be wondered at that the productions so slowly improve. There is no particular incentive to better work until a trade name so completely loses its value that it begins to show in the balance sheets, and by then it is generally easier to take another trade name than to attempt to rebuild the value of the broken name.

In general knowledge alone can advancement be made, and knowledge must be first-hand and not hearsay.

A Plea for the Art World

By Vachel Lindsay

THE first practical reason for making motion pictures that have the qualities of good painting is that this is the main chance to overcome the machine-like effects of the photoplays. This is a hard and fast commercial reason. Mechanical pictures are unpleasant pictures. Harsh edges, angular furniture, raw, unrelated light effects can spoil the best acting and directing in the world. Most companies of standing feel the need of fairly harmonious photography, lighting, and relation in the blacks, whites and grays and textures. But none of them seem to realize the possibilities of special development in this direction. This is because the previous training of the scenario writer has been literary and of the director and actors has been dramatic. They are not people who associate with painters, sculptors or architects. They travel in literary circles and circles of actors. The world-tradition of painting, sculpture and architecture is still closed to them, or they view it only in a nominal way.

There is a great deal of pioneer work to be done by any motion picture company that will call into permanent consultation the leading architects, sculptors and painters of America. I do not mean that these men will furnish better settings. I mean that they will furnish new plots and motives. A photoplay could have for its climax and leading motive a study of light, just as light was the final motive and propaganda and work of the impressionist painters' revolution of the middle of the last century. It could have for its motive the elimination of all trappings and the achievement of complete pearly simplicity, as in the paintings of Whistler. The public was certainly interested in Whistler and the impressionists. Such movements can go on in the films, in combination with good short stories. Talk to the greatest and most accredited artists, take them to your films. They will pick out as the chief beauties things you have thought secondary. They will utterly condemn some lavish mess you thought highly decorative.

Follow the inner thought of the inner conclaves of the live sculptors, painters and architects. Find the real secret of the most revolutionary works that have fought their way to the museums, and the secret of the most world-loved classics as well. Consider how to identify their moods with the innermost texture of your work and thought, and put in vibrant motion what in the museums is in vibrant rest.

Put the art thought of the world in motion instead of the entire decorative instinct of our more expensive department stores.

What Is Photoplay?

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

SUPPOSE that by some means you could advance Time a quarter century and could look into the photoplay theater of 1942. What do you suppose you would see on the screen? Surely not the play of today, though many may, with some reason, argue that there is no hope of better. There must be better, or there will be no photoplay. It must be something different, something better, but who can say what that will be?

Epes W. Sargent.

It is seriously to be questioned if the first photoplay has yet been produced! We have screened stories of the stage, novels, short stories and original fiction plots, and we have screened innumerable affairs with no plots to speak of, but we have held too closely to the technique of the drama and of fiction to obtain unusual results. We have made the motion camera a mimic instead of a creator, and, at times, a poor mimic indeed. The picture has merely been the reflection of the mind of its maker, and most of the makers of photoplay have been drawn from the stage, with the result that the photoplay is merely an imperfect reflection of the stage drama, minus the magic of voice, with nothing other than cold and often improper leaders to replace this lack.

To some extent the cutback replaces speech, since the cutback can often visualize words, but the cutback has not solved the problem because the cutback has been imperfectly and often incorrectly used. Each new device, as it has been invented, has been seized upon, abused and has lost its value. Each has been used as a visual effect by the unthinking producer rather than as a means to an end by the careful and far-sighted director. If it looks pretty(!) it is used, abused and used again, but its values are not studied; indeed it is not often regarded as something to be worthy of study. We have learned so much in the past ten years that we know nothing at all.

Take the cutback, for example. This, it would appear, was first used by the Biograph long before the days of D. W. Griffith, but it was first used regularly by him, and he was probably the first to realize its manifold advantages. It gave to the Biograph pictures a clarity of expression that other pictures lacked. Those were the days when Griffith was earnestly working to turn out the one-reel masterpieces, upon some of which his fame will rest long after "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation" have been forgotten.

Biograph stories were better than other stories of that time. Other directors were watching the Biograph stories just as a little earlier they were copying the Pathé product. They perceived the cutback. They saw some of its uses. The cutback must be the secret of success, and so the cutback was used unintelligently and often without the slightest show of excuse. Sometimes two entirely unrelated scenes would be cut into each other with no greater an excuse than a desire to have cutbacks. Five years ago one company had a strict rule that no story should be made with fewer than 120 scenes to the reel, and the management depended upon this, and this alone, to bring success. Even Griffith caught the craze and produced "The Sands o' Dee" with 125 scenes, some less than a foot in length, and with the action so intermittent that it seemed as though something must be the matter with the projection instead of the producer. Today the cutback, which Hugo Munsterberg has so lavishly praised as one of the real individualities of photoplay, is used to greater excess than in the days of its discovery, and with far less intelligence.

"Cutback" in Future Photoplay.

Undoubtedly the cutback, with its annihilation of time and space, will figure in the photoplay of the future, but it is a question whether or not it will be used as it is being employed today. It is capable of far more valuable uses than those to which it has yet been put, but no new use has been discovered in the past five years.

The close-up picture, too, is an individual and valued factor, but the close-up is so lavishly used as to injure rather than add to the effect. It is used where close-ups are uncalled for and confusing. The close-up has one definite and logical use. It centers attention at the moment upon the action of importance. It cuts from the mind all extraneous thoughts. That is the function of the close-up, but in the hands of the incompetents who seek to cloak faulty technique—or even lack of knowledge—in a mass of effects, the close-up has become so commonized that it has lost its significance. It is so overworked that it has ceased to be a means of emphasis, just as printed matter all set in italic type no longer is emphasized save through the use of Roman letters. The unusual has become usual, and the usual gains distinction because of its unusualness.

The same may be said of the vignette, the fade and kindred devices. Properly used, they would help. Improperly employed, they injure, and sometimes vitally, the general effect.

New Generation of Producers.

There must arise a new generation of producers. They must be chosen neither from the studio nor the stage. They must come, free from all tradition, to make new use of the materials at hand. The present-day directors are too badly hampered by tradition and usage to find new means of expression, no matter how plentiful the material at hand. Others with fresh, unbiased minds, able to perceive the abuses of the present system, must be looked to to reconstruct the technique of photoplay.

They must find new—and proper uses—for old devices. They must determine the value and disadvantages of the component elements of photoplay and must find new moves of thought and new thoughts to be expressed in this form.

Following Other Forms.

That is the real situation. For fifteen years and more we have been following other forms. Stage plays and copyright novels were stolen until the copyright holders awoke to a realization of the value of these copyrights, and then the same material was purchased at fanciful prices. Book and play titles have a certain value as standard. Offer an exhibitor a play produced on Broadway last season and he will pay a large price for the story because he feels that he has a title already advertised to his patrons through the stage production or the published book. He has only to announce what he has to offer and people will come. That is very true, but when they have responded to the appeal a few times and find that the play or book on the screen does not agree with their preconceived notions, then they stop coming, nor can the most attractive titles be used as bait. Others may come, perhaps, and still more, and the fans are faithful to the stars, but it is of little real use to draw patrons to a house for a little time and lose them, disgusted forever with the motion picture. Plays would be of real value only when the plays cemented patronage and made new friendships.

It is very true that some plays and books are better on the screen than on the stage or printed pages, but this is not because they have been acted or printed, but because they lend themselves to visualization. They may be better photoplays than books or novels because they are better suited to this form.

Such presentations are accidents and not the result of design. They happen to suit the medium just as a scene painted in oils might yield better results if done in water colors or in dry point, but the water colorist or the etcher is not given credit for creation, and it should be the same with photoplays.

A Business Worthy of Best Writers.

Hall Caine lately said that the writing of photoplays was a business well worthy the best writers. He believes that photoplay has a place among its sister arts of expression and that it is a medium worthy the study of the competent creative writer, but evidently Mr. Caine does not know the present market. Most creative writers these days do not get beyond an interview with some editor, or perhaps two or three editors. They naturally resent the editorial attitude of superiority, the more or less plain inference that they, and they alone, can understand photoplay and construct continuities. They resent the suggestion that they merely make a synopsis from which the editor and his staff will "fix up" the material, and the few who last long enough to be so "fixed up," pass the word to others. At the present time there is no company offering to the writer either the financial return or the opportunity for artistic expression. Some few are willing to give a fair price for material, but this is not sufficient for the real writer. He does not want merely to tout an idea. He seeks a reasonably competent expression of himself upon the screen. That he must have as a part of the price, and that is something he cannot get. In England, during the life of the London Film Company, Bannister Merwin did take upon the floor some of the leading dramatists of what might be denominated the Charles Frohman group, and these men are still studying and still interested. Here in America the effort seems to be to keep all real writers as far from the studios as possible; to hold down individuality of thought, originality of treatment and daring of idea. The play of today must be the same as that of yesterday and tomorrow. There must be no change.

Better Plays Five Years Ago.

This is all wrong. We are not making as acceptable plays as we were five years ago, because then more attention was paid the story. Most of the current offerings are those old one-reel stories padded out to five reels, with action and spectacle rather than with more plot. And as time has gone on, more and more effort has been given to effects instead of to the expansion of the photoplay toward its natural ultimate form.

It is scarcely possible to tell precisely what this ultimate form will be, but it is interesting to speculate. So far as this writer can see, the ultimate photoplay will be unmeasured, but will be nearer two reels than five for dramas and around the thousand feet for comedies. Some means will be found, through the gradual growth of the illustrated leader, to merge the leader into the action to avoid the abrupt transition from the action to the caption. Perhaps the field of idea will be more limited; most assuredly not anything and everything will be given production merely because it is a stage hit or best seller. The story will be fitted to its medium, and since there will be fewer such available, there will be fewer stories made, but these will be better. The cutback, the close-up, the dissolve, the vision and all old and some new tricks will be used, but they will be used intelligently to further advance the story.

Productions Will Improve.

Doubtless some new form of time leader will be discovered, and assuredly some new means of telling the story.

Some of the productions will be not unlike some of the best of the past productions, but no single model will be closely followed. We shall have our futurists and our cubists; perhaps even a photoplay form of verse libre, but above all things, we shall have productions that shall not insult the intelligence of the person of average mental growth. We shall not seek to please China and Connecticut and Chili with the self-same film stories. The business today is like the child grown tall so suddenly that vitality is sapped. We have grown too fast, and growth and not strength and vitality have been sought. Now we must put some flesh upon the bones, and strength into the flesh, and in the process we shall probably discover what photoplay really is and find it to be vastly different from what we have and what we think it should be. It is probably true that the first real photoplay has yet to be written. Who will write the first?

ARE WESTERN PICTURES COMING BACK?

That there is much activity in Los Angeles in making pictures dealing with life on the far side of the Rockies is demonstrated by the significant fact that an unusual number of motion picture cowboys, who have been more or less inactive for some time past, are appearing daily on the streets in their picturesque regalia of chaps, Stetson hats, spurs and silk handkerchiefs.

Pictures of the Western type are now in progress at the Lasky, Fox, Universal, Triangle and Metro studios. Whether this is merely a coincidence and these companies happen to be making but a single Western subject at this time or whether more pictures of this kind will follow cannot be determined, but at any rate the old days of making typical Westerns are re-lived in the back-stage conversations, in which early adventures of the romantic days of picture making in the West are recounted in all their glory and glamor.

Editing a Motion Picture

By FRANK E. WOODS

THE motion picture is a form of publication. It might well be called the celluloid press. It has its reporters, its authors and its editors. It also has its illustrators, its printers, its pressmen, its proofreaders and its newsdealers.

The material to be published is first put into manuscript form. It is revised and edited and then handed to the illustrators and compositors, who in this case are the director, the scenic and technical staff and the actors. They, with the cameraman, proceed to make, on a celluloid film, a record of the thoughts described in the manuscript. We call it the negative film, and from it we make in a printing machine what we call a sample print. It is, in fact, a proof sheet, which is read, revised and corrected by re-takes if necessary, and then cut and assembled into a dummy—in other words the assembled sample print. At some point in this process the head writer or title writer has inserted the sub-titles, and we have the first completed proof, which is again read for errors and corrections, before it goes to the make-up man, who cuts the negative and assembles it for the final printing in the celluloid press. Here again a press proof or advance copy is carefully scanned, after which the first edition of the composition is run off for distribution. Finally, the printed copies go to the newsdealers or exchanges and are distributed by the carriers or exhibitors to the public, who sit in their easy chairs and read the story.

Frank E. Woods.

All this is as it should be—not as it always is, in this still imperfect day in motion picture publishing.

Some of the Shortcomings.

Much too frequently the original manuscript is written by one who is unskilled in this peculiar kind of authorship, and it is badly edited or gets no editing at all. The directors and actors may fail to produce the right effect by reason of inexperience or inability. There may be little or no proofreading and the cutting and titling may be done by cheap and incompetent help, and not by experienced editors. I do not speak here of photography and printing, because in these branches of the new art there is less cause for criticism than in any other.

The finishing of a picture—the cutting and titling, has been, until quite lately, the most neglected branch of motion picture production. Nobody, with one or two conspicuous exceptions, paid any attention to it. It was a case of let Jakey cut the picture and Lizzie, the typewriter, title it. Sure, Jakey could handle a pair of shears as well as a high priced director or editor, and Lizzie knew how to spell—she learned at a business college. Many an author and director have shed bitter tears over Jakey's slaughterhouse work with his deadly shears, while Lizzie's English has furnished many a laugh to the public.

But things are not now nearly so bad as they used to be. Jakey and Lizzie are employed now only by the newcomers in the business. The more experienced producers, during the past year or two, have been making earnest efforts to cultivate the English language. One big company, that I could name, has even laid off the country sign painter it used to employ.

Where Title Writing Can Be Improved.

Nevertheless there is plenty of room yet for improvement. Mush and gush never got any writer into the hall of fame and there is far too much mush and gush in present day titles. When the "drab dawn ushers in another blue day" and when the heroine "puts her finger on the husks of the eagle's heart and the doors open and she walks in," I submit that some drab editor with a blue lead pencil ought to get busy.

I don't mean to say that titles are the most important things in pictures—they are merely one of the many important things. I remember hearing a title writer one time say: "The picture was rotten. I saved it by cutting and titling." What he should have said was that he had helped make a good picture. Nobody ever saved a "rotten" picture with titles or cutting. You can't make a piece of limburger cheese into a bouquet by painting a violet.

Purposes of the Subtitle.

The function of the sub-title is to supplement and correct the action of the picture, to cover lapses in the continuity and to supply the finer shades of meaning which the actor has been unable to express.

The sub-title should never be obtrusive. It should be there only because it belongs there. Therefore all subtitles should be in language that harmonizes with the story. Every word should be weighed. Nothing should even shock the spectator out of his interest in the picture by its incongruity, extravagance or inanity. Too much in a sub-title is as bad as too little—like seasoning in a pudding.

Many a picture has been ruined by inadequate titles. The makers of the picture have assumed that because they understood the meaning of every action, the spectators should also understand, forgetting that the spectators will view the picture for the first time. The moment a spectator becomes confused and loses the sense of what he is seeing on the screen, his interest is gone. While he is wondering "what are they talking about now?" or "who is the chap in the long coat?" or "how did he get from the house into the woods?" the film is being reeled along its merry way and the spectator has lost the thread of the story.

Subtitles Should Harmonize.

Going to the other extreme and inserting explanations where the meaning is perfectly obvious or telling in titles that which is to be pictured immediately after, should also be avoided, although pictures are sometimes criticised for too many titles where in fact the quick-eyed critic is the only one who finds them too many. The average spectator is none too alert.

I repeat: The sub-title should be in complete harmony with the story and should never divert interest from the story. It is a question, therefore, if the recent practice of embellishing sub-titles with ornate illustrations supposed to be artistic and more or less in harmony with the subject, are not, on the contrary, destructive of the very thing they are intended to accomplish. Sub-titles are obviously put into a picture to be read and understood in connection with the story. Now, the eye can look at only one thing at a time, and if the sub-title be ornamental with an illustration, the eye is apt to center on the picture and not on the words, and the value of the sub-title is impaired. The more attractive the illustration, the greater must be the danger that the words will not be read at all. In that case we might as well have no sub-title. A happy medium would seem to be a style of ornamentation that is purely impressionistic and without striking detail.

It scarcely seems necessary to insist that due care should be paid to punctuation, capitalization and the ordinary rules of proper English. It may have been noted by observers that one prominent company, whose sub-titles are otherwise quite excellent, purposely omits the use of quotation marks when inserting a speech supposed to be uttered by any of the characters. It is said that the producers argue that the motion picture play is merely a stage play without the sound of the voice. Therefore they follow the style of composition used in writing speeches in stage manuscripts. But they omit using the name of the character in connection with the quoted speech and thereby rob it of any indication whatever that it is a speech they are quoting. The result is often confusing, and anything that is confusing in a sub-title cannot fail to be harmful.

Why Not Be Careful?

In closing, permit me to ask: If producers are justified in spending, as they often do, hundreds or even thousands of dollars to get one laugh or one punch into a motion picture, why should they not spend a few more dollars and a few hours of time in getting a laugh or a punch into a sub-title, when sometimes a single word rightly chosen will accomplish that result?

The All-Important Still

By Colin C. Solomon

Necessity of Good Photographic Views of Scenes for Advertising Purposes.

THE motion picture studio has been devoting so much time and energy to improving its motion photography that, in my feeling, the "still" work has been badly neglected. I think that when the reader has finished this short article he will be convinced that "still" photography is as important as any other branch of motion picture studio work.

Colin C. Solomon.

It is true that a film must be as good photographically as in a story, acting or production sense, and I can understand why most of the photographic effort on the part of studio workers is applied to the photography in the film. The point that is overlooked is that the best picture must be advertised, and that without striking "still" photographs, such advertising is often a waste.

Studio workers, therefore, should concentrate on improvement of their "still" photography — there isn't a motion picture advertising department in the country that won't tell you its particular studio turns in poor "stills."

What is a good advertising "still?" The only answer is: A high quality photo showing striking action and good lighting. Such a "still" will reproduce into a cut or enlargement that cannot fail to attract attention, and to attract attention is a prime purpose of motion picture advertising. To get the desired class of "stills," a special man should be permitted to devote his time to the making of them. He should be a man who has a good idea of advertising values. He should not necessarily work under the director, but with the advertising department. He should have the director's privilege of an advance reading of the story, so that he can get a line on the scenes that he feels will afford him his best chances for striking material.

The writer does not believe in "snapping" the advertising "still" while the scene is being taken. It should be especially posed, with the posters or the newspapers in view, and that may mean making a slight change in the action to suit the special advertising need.

The best director's judgment is often wrong on a "still" for the reason that the splendor of a stage setting or the prominence of the star in the foreground may appeal to him over a bit of action that has unusual publicity possibilities. However, I do feel that "still" views should be so taken that they will give, upon publication, an idea of the story.

Screencraft Titles

BY C. EDDY ECKELS.

LITTLE progress seems to be the popular step of the production hour. And justly so, for the neglect of the explanatory angle of pictures in the past—from both editing and artistic viewpoints—is a thing at which to shudder, now that progress is prevalent.

Titles are, after all, just "word pictures"; and no one can deny that ultra care should be taken in editing the "word" part of the above syononym. Editing, from the standpoint of entertainining Mr. and Mrs. Public, does not only mean purifying, tersifying and phonetifying a la Webster and later improvements; modern explanation of photothemes call for the installation of all possible "pep," spontaneous thoughts, classic touches and "punch" phrases that leap large gaps.

Anita Loos should be credited with the honor of starting the good work in this channel. Her title classics have brought her at least photoplay world renown and won her a life long berth commercially and sentimentally. George Cohan, himself, is purported to have titled his "Broadway Jones." If that be true then George gets second honors.

And now for the "picture part" of word-pictures. Pictures, in the language of the photoplay, mean scenes and scenes mean sets.

Hence and therefore, relative to all titles, it is but reasonable from the practical side of deduction to apply the rule that:

> The words should be Artcraft;
> The scenes should be Stagecraft;
> And the combination should be Screencraft.

The process of stage setting a title was first introduced by the writer approximately a year ago and later patented after hundreds of practical tests and applications had been made. The first introduction of these titles on the film market in a general way, however, was through the American Bioscope Company of Chicago, which has adopted their use in all pictures and productions.

Simplicity of Process.

The simplicity of the process is an extraordinary factor. A small stage with a 12 x 6 inches opening discloses front and back drops, wings, flys, foots, and set pieces, all of which repose in eight grooves. This state is noticeably shallow, which, coupled with its proper proportions, permits of perfect focus and perspective.

What a stage-set title most prominently does is to bring out the shadows, highlights, depth, tones and untold other touches which are lamentably lacking in the flat drawing. Its subsidiary features are the lighting possibilities from within and without from any angle; mask effects permissible by "shooting through the sets"; great economy in art work, once a large catalog of sets and pieces has been assembled; general speed of "pocketing" the title proper and not having to await a special drawing by an artist.

All scenery used in screencraft titles is in neutral tones of grey and gold which, when properly set, permits of any shade or effect and brings out all undertones according to the desire of the setting prominence. The universally best results, however, have been proven by tests to be stop 5.6 slow straight turning with two Cooper Hewitts on negative and stop 3.5 medium fast trick turning with one C-H on positive stock.

One of the most remarkable tests for practicability, up to which the screenscraft title-stage has stood, is production work in the field. Multiple exposure and mask methods, to say nothing of dissolving, fading and irising, so much in vogue with the better class of direction, invariably call for the titles in the field. Often, too, in conjunction with this situation, a change of some sort in the location, script or adaptation may cause a drastic change in the title and setting, apropos. Here is where the title-stage will permit of any alterations and quickly proves its acclimative value.

Careful and perfection-aspiring producers have not purposely avoided the artistic title on account of its cost. They have at all times realized that the cost of title footage was even worthy of one to two dollars a foot, if the desired result could but be obtained. A few of them have experimented from most every angle with the "flat drawing" style of art, but somehow something somewhere in all cases seemed palpably shy, far-fetched or overdone.

Artistic Effects Inexpensive.

The cost of screencraft or stage-set titles is exceedingly low—and becomes lower as the catalog of sets is increased. For the producing concern, which averages one five-reel feature a week, the cost will approximately run eighteen cents per foot. The investment for the catalog governs this item, of course, and throws the majority of the expenses in building the foundation of the system.

Plain titles are fetid from the production angle of films today. The few producers who still adhere to this old school policy of picture explanation put forth as their only arugment, "Artistry detracts from the story." It is true that the artistic touches of titles may be too severe, but to the seasoned photographer it is mighty easy for him to govern his exposure to the extent of getting any desired or undesired result.

The decorative title can easily be overdone and the still photos reproduced herewith may have a tendency to imply that possibility strongly. In the actual motion picture film, however, the background is always kept subdued, the writer's belief being that the reading matter should be supremely prominent and the background "felt" more than seen.

Ofttimes a poor picture is "carried over" with cleverly worded titles. Couple these with stagecraft settings and you have the screencraft titles, which will cover a multitude of production sins. Let us hope, however, that few directors will ever have to use this channel of resource in an excuse for their adoption. But let it not be said that the progress of titles is not now on a par with that of production itself.

Photodrama a New Art

By CECIL B. DeMILLE

I REALLY believe that throughout the country the general public is beginning to awaken to the fact that in the photodrama they are witnessing the birth of a new art. Daily I hear people say, "I have just been to a motion picture theater and marveled at what I saw."

A number of them saw the moving pictures of four or five years ago and stopped attending theaters, in disgust, and are just beginning to again take an interest in our efforts.

Cecil B. De Mille.

The new art of the photodrama is still in its nebulous state, but it is gradually hardening and shaping itself into its proper form. We all admit that there are still soft spots, which must of necessity be strengthened, but daily the number of these spots is less. The new art is developing its own technique and symbols, and will soon be as distinct and separate as the spoken drama and the opera.

In the early days of writing for the stage, players used to indulge in long "asides," explaining their thoughts and what they contemplated doing. In the silent drama, sub-titles answered this purpose, but the writers of the photodrama are so developing their stories that these screen "asides" are gradually being eliminated by being expressed in action.

When we first went to well-known and popular writers and asked them to write for the screen, they promptly presented us with their rejected manuscripts, or retired for an hour or two and dashed off a scenario. Now these writers are beginning to appreciate the fact that plays for the screen must be as well and carefully written as plays for the stage, and must be given the same care as to construction, dramatic value and technique. They are beginning to give us their serious efforts and no longer look down upon photodramatic writing.

One author told me recently that he had to work harder for the demands of the screen, as their stories were more exacting than that of many magazines for which he is constantly writing.

In regard to settings and lightings, there is a great movement towards improvement. No longer does every detail in the set where action takes place have to be absolutely distinct. Much is being done in following out the Rinehart idea of suggestive settings. The audience is made to feel the background rather than to see it, and this is as it should be, but, of course, the idea cannot be used promiscuously.

Another thing—we are beginning to place and regulate the action and movements of the incidents with consideration for their picture value. To be more explicit, we are beginning to pose our people in the settings as a painter would pose them in his painting, with consideration for the perfect balance of the scene, with more thought given to lighting. And as I happen to be the pioneer in this particular branch of the photodrama, I have watched the progress closely and notice that many directors are now giving more thought to beautiful photography. Not only do we seek waterfalls or far distant hills for their beauty, but try to get the same effect in our small settings and interiors.

More thought is being given to detail. No more are unfamiliar incidents guessed at. Consequently when we see a court scene, we can be quite positive that it will pass the inspection of anyone familiar with court formalities.

Cecil B. De Mille Directing.

All throughout I have noticed that the other companies are trying to elevate the standard and accuracy of their work and rejoice that they are so doing, for it raises the tone of the entire photodramatic art.

This not only helps us, but helps the others as well, for while the many people understand and appreciate the value of the Paramount and Artcraft trade marks, there are others who do not, but judge one producer by the work of another.

The Scenic Side of the Photodrama

By WILFRID BUCKLAND,

Art Director of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.

AS THE technique of the photodramatic art is developing from the writing and directing sides, so is it developing from the scenic. The development of the artistic side is not as noticeable as the development from the other two sides, and this is as it should be. Gradually but surely, the settings are becoming more imaginative and suggestive rather than realistic and filled with detail. This change has to be made gradually, for, I believe, the public would not accept a photodrama with only suggestive settings.

The present obvious method of photographing nature is lacking in the higher class of artistic expression and is not the ultimate end of motion picture possibilities. Motion pictures are, or should be, pictorial art, so we cannot disregard the judgment of painters, the makers of real pictures, who, as yet, do not recognize them as allied art, and tell us why. Their reasons are these: In all art the academic or photographically faithful reproduction of nature is only the student's preparatory training. It gives him the technique which will later enable him to express feeling, mood and sentiment. For art expresses the sentiment an object inspires and is not the reproduction of the object itself.

Wilfrid Buckland.

For example, Corot, when a student, painted a tree as faithfully as he could reproduce it. Corot, when a master, painted the same tree so it expressed the mood and sentiment of nature, but his tree was no longer photographic, so in art "photographic" is a term of reproach, and painters consider that moving pictures at present are only in an uninteresting academic stage, but they believe, and photographs taken by Whistler and Wm. M. Chase prove, that it is possible to paint with the camera as these men painted on the canvas, as backgrounds, figures, groupings and action are treated according to the laws which govern a painter's composition and chiroschuro.

The old picture methods were to build little stage scenes and at broad daylight photograph actors moving in them. The method which we are gradually introducing substitutes imaginative for realistic scenery, and depends for its effects on art lighting, which probably was the method Rinehardt so successfully applied to stage productions.

In this method natural scenery does not help except as it is combined with painted drops. One does not need plains and mountains or the sun from which nothing escapes, for in any suggestive art more depends on what is left out that what is put in

Cecil B. deMille, Director-General of the Lasky Company, and several of us, are working along these lines, as to suggesting backgrounds and scenes rather than showing them in photographic detail. We have been working on these lines for some time and are gradually using them more and more frequently, and I think that eventually organizations which are really proud of the photodrama will use them entirely, but the change has to come gradually and be done so subtlely that it will not confront the critical motion picture audience as a sudden radical change

The Development of the Screen

By Douglas Fairbanks

THE film industry is in a somewhat serious condition. We must continue to advance with the progress of the times. We must develop those authors who are now students in the profession, that sleep, eat and live films. They are the ones who, when visualizing a situation, will discount its dialogue possibilities, and only see a situation from an absolutely screen perspective Some day we will have a screen language. This is, of course, a matter of time. Look how many years it took the various forms of art to develop.

Douglas Fairbanks.

Not long ago we thought that no subjects but those which lent themselves to the most vivid kind of pictorial exploitation could be used for screen purposes. Now we find as we develop the screen language, that we are bringing the high comedy into use, previously tabooed because of the importance of dialogue.

In one of my recent pictures we have a scene where I sit at a table opposite another man for five minutes, and we did nothing but talk by gestures—the turning of a hand, the lifting of an eyebrow, the tense gaze, the act of half rising from a table in a threatening way, the clenching of a fist, the pointing to a door, or looking toward the window, and taking out a watch to denote expectancy.

In fact we are employing more and more the same gestures and grimaces practiced on the speaking stage to accompany and emphasize spoken words. The kind of pantomime that the frequenter of the top gallery sees and understands, when he can't hear the voice.

In films, I think the day will come when they will eliminate spectacular effects, and elaborate emotional acting, and instead give the public stories that are human spectacles containing a laugh, a tear, a thrill—in fact, a page "from real life."

It seems that in film circles, at the present time, almost everyone is striving for elaboration. I think instead, it should be elimination. The simple things in life have proven to be the great success. This applies to all forms of art. For example, look at the success of "The Boomerang," produced last season by David Belasco. Its success is a favorable evidence of stage progress along elementary lines. To me "The Boomerang" is the pinnacle of dramatic art; a splendid idea admirably developed and what was the result—a sensational New York hit.

I think soon the film profession will realize the advantages of eliminating big effects and extravagant screen acting. The players on the screen will act as they would in real life, and they are then bound to be more attractive to the audience.

Motion pictures serve to develop the dramatic sense of the small town individual comparatively as the child from his infancy is taught to appreciate music in Italy. It would be almost impossible from a financial standpoint for a group of actors such as we find in the ordinary film productions to play in some of our small towns. Motion pictures make it possible for these people to see the best of Broadway talent in small parts, not including costly stage settings and vivid photographic effects. They are given stories of the choice dramatic and light comedy variety prepared by screen experts, travelogues and topical films, including all the big events of the week.

I like to portray comedy—dramatic characters—and do not favor playing tragic parts. Some one said that we really can't express an emotion until we have experienced it. I think this is absolutely true, and is one of my reasons for feeling that I am unadaptable to very serious characterizations. In all my life I have never had cause to be anything but extremely cheerful.

Motion pictures appeal to me because of my sophmoric wanderlust—we travel great distances for the proper exterior settings, and then the wide variety of types one meets in a film studio. We scour the pages of Tolstoy, Gautier, Strindberg, D'Annunzio and Valdez, seeking a new kind of interesting character. In a film studio it is the distinctive and compelling people you have for associates.

Recently in a Los Angeles cafeteria where we all lunched, at our table was Curly Baldwin, who explained he had robbed four trains touring through Mexico, and showed me five notches on his gun—which in the Western vernacular means five murders. Next to him sat a half-breed of the primitive variety, who suggested the typical Bret Harte character you find in "The Carquinez Wood."

I can only compare my film enthusiasm to that of a baby with a new toy. Its practically all new to me, and I am compelled to admit that I have learned a great deal.

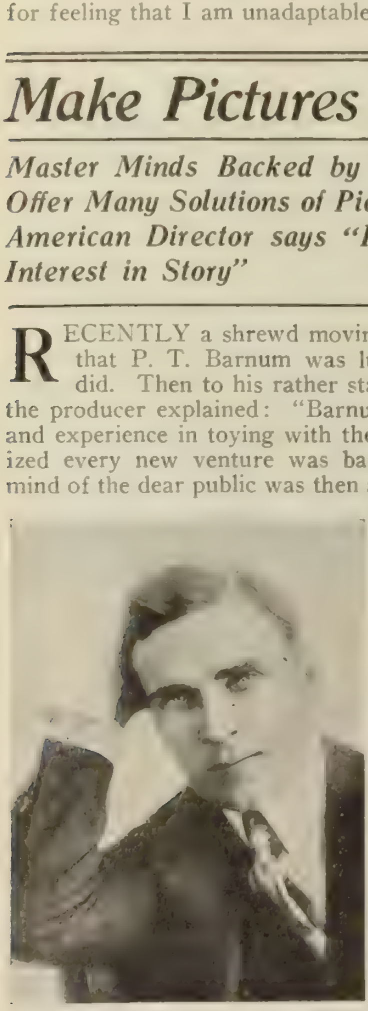
Make Pictures Just "Heart High"

By Henry King

Master Minds Backed by Millions of Money Offer Many Solutions of Picture Problem—American Director says "Heart Interest in Story"

RECENTLY a shrewd moving picture producer said that P. T. Barnum was lucky in dying when he did. Then to his rather startled group of listeners the producer explained: "Barnum, with all his wisdom and experience in toying with the whimsical public, realized every new venture was based on dynamite. The mind of the dear public was then as is now—as capricious and as fallacious as some fragmentary dream. And Barnum had but few competitors.

"Here is where Barnum was lucky: Had he lived it is not improbable that he would have joined the moving picture industry. Then he would have 'enjoyed' the strain the present day producers are suffering in general. Keen competition is exacting the master-generalship of master-minds. Millions in coin are needed to back new ventures and strengthen the old. The proper exploitation of present day feature pictures likewise call for gigantic expenditures in the ever-changing demands of advertising. And all this is based on effort of grouping to please public fancy with its corresponding commercial revenue, which in reality is the goal desired."



Henry King.

A few are successful; and Fortune is careless with its rewarding flow of gold. Many are mediocre productions because they fail to invite; somewhere there is a lack of appeal to the public and Fortune is less kind in financial reward for the effort. Then follow the failures and the rocks of defeat. But still the game goes on. Other gigantic corporations are formed; new combinations of master-minds are unified, and once more the industry thrives. Then comes the aftermath of awaiting the verdict of public whim. And always in the background there is somewhere available capital, talent and brains that listen to Fortune's tempting cry; and when there is a vacant seat in the game, there awaits another to take the place of one who has failed.

Master Minds Have Solutions.

Each master-mind believes he has solved the secret, and he has the faith to battle for the monetary reward he believes awaits him. After all is said and done, success, aside from the proper commercial handling, is merely to please the public demand.

Some believe in titanic productions, spectacular and costly. Is the financial reward commensurate with the effort? Some try out the public with thrills and action. Has thrill lost its drawing power? Another tempts with story of foreign setting, where time and journey and money are necessary for faithfulness and production. And then on throughout the gamut of theme and plot.

Each man has his own opinion, otherwise he would not be in a creative game. Were it not for variance in opinion the industry would die of inanition. Therefore, I do not presume to state that I alone hold the secret that goes to the success of a picture. It is merely my own sincere belief based on personal experience and observation. So, if my statement elicits objection or criticism, my only defense is sincerity of utterance.

Story with Heart Interest.

To me the absolute basis of a successful production is "A Story." Admittedly, at first glance, this simple statement sounds trite and hackneyed. What constitutes a story opens up a vast field for profound debate. And I do not pretend to define what constitutes a dramatic story. I leave that wholly to scholars and technicians. I do, however, believe that there is one essential vitally important to a story. It is hard to create, yet simple to explain; it is Heart Interest.

I have forgotten the origin of this statement, but someone has said, "A successful story should be written to reach no higher than the heart." My interpretation of this is, broadly speaking, and viewed from a commercial standpoint, that it means "high-brow" stories will not appeal to the mass. Admittedly, this is open to debate, nevertheless, when revenue is gained through appeal to the mass, the medium must be that which will appeal to the mass.

Types and Settings Must Conform.

Once the director is given such a story, then all the talent of the studio is at his command in its perfection and production. The cast should be made up of types to this particular story. The sets and exteriors should be created and selected to conform. If the story calls for details, then it is a commercial crime to neglect their crying need for existence. Camera masters have their voice through expression of the beauties of shade and shadow. The silent toilers of the dark room and cutting room lend their talent and knowledge. Countless imperfections that creep in despite the wary eye of shrewd observers must be eliminated. Then, if the final projection has caught the heart-interest theme for which all have labored, I believe it minimizes the risk of not pleasing the whim of public fancy.

In conclusion, the term of "heart-interest" is broad. We strive to call forth an occasional tear, yet fain would we produce naught but tragedy. Somewhere within us the tear and the laugh dwell in close sincerity. Someone has said, "Perfect contentment is that condition where mayhap we may laugh when we wish to cry, or cry when we wish to laugh." So, if our story be the means of awakening tender thoughts within us, maybe, after all, that is "heart-interest." Who knows?

Glaring Flaws in Careless Direction

By Edward Sloman

American Director Cites His Observation of Night Scenes Taken in Sunlight and Tinted

THERE is no denying the fact that moving pictures of today are more highly developed than those of two years ago—in fact, of even a year ago—but there are some phases of the industry which have not kept a corresponding pace of advancement

A great deal of time, money and thought has been expended on effectiveness of detail, but there are still a few things which are incorrect and so glaringly obvious that it seems incredible that these mistakes are still made in this day of almost perfect picture production.

Edward Sloman.

Many instances of this character have been brought to my mind in the past year. I have seen pictures that have been almost faultless in production and detail that for me have fallen flat because of one glaring mistake. We see a beautiful interior set, in which is depicted a certain night scene, splendidly acted and beautifully handled, but the whole illusion spoiled for the audience by a shaft of amber sunlight streaming through a window in the scene—this at night.

I have noticed mistakes of this nature made in high class productions by high priced directors with great reputations. Why do they do it? Is it because they wish to get the effect of moonlight through the window and yet overlook the fact that when the film is tinted it is tinted amber for the general effect of a lighted room and not for the windows only—or why?

Comes now another mistake—one which is so common that 80 per cent. of the motion picture directors make it. Why, when there are exterior night sceenes to be filmed, do they shoot them in daylight, and then tint them blue or green? Mistakes of this kind have been made ever since the origin of the motion picture. Surely the public knows better; surely they have been fooled long enough, as have the directors themselves. In this day of advanced electricity for the making of motion pictures there is no excuse for this sort of thing.

I have spent many nights in the open, both in the city and in the country, and though my eyesight is supposed to be perfect, I have never been able to pick up detail a mile away as I have seen it in picture productions showing so-called night scenes. I'll admit that such a thing is possible on bright moonlight nights in the Far West, or in the Land of the Midnight Sun, but those things are exceptions and not the general rule.

Again I have seen what was supposed to be a night scene on the screen, in which men were shown running at least two hundred yards from the camera against a background of dense underbrush, and the photography was so perfect that one could almost see the buttonholes in their vests. As the English say, "It cawn't be done"—at night.

Edward Sloman Directing.

I have had occasions to make night scenes in the desert, far from any lighting plant or electric connections, but we have made them at night. With our own generating plant and all the lamps needed we procured night effects that certainly could not have been obtained in daylight. Desert land is a long way from most studios and all their facilities, but still it can be done if one really determines to do it.

The director who appears to know it all has a lot to learn, and if he but knew it even a property man might make a suggestion that is worth while.

The Artistry of Motion Pictures

By MAURICE TOURNEUR

AT THE very head of the list of directors who have the present and future of the artistic development of the motion picture very much at heart is Maurice Tourneur, who four years ago came to us from France. Since then he has directed the greatest cinema stars, among them Mary Pickford, Mme. Petrova, Clara Kimball Young, Marguerite Clark, Robert Warwick, Emma Dunn and many others.

Maurice Tourneur.

Every film creation of Mr. Tourneur's is new evidence that art in the movies is an actuality and not a thing of the imagination only. This young Frenchman, whose paintings have been hung in the salons of Paris, gave up being an "intimate" artist because, as he says, he can have a greater range for his artistic expression as a motion picture director.

Those who have watched Mr. Tourneur at work in his studio will agree that not only is he a great artist, but a great actor as well. And that is not strange, for he has studied histrionics under M. Andre Antoine, the Belasco of France. In addition to taking leading parts in a great many plays, he has to his credit a record of having staged over 400 legitimate dramas in seven years, in cooperation with M. Antoine.

In the capacity of motion picture director, Mr. Tourneur conceives each character in the photodrama. He interprets and outlines each part, and the actors follow him religiously. He selects the costumes and settings, and even suggests how the players wear their hair. When he is directing a company he dominates it, because the actors bow to his superior knowledge and training. But any one who gives him a good suggestion is a friend of his for life. Tourneur has been dubbed "the artist who paints with human pigments," and surely any canvas an artist painted could not more truly be his than the thousands of feet of film after Mr. Tourneur has directed a picture.

Every Picture as a Painter's Canvas.

"I regard every film I direct," said Mr. Tourneur, "as a painter does his canvas. Every actor is a human pigment, and he must harmonize with the film creation as I conceive it before I select him. It is true that I dictate the smallest detail of the action to the players, but it is not because that is my ideal of working. I have to use these methods of necessity, because there are very few cinema actors who have a sufficient grasp and understanding of their work to use their own initiative. This, no doubt, is due to the relative newness of the art of the screen. However, there are stars, notably Mary Pickford, who are so clever and ingenious that I very seldom have to 'create' for them. But they are few.

Great Strides in Development.

"There have been great strides in the development of the photographic and other technical phases of the cinema. But I still bemoan, as I did four years ago, the lack of original scenario writers. Those who write for the camera have not yet acquired the 'film mind.' They do not naturally and instinctively get the film angle. The great, original scenario, like the great American novel, has still be written. Perhaps it is too early in the development of the 'movie' for many people to have acquired the film mind. But until the faculty of visualizing and creating for the screen is developed to its maximum by writers the artistic progress of the cinema will be retarded. In order to acquire this faculty men must devote their lives to the work. I have no patience with those writers who grind out a number of scenarios when they have 'nothing better to do.' "

As when he came here four years ago, Mr. Tourneur adheres to his principle that the most artistic effects are gotten in pictures which are taken in the studio. With his intimate knowledge of the mechanism of the stage it is not unnatural that he should prefer artificial sets to out-of-door locations.

"Many actors simply won't act in the open," he maintains. "It is all very well to display the beauties of nature, but the story and the movements and the expressions that tell the story in a photoplay are more important. Of course, in saddle pictures and things of that sort, the out of doors, with its natural scenery, is fine. But for close-ups, upon which the interest of a photoplay attaches itself, outdoor lights are uncertain and cannot be depended upon. In a studio with carefully built sets and well regulated lighting the slightest move and the most subtle expression registers accurately."

Sincerity Is Chief Requisite.

Asked what he considered essential for success in motion picture acting, Mr. Tourneur said:

"The chief requisite of a motion picture actress, in addition to beauty and natural charm, is sincerity. All the little tricks which enable an actress to 'get away with it' on the legitimate stage are absolutely useless on the screen. All the illusions of the footlights are dispelled in the hard circle of the lenslight.

"Next to a fundamental knowledge of histrionics and especially of pantomime, the qualities which will most help a film actress are quick understanding and great sympathy. And I can never sufficiently emphasize the need for brains, brains, BRAINS in every phase of the motion picture field. The film actress who uses her head as well as her charms need never fear for the loss of her popularity."

Maurice Tourneur Directing a Big Scene.

In summing up his aims and ideas in the realm of the cinema, Mr. Tourneur said:

"I submit that action does not mean melodrama: that movement does not mean speed; that there is as much drama in the glance of an eye as in the burning of a city; and that mental conflict is superior to physical. I believe that the motion picture has a splendid artistic future, and that that future will be hastened just as soon as the serious American dramatist realizes that here is a field rich in material and opportunity and worthy of the highest traditions and honor."

"BUSINESS" COUNTS, SAYS PICTURE PRODUCER.

It is the "business" that counts in pictures even more than the big things, according to William Parke, under whose direction Pathe's "Mystery of the Double Cross" was produced by the Astra Film Corporation.

"In a picture it is the business that counts," says Mr. Parke. "Also in a play a bit of business will get a better laugh than any line you can speak. I remember in particular one play I produced. It had been sent around to many managers, but they had no faith in it. However, I saw its possibilities and it turned out to be a big success.

"The first act showed a scene behind the stage. The leading woman was in love with a young fellow. The young fellow's mother didn't want him to marry the girl. The girl was a leading woman in the show and the boy's mother didn't think they would be happy. Kate Ryan, I remember, played the part of the mother. The girl's maid met her and asked her to be seated for a moment. When we were rehearsing that scene I saw a chance for a laugh. Miss Ryan was not by any means a lightweight. I put in a little bit of business that got that scene over in fine style. When the mother called, the maid looked dubiously at a frail-looking chair, asking the mother to be seated. This always got a good laugh."

Mr. Parke delights in filling his pictures with charming little touches that are true to life and which add immeasurably to their beauty.

Essanay's series, "Do Children Count?" has been adopted in many cities and towns as an official aid in obtaining recruits for the army. Presenting strong appeals for the welfare of children, these photoplays are being offered as one of the many big reasons why men should answer their country's call, and they are proving most effective as recruiting propaganda.

Pretty Violet MacMillan is playing the leading part in a five-reel feature entitled "Nancy's Baby" at Universal City. The director is Eugene Moore. Miss MacMillan impersonates a ragged newsboy. The story was written by Judge Willis Brown, a former juvenile court Judge. Miss MacMillan is supported by Charles H. Mailes and Gertrude Aster.

Simplicity and Impressionability

By ERNEST MAUPAIN

IT IS with great pleasure that I have read your letter in which you do me the honor of asking me for a few of the impressions which have been given me in my numerous years of work on the legitimate stage and then in the motion pictures.

Permit me before to take advantage of the occasion which is offered to me, to thank you for your pleasant critiques given me in your most valuable magazine, and to excuse me for not having done so before. I beg of you also to be my interpreter, amongst those of your associates who have had the kindness to notice my work, and to make known their impressions to their readers, thanks to all.

Ernest Maupain.

Born in France, I have accomplished my three years' military service in Africa. In 1896, after studying painting for a number of years and without abandoning same altogether, I accepted an engagement in Paris at the Theater Grand Guignol under the direction of O. Metenier. The enumeration of the 250 dramas, comedies or operettas which I have played since that date in France, Germany and Belgium, would be too long and no doubt without interest to your magazine.

It is also my duty to tell you that having worked in Paris under the direction of Morss F. Gémier, P. Frank, A. Deval and Maurice Bernhardt, I have had the chance to remember the teachings of those masters of the Dramatic Art.

It was while playing in Paris at the "Athénee" Theater in 1908 that I was called upon for the first time to play a part in a scenario by the Gaumont Company. Since that day I have never stopped working for the motion pictures.

In June, 1912, I joined the Pathé Company in New York. I am at the present time and for the past twenty-nine months a member of the Essanay Company in Chicago.

Now, as to what I have seen, think and look for, here is my "Credo."

I think that the majority of the best motion picture productions have been made in America, and that is during the past four years.

To make great things, it requires big capital. Before the war, capital was very scarce in Europe, it will be more so after the war.

I think also that some of our camera men have furnished us the best photographic effects possible to expect until the day we will be able to apply to the motion picture industry the colored photography.

I believe that with the public expecting and demanding better productions, the time when motion picture producers, in comparatively short time, were making large fortunes is passed. The large salaries given certain stars will be cut down and distributed among the other members of the companies.

I am positive that very shortly the best artists of both sexes on the American stage will join us between theatrical engagements; we have seen some of the most renown, and others will follow.

Stage Experience Not Essential.

I do not pretend that it is absolutely necessary to have passed through the theater to be able to appear on the screen; some great talent has been discovered by your foremost producers. I, nevertheless, think and say that all those who have had the honor to work under the masters of the stage, those who have sometimes repeated the same piece during weeks and months, must have acquired the science of pose and stage requirements, and have in hand the trumps necessary to interpret the thoughts of the directors who cannot take the time to form the artists.

It is always with pleasure that I see on the screen a pretty woman or a nice type of man with bushy hair and last word in wardrobe, susceptible of making look cheap and jealous a dummy in a haberdasher window advertising a hair lotion. But my pleasure is greater when I see a scene well acted by an artist of talent, no matter if she is not as pretty or he as got up as some of our stars of motion pictures, seen on advertising matter, and whose only right to stardom is the noise made around their names by some publicity manager.

Now, in conclusion of this article which your readers maybe will find too long, permit me to tell you a few words on the subject of tears on the screen. Do not think that there has been abuse.

About thirty months ago, I was working in Ithaca, N. Y., for Léo and Théo. Wharton, and I had to play a scene in "The Warning" requiring tears. Being by nature reasonably impressionable, and the scene taken from one of the Balzac novelettes sufficiently strong, tears came to me naturally. The scene was to save my guilty son the disgrace of hearing himself condemned to death before a tribunal of justice. I myself, after having addressed a prayer to The One who directs all human destinies, tied him and threw him in the water.

A critic, the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, conceived the idea, probably after some false report, that I had obtained those tears in praying during this scene for the success of the armies of my country, France. No, Sir Reverend, there has been an error, and I give you my word of honor that if I have prayed for those who are fighting for us, which I have done, it was not before the camera. If I have cried, it is because the situation demanded it, or it would have been impossible for me to let my tears flow. The artist who can command his tears is not in my estimation any superior to the one who cannot; it is as I said before, Impressionability.

The accents of the voice at the theater and the play of the expression before the camera can replace the tears, and that is why I protest and blame the actors of the motion pictures who cannot obtain and control their tears, to artificially introduce them with the use of an eye-dropper immediately before appearing before the camera for a close-up.

I would have a dozen stories of the theater to tell you on this subject; it will be for another time if it interests you, which I doubt. Dear comrades, let us not make a laughing stock of our tears; let those of us who have some to spare, cry for our dramatic art. Let us, nevertheless, try and save some for those who are dear to us, for those who have disappeared, and let us try not to be like the man of the thirteenth century, who on his return from the funeral services of a certain state member, where he had cried during the whole ceremony, for a moneyed remuneration, did not have a tear left for his daughter who had died during his absence.

Great mystery, that of tears, whether they be joy or sorrow. Let us not try to discover. Let us preserve them for the right occasion.

The Director's Importance

By Gail Kane,

Mutual-American Star

IN MY estimation, which, incidentally, is based on experience as well as observation, the director of a photoplay ranks in almost supreme importance. The story having been selected and passed upon as meritorious enough to justify production is handled to the director. To the laity that is the end of all trouble. The director merely has the mechanical part of producing the story according to the script, in the opinion of the average person.

Gail Kane and Rollin S. Sturgeon.

Right here is where I differ with this general assumption. Regardless of how good a story may be, some directors will handle it in a manner that utterly strangles any appeal that lives in the written lines. Conversely, another director will take a comparatively worthless story and create in production one that merits admiration.

This secret lies in the director's individuality, his broadness of conception, and the faculty of handling his characters. To this is added the intuitive knowledge of what is and what is not dramatic, banal or false. Given the story, there passes through his vision the mental review of those characters who will enact its roles. Every scene, set and location are visualized; then follows the laborious detail work of laying out studio plans to conform, the selection of type for character, and the ascertainment of that type's ability to portray the part.

True, the director has his staff to assist him, but in the end all the detail of subordinate help must pass to him for final approval. Perhaps this is an attribute that contributes to the success of some directors. This being purely impersonal, prudence dictates the omission of names, but it is not uncommon for a director to listen to the suggestion of a subordinate. And it is not infrequent that a director will be spared adverse criticism later on through taking advantage of the timely word. But the director represents the final court of decision, and once having passed him he alone is left to shoulder the responsibility for finished work of screen review.

Talent that may lie dormant to the inexperienced eye, or remain unborn because no one appreciates its worth, is what a real director searches for. Once found, or sensed, then that director gives invaluable aid in bringing forth to full power the dramatic ability that otherwise would never exist. Quiet review by the reader of "stars" thus found will readily substantiate this statement and prove that in many cases these "stars" would never have been born but for the appreciation and assistance given by some director whose keen eye had seen the possibility of development.

Greater Scenario Department

By Jack G. Leo.

Scenario Director of the Fox Film Corporation.

THAT "the story's the thing," is becoming more and more evident every day to anyone who regards the motion picture industry from without, and especially to those who, with large interests at stake, are working from within to sustain and build up the industry. In the quest for suitable stories for film interpretation the whole field of literature and the stage has been swept practically bare, and the pressing demand is now for fresh, new and original material not shaped for the mere purpose of throwing together a picture after the pioneer style, much of which still persists today, but calling to the work the best imaginative brains and the best craftsmanship obtainable.

The public which has had a thorough education in pictures and plots and have become intelligent and discriminating critics, will be satisfied with nothing short of these advanced ideals—ideals which are now being interpreted into efficient facts. The public will not endure for long the working over of trite situations with which they have become familiar. And, in a country wide and carefully made observation, covering five hundred cities and towns in the United States and Canada, it has been found that the average audience, after the essentials for the development of a picture story had been set, that in the majority of cases where the picture did not have some original point in development that the audience readily foresaw the working out of the story, and so outguessed the author. This fact was at first noticed by many of the wide-awake exhibitors who emphasized the virtue and pulling power of suspense. And concerning the development of scenarios that must approximate the highest standard, there has been an abundance of talk, general in its nature, quite obvious in the alleged new truths that they reveal, but which did not seem to have any real constructive value.

We have given the most painstaking study to the problem, and finally have evolved a plan by which we can get the best possible results of trained authorship and the mechanical development of the thought and intent of the author. This broad plan of co-ordination in two distinct departments of the industry—and yet two that are, as a matter of fact, most closely related—is the principal groundwork for realizing that familiar term—"putting pep into the pictures."

The plan to enroll the leading dramatists and fiction writers of this country is already under way, and has not finally been completed, but to date the gentlemen under contract include such well-known playwrights as Rupert Hughes, George Scarborough and George Bronson Howard. The creative fiction writers enlisted to date are Larry Evans, Frederic Arnold Kummer, Randolph Lewis and Adrian Johnson. When completed, the staff of contributors will be unequalled by that of the most popular American magazine.

But, according to a carefully functioned plan the responsibilities of the scenario department, after it has worked to the best advantage with the author in developing his story, does not cease there. It exercises important additional functions which make for an enormously increased efficiency in the production of perfect picture stories—perfect pictures and perfect stories—a harmonious fusion of the literary and the mechanical.

This scenario department has to do with a picture, from the very inception of the idea to the return of the film which carries it after nine months of service to millions of picture patrons. This department has charge of the laboratory, and of all of the raw material. So it is, that beginning with the scenario, we see the idea developed and then sent to the director. We see that the pictures taken by the director get the best quality of negatives in the laboratory. We watch the photographed scenes as they come in to see that the director skillfully has interpreted the story. We see to it that the completed story is turned over to the cutter, and that he gets a thorough conception of the intention of the author. Then after this process, and with the approval of the head of the corporation, who reads all accepted scripts, and sees all of the completed pictures, the story is sent to the film editor for final touches. The plant and laboratory are then instructed regarding the production of copies, which are distributed to the exchanges throughout the world. And, when the life of a film story is over—it comes back from its wide-flung journey like a tired child to the care of the scenario department, from whence it sprung as a mere idea. The plan thus far has worked with splendid results, and with an efficiency and appreciation in results that have exceeded the most sanguine expectations.

Artistry and Motion Pictures

By Peggy Hyland.

WHENEVER I think of artistry in motion pictures, I think of realism, for after all they are synomonous. Nothing which is not natural can be beautiful and when anything is so natural that it seems really true, then it must necessarily be beautiful. You will notice if you'll watch some player's climb to stardom how her work becomes more attractive as it becomes more realistic.

Peggy Hyland.

Whenever I think about realism I remember my first experience in a motion picture studio. Being fascinated by my new surroundings, I appeared on the floor, all made up, before even the stage hands were through adding the finishing touches to the scene.

Imagine my amazement when I noticed that they painted the electric bulbs white. "Why do you do that?" I asked in amazement.

"To make them appear to be lighted, of course!" they answered somewhat disgusted.

"But why not actually light them?" I asked again unable to understand why anyone should prefer the artificial to the realistic.

"Aw, they look just the same and it saves the trouble of lighting them afterwards and the expense of the electricity," they answered dropping the subject and hammering hard to drown any further questions from the "little rube" who wanted stage stunts in a motion picture studio.

However, then and there I firmly made up my mind that if I ever had a studio of my own I would have real lights and everything else real that it was possible to obtain.

Now that happy day has come and I have kept faith with myself. When I drink tea in my Mayfair pictures I actually drink tea and when I arrange blossoms in a vase, they are true blossoms not artificial ones which have been made in some factory.

In the end, I'm sure these bits of realism make the picture more artistic and attractive than it would otherwise be. I love pretty light effects in the photography and beautiful furnishings, hangings and dainty, fluffy frocks. Constantly I am planning pretty, odd effects in my pictures and I never see a beautiful article in the store but I determine to use it the first time opportunity offers.

Not only artists but every good soul loves that which is artistic. Many who look at the pictures may not realize how it conforms to every rule of art, but they will be pleased and soothed by the final effect and that is sufficient.

Then, too, my stories must be wholesome and refreshing. I can't understand why depressing and sordid topics are used as the nucleus of so many stories when there are sweet and beautiful stories galore which may be had for a little effort.

Child life and animal life is always attractive and I endeavor to give them some place, no matter how small, in every picture in which I play.

Always striving to make the finished production one which will refresh my audience through its artistry and wholesomeness, I find it necessary for us to work together in the greatest harmony. The moment there are petty differences the picture suffers.

Realism is beauty—therefore it is the goal towards which I unceasingly strive.

With Art as Her Handmaiden

By VIVIAN M. MOSES

THE growth of any art which contains within itself the elements of utility is assured, since in the very nature of things the utilization of the art brings development. But when to this element of utility is added a characteristic of universal appeal, resulting in a popularity of a universal nature, the development becomes so rapid that the growth assumes in some of its phases the rank nature of weed growth, with the ungainly proportions characteristic of the weed nature.

That the motion picture art has enjoyed a mushroom growth is a fact too well known to need proof; and that this growth has been accompanied by certain weed-like tendencies also is no secret. It is with the first adequate measures taken toward the removal of the most serious of these defects that this article deals.

The most frequent criticisms that one hears of present-day motion pictures—and the ones that are most deserved—are indictments on the score of "bad art" and "bad taste." Whenever there is a discussion of a forward movement in motion picture making the compelling thought behind the cry for reform is the necessity for inducing into the picture theaters greater numbers of people of discriminating judgment. The mere existence of this necessity is an indictment of the shortcomings of motion pictures when measured in the true-focussing eye of art—using the word in its broader sense. And the reason for these shortcomings is not hard to find.

The motion picture industry has enlisted the services of armies of workmen of all kinds, of craftsmen, of specialists, of technicians, of artisans—but, up to the present time, of few artists; and now we are employing the term in its restricted application to the professionals of the structural and pictorial arts. And this is all the more incongruous since of all forms of entertainment the motion picture is, per se, the most pictorial! It is with an appreciation of the absurdity of this situation, and with the determination that their pictures shall not suffer from this handicap, that the producers of Goldwyn Pictures have taken the initiative in bringing to their studios artists of established repute, and in giving them authoritative charge of the designing, construction and direction of their productions. The group of artists thus enlisted in the creation of Goldwyn Pictures embraces Mr. Hugo Ballin, Mr. Everitt Shinn and Mr. William Cotton. Before reviewing their work it might be well to inform ourselves briefly concerning these three artists, in order that we may understand better their motives and purposes.

Hugo Ballin, a native of New York City, is one of America's most eminent mural artists. Although still a very young man, his mural paintings have won him many prizes and awards and brought him international recognition; his name has been a familiar one in the art journals of the world's capitals and art centers. Among his many successes may be mentioned the winning of the Thomas B. Clarke prize for the best figure composition painted in the United States by an American citizen without limitation of age; two successive Architectural League medals for decorative painting; and a medal won at the Buenos Aires International Exposition in 1910 for figure composition. Mr. Ballin's most important murals are to be found in the executive offices of the Wisconsin capitol at Madison; in the home of Oliver Gould Jennings, New York; in the home of E. D. Brandegee, Boston. His paintings are to be found in many private collections, in the National Museum at Washington, the Montclair Museum and elsewhere. He is a member of the National Art Club, Rome, Italy; the Society of Arts and Letters, Paris; the Architectural League, the Society of Mural Decorators, the National Institute of Arts and Letters, an Associate in the National Academy of Design, and Artist Member of the Lotos Club.

It is significant, is it not, that a man of Mr. Ballin's standing in the world of art is devoting his entire time and effort to the cause of "better pictures"?

Everitt Shinn, because of his fame as an American illustrator, probably is well known to the readers of these pages. Mr. Shinn's clever drawings have made such a place for themselves in the pages of American magazines that the "Shinn type" of illustration has become a standard. Quaintly charming in their details, his drawings are packed with human interest and peopled by figures whose richly humorous characteristics have revealed the artist as the Dickens of the pen and brush. Mr. Shinn's services are in constant demand by the art editors, and have won him a fortune. But magazine illustration is by no means the sum total of this artist's accomplishments. He is a mural painter with an established reputation and a niche all his own; he is a facile worker in pastel, and—he is an unusually successful writer of dramatic sketches.

William Cotton, whose advent at the Goldwyn Studios is more recent than that of Mr. Ballin and Mr. Shinn, is one of the most successful of the younger American artists, having already achieved an international reputation as a portrait painter, and won distinction as well with his decorative drawings and tone studies. Mr. Cotton won success, following study in Boston and Paris, with a series of canvasses, one of the first of which to gain wide recognition was "The Princess," the painting of a little girl fresh from her bath being attended by two ladies-in-waiting. This picture won the first Hallgarten prize at the National Academy of Design, in 1907. It was followed by many portraits, notable among which were a full length figure of Chrystal Herne, the actress, a portrait of Harrison Rhodes, the author, and a study of a young girl, Madge Evans, now well known as a moving picture player. Mr. Cotton's work has won the praise of critics both here and abroad ,and has firmly established him as one of the forces to be reckoned with in contemporary American art. .

In beginning the production of a Goldwyn Picture the first and primary service to be rendered by the particular artist in charge of it is to design the sets. Instead of being handed to a technical director or an art director or a master carpenter or any one or several of the usual train of people who look to this end of motion picture production, the Goldwyn script is turned over to Ballin, Shinn or Cotton. Actually, physically, these men design the physical settings in which the action of the photoplay takes place; and this means not only scenes, but in most instances the entire minutae and details of all fixed and movable accessories, including furniture, furnishings, draperies, all species of properties, and costumes, working, of course, in harmony with the star for the last named.

Mr. Ballin, imbued with the spirit of architecture, thinks in plan, and works in it. For each set he prepares a plan drawing to scale, sometimes including the larger pieces of furniture, but more often omitting them. This drawing is frequently supplemented by a flat sketch showing side walls, and their ornamentation—or lack of it. Nothing is drawn in perspective, and figures and accessory details are omitted, these being furnished later under the verbal direction of the artist.

Mr. Shinn, as might be expected, draws in perspective; what is more, his drawings are usually a visualization of some keynote episode or situation of the photoplay the action of which takes place in the set shown. His drawings are executed with all the care and wealth of elaboration which this artist puts in a magazine illustration, and, as may be seen by the example reproduced in this article, these set drawings are illustrations in all but name. Mr. Shinn's art is impressionistic, but it suggests every detail in a room or scene; and the figures of characters are shown in correct costume and in some characteristic or actual situation. For dimensions Mr. Shinn hands a note to his colaborators or confers with them in the production of his sets.

Mr. Cotton's method, as revealed in his work on the first of his Goldwyn Pictures—"The Spreading Dawn," in which Jane Cowl is starred—is to make a rough plan drawing and elaborate it with sketches.

This business of designing sets, while it is the first and primary service which the artist renders his production, is by no means a perfunctory or casual matter. Many ends are served in this first fitting of a photoplay production with its physical dress. Not only is the entire atmosphere of a production created, for this is true of all sets, no matter by whom made, but in the hands of the skillful artist the actors in the photodrama are measurably assisted in getting their message "across" to the audience.

Hugo Ballin.

"Every known emotion," says Mr. Ballin, "can be expressed in terms of form and color. Through the physical marshalling of objects, through contour and balance (not balance of weight, mind you, but art balance), through light and shade, and their gradations, the world's grief and the world's joy may be deftly and exactly expressed. Despair and hope, doubt and decision, hypocrisy and sincerity—these and other traits are convincingly suggested by the physical surroundings of the people who are supposed to portray them."

This is really the vital aspect of settings, when measured by the artist's standards. Do they help to carry on the story? Do they merely provide so many scenes in which the story—and the people living it before the eye of the camera—struggle on as best they may? Or, as is not infrequently the case, do the settings positively hinder the progress of the story and the message it conveys? They may do any one of these three things.

To this end Mr. Ballin lays great stress, as do the other artists, on color, or tone values, in his scenes. Of course the ordinary photoplay shows no color, as the layman uses the term, it being photographed and projected in black and white. But to the artist color is a relative term, and every composition registers color, even though it be expressed in black and white. For the purpose of accurately controlling the color values of his sets Mr. Ballin has devised a chromatic scale or graded schedule of tone values. Rather he has devised a series of them. These are simply strips of board painted in sections which imperceptibly graduate from dark to light, several different colors being employed, one for each board. These scales are numbered, and the various sections are lettered. As the photographic value of every gradation in every scale has been determined, all the artist has to do to procure that precise value in any set is to call for the use of the desired number. The scene painter selects the pigment corresponding to the number given—and the result is automatic.

Inasmuch as the final object of a setting is to help the actors tell a story to an audience, the one aim of the artists is to simplify. The play and the people in it are the important things, all else are mere accessories. The fact that a certain scene calls for "a rich library set" does not give the scene painter and the carpenter and the "furniture hound" license to show all that they know about what properties and what effects may be found in "rich" libraries. The artist determines, What is the province of this setting in the story? What traits of character does it expose? What emotions must it help to convey or conceal? And having determined these

In this production the artist has provided for his star a succession of backgrounds in sets the chief characteristics of which are extreme simplicity, dignity of line and charm of proportion. In doing this he has achieved settings which are not only beautiful, but which help the story through the atmosphere of refinement and distinction which they bring to it.

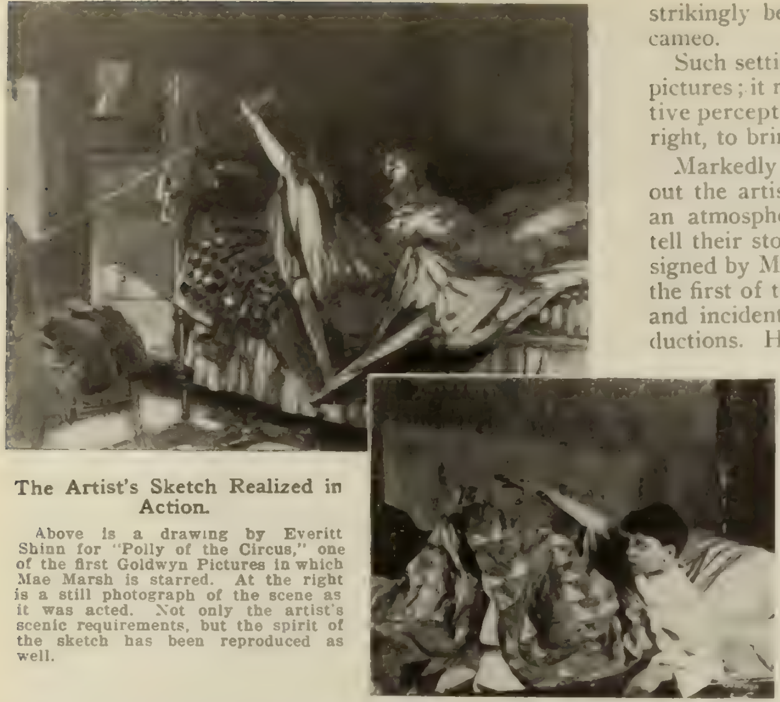
Detailed Working Drawing by Hugo Ballin for a Scene in "Baby Mine," Madge Kennedy's First Screen Comedy—See Page 387.



The Artist's Sketch Realized in Action.

things, the artist builds accordingly. Now the setting required may be exceedingly complex; or it may be passing plain. Which of these it is does not matter. The important fact is that the setting has been made not only to step out of the way of the story and let it proceed as it should, but actually to help the actors carry on their tale, to march with the progress of the drama. The setting, as a separate entity, has ceased to exist when it has successfully met the requirements of these tests—and in this manner simplicity has been gained.

This process, not only of eliminating every unnecessary thing, but of making every physical element in a photoplay, no matter how small or how great, no matter how costly or how cheap, place its shoulder to the wheel and help to roll the story along the main path of its progress is the process of real simplification which three eminent artists have brought to Goldwyn Pictures, and it is a new word in motion picture production.

Very interesting are the sets which Mr. Ballin designed for the first picture in which Maxine Elliott is starred—it must be nameless at this writing, as no title has been fixed upon. Here the artist was confronted with the problem of providing settings in which the features of a woman internationally famous for her beauty would show to the greatest advantage. Also, the story recorded a conflict of open honesty with crafty vice, and of refinement with vulgarity. The picture, which will be seen very shortly, since Goldwyn productions are released in September and trade showings will antedate this by some weeks, shows the severely plain backgrounds with which Mr. Ballin furnished Miss Elliott's scenes. But plain as these settings are, they yet convey a sense of beauty, of refinement, of personal elevation and strength of character, which infinitely enhance the dramatic struggle in the story; which tell, as a thousand feet of film and a thousand words of sub-title could not tell, the kind of person Miss Elliott is supposed to be in the story, and which incidentally afford at every turn a background against which Miss Elliott's strikingly beautiful profile stands out as clear-cut as a cameo.

Such settings have never been utilized before in motion pictures; it remained for an artist, with that instant, intuitive perception of values which is the true artist's birthright, to bring them to the studio.

Markedly in contrast with these, but equally carrying out the artist's idea that settings should not only create an atmosphere but should actually help the players to tell their stories to the audience, is the pretty setting designed by Mr. Ballin for Zoie's bedroom in "Baby Mine," the first of the plays in which Madge Kennedy is starred, and incidentally the third of Mr. Ballin's Goldwyn productions. Here the character which the setting is required to "plant" is that of a lovely young girl who has not penetrated far below the surface of things; of serious thought and responsibilities she knows not a whit. On the other hand, she is well reared, refined, educated, absolutely virtuous, and angelically good, despite the fact that thoughtless lies roll from her facile little tongue in an endless flood. All these things the artist bore in mind in designing his set. He surrounded Zoie with the ordinary objects to be found in the boudoir of a young bride, but he so manipulated the tone-values of his set that at every turn these physical surroundings suggest and supplement the character of the person whose choice they are supposed to be. The furnishings of the bedroom are done in a finely flowered cretonne, which conveys not only femininity, but the easy-going, surface-living Zoie herself. And every detail of the room's arrangement has some meaning in the drama of the little wife who lied to her husband about the babies she had never borne him.

"I put that mirror there," said Mr. Ballin in speaking of an unusually effective dressing-table mirror with a Chinese frame, "not just because I had to have a mirror in the room, but because in studying the story and its action as revealed in the scenario I could see many places in which the dramatic action could be heightened by the use of the mirror; it was needed, in fact, to carry on the story as I saw it. And all through the play that mirror plays a very real part.

Where Detail Matches Detail.

The above sketch by Mr. Shinn is for another Mae Marsh picture, "The Bird Doctor." How faithfully the stage mechanics have reproduced the drawing in the studio set, shown at the left, is seen by comparing, detail for detail, the drawing with the scene; the order has been reversed in the stage set, but no detail is omitted.

"In designing any scene in a photoplay I have in my mind not only the general purposes for which the set will be used, but I visualize mentally the players in position in the setting, at this and another moment in the play; so that I have mental pictures of so many vital compositions of figures and backgrounds, and when I design a bench here, or a window there, or a bit of trellis there I know, before the scenery has been built, just how the actual scene in the photoplay will appear on the screen—just what the relationship between the persons and the things in the scene will be, just what effects will be produced, just what drama will flow from striking this, that, or another note in composition. And this is the reason that we can not permit the slightest departure from our plans by the artisans who carry them out in the actual production of the set. Obviously no one but the artist who has dreamed the dream—so to speak—can know just what effects, what compositions, he had in mind when he planned this or that bit of his sketch; and should these be changed by a second or third person not in the secret, the whole drama, the whole psychology of the set would be thrown out. This may sound like taking ourselves very seriously—but it is only taking our sets seriously—which is a different thing!"

Everett Shinn.

Just as Mr. Ballin is a romantic idealist in his work, so Mr. Shinn is an impressionistic realist in his. This is clearly established in the first two pictures which Mr Shinn has designed for Goldwyn, "The Bird Doctor" and "Polly of the Circus," in both of which Mae Marsh is the star. And the settings in these pictures show to a marked degree how faithfully the sketches of the artists are lived up to in the production of the actual setting on the studio stage. Reproduced with this article are sketches for scenes in the two photoplays just named—the work of Mr. Shinn before any work had been done on the sets and paralleling these are photographs made of the actual sets as they stood on the studio stage. It will be seen that not only has the general scheme been followed in each instance, but detail for detail the artist's thought and the finished scene coincide. And this is done, not for the sake of slavishly following an artist's drawing, but for the reason that the artist, having planned scenes in which he saw, in his mind's eye, episodes of the play passing in order is presumably better fitted to say just what are the requirements of those scenes, down to the minutest detail, than is any one else.

Mr. Shinn, however, assists his collaborators by drawing into his sketches the actual figures of the actors in some episode of the play, and it is almost uncanny to see the manner in which, during the process of filming the play one scene after another duplicates the exact composition the artist has drawn, both as to the attitudes and positions of the players in relation to the settings and in relation to each other.

In all this no word has been said of the director—that august boss supreme in the land of the studio stage. How, one is tempted to ask, does this autocrat take this scheme in which such importance and authority is invested in the artist? The answer is that in the Goldwyn plan the artist and the director co-operate. This is not fancy; it is accomplished fact. Further than that, the artist and the director may act as co-directors of a production, as have Mr. Ballin and Mr. John Stewart Robinson on "Baby Mine." And it is not without the realm of the possible, in things Goldwyn, that when the artist has become sufficiently proficient in the art of directing to stand alone he will direct—alone.

For Art has become the handmaiden of the Movies.

Our Little Sister of the Screen

Shirley Mason, Daintiest of Picture Stars, Delights in Rags and Excitement.

I HARDLY know what to write because I really like every part I have played so far, whether I am wearing rags or fine clothes. I only like the idea of rags or plain clothes because I do not have to be so careful not to crush or soil them while waiting around the studio.

Shirley Mason.

I took the name of Shirley Mason when I joined McClure's about ten months ago to work in the "Seven Deadly Sins." I loved to play the part of Eve Leslie because she had so much to do through all the pictures and because there was a lot of exciting scenes, and I love excitement.

I just finished a picture called "The Little Chevalier." I played a boy's part and also that of a girl. The part I liked best was a duel I fought. It took me three weeks to master that scene alone.

I cannot remember my first appearance on the stage, I was only two years old and had played several small parts. My first good speaking part came when I created Little Hal in "The Squaw Man" with William Faversham. After that I just seemed to play one part after another; sometimes boy's and sometimes girl's parts.

The last part I played on the stage was the name part in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," on the coast trip. I hope some day that I will be able to create a child's part like "The Poor Little Rich Girl." My sister, Viola Dana, created that part.

I think I have written about myself enough. It seems that this letter has an awful lot of I's in it.

Sincerely, SHIRLEY MASON.

Evolution of the Technical Man

By WILLIAM G. SMART

THE evolution of the technical man in the motion pictures contributes always to the devolpment of the art of cinema producing. The technical man is the support of the director. He is the spring of the studio works that is never seen, and the most important advances of the screen art have been contemporaneous with the new inventions and applications in his department.

W. G. Smart.

The modern technical man must possess a multitude of trades, besides some knowledge of almost everything else under the sun. It is self-evident that he must be a carpenter and scenic painter, and something of an interior decorator acquainted with period furniture. It is desirable that he be at least an amateur chemist, since many original effects are the consequence of a knowledge of how to combine acids and bases and compounds.

To be a photographer of some ability is essential, inasmuch as the constructor of effects must be capable of visualizing their results upon the films, besides understanding the laws of projection. Today when the industry has attained heights unthought of five years ago, the quantity of information at the disposal of the technician cannot be too great. Producers are incessantly widening the areas of their activities and are pushing into fields which in more conservative days were taboo, with the outcome that the technical man is constantly called upon to accomplish results previously held to be impossible.

An appreciation of the expansion of the technician's activities may be gathered from a resumé of his history. In former times the technical man was usually a scene painter or carpenter picked up at random, whose sole experience was derived from the stage and who knew little or nothing of the distinct and entirely novel method of expression called the movie. Nine years ago when the old Biograph company was located in a dingy, old-fashioned house on Fourteenth street, New York, the technical department consisted of but two men. These were jacks-of-all-trades, from scene shifter to paper hanger, and they had to satisfy the fastidious requirements of such persons as D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford and others of impending eminence.

In contrast today in the Peerless studio, where William A. Brady holds sway, the scope of each member of the technical department is restricted entirely to his trade, thus insuring the highest efficiency.

The technical director has three assistants who cooperate with him on the various divisions of the work, and they in turn hold the members of their respective departments responsible. When the manuscript has been approved of by the director general and the scenario editor, it is turned over to the technical director, who reads it through with care.

It is now given to an assistant who picks out the various scenes and writes down their requirements. Then follows a series of conferences with the director, during which the story is discussed, the properties fixed upon, and the manner in which the action will be protrayed (in the studio vernacular, "geography"), and the angle from which the camera man will operate or shoot, are all decided upon. Any opportunity for unusual lighting effects is immediately embraced.

Succeeding this discussion the technical director orders certain interiors and exteriors built according to his sketches, obtains the furniture, and directs his assistants to do the essential painting, carpentry and decorating. If there is anything unusual called for by the scenario the proper persons are told to get it.

A ground plan of the set is now drawn up by the technical director. In other words the arrangement of the furniture, the placing of the properties and the location of the doors and windows and stairs, etc., are laid out for the information of the head scene shifter, or as he is known in studio parlance, the head grip. The head property man receives a ground plan also, and it is his duty to place the properties in their designated locations.

Meantime the technical director is constantly working with these various departments so that the product created is in accord with his final ideas. As plays are not written but rewritten, so pictures are not built, but rebuilt. The necessary adjustments and alterations are made, and the set is ready for the work of the director.

Speed Prime Requisite.

Speed is a primary requisite inasmuch as the sets cannot be constructed several times, and besides, space in a busy studio is at a premium. It is the technical director's work to plan the studio floor so as to permit sufficient room for the operation of all the sets without one director interfering with the activities of his neighbor. Decision as to which scene of the photoplay is to be worked upon is often made not earlier than the evening previous and it requires considerable effort and ingenuity to have the set properly prepared for the director to work upon the following morning.

When unusual properties are needed it has been often the case that property men have endeavored all night to collect the required articles—but the word "can't" is foreign to the technical director.

As a concrete case, in a picture in which Alice Brady partakes, a coach of the period of the Revolution was needed. The staff of the studio hunted far and near for the coveted treasure and did not receive any encouragement until at the last moment they discovered a person in an out-of-the-way cranny of New York who owned such a relic, and thus smiles succeeded despair.

Since it is the fountain head of all information, the office of the technical manager should possess a library with books of reference on history, architecture and furniture; photographs and copies of the famous places and palaces of the world, guide books to important cities, books on costumes, books on interior decoration, chemistry—in fact, the library should aspire to comprehend the world's information.

The technical director has ceased to be a mere capable mechanic; he must be a man of widespread knowledge and imagination.

The technical man also maintains a complete index of firms throughout the country who deal in the unusual and exotic. He knows where to get anything from wax flowers to an Egyptian mummy.

Extent of Progress Great.

The extent of the progress of the motion picture is brought out in relief when comparison of the methods of constructing sets in vogue some years back is made with the principles being applied today.

Up to a short time ago the screen craftsmen attempted to apply the experiences of the stage, with rather unfortunate results. The realization that they were dealing with a new medium of communication was absent. It was not until technical men were bold enough to discard their unworkable theatrical ideas and strike out for themselves that the screen began to make real progress. The ideal today is to make the illusion complete. The attempt is made to have the sets and scenery a transcript of actual conditions.

Examples of this advance are manifold and illuminating, especially in the details of production. Formerly canvas was used exclusively for walls and backgrounds with the result that they shook and registered a blurred impression. Today compoboard has supplanted canvas.

The window sills, staircases, door-jambs, panels, etc., are built probably more securely than in many houses. Pictures and fixtures were formerly all painted on the canvas, with the consequence that from the shaking of the scene the illusion was lost.

Realism Present Keynote.

At present the keynote is realism. Actual paintings, lighting fixtures, mouldings, art objects and the like, are employed with gratifying results.

The study of wall papers is important. Only after considerable experiment was it discovered that paper with straight-lined designs gave a false impression. Those having a regular and strongly accentuated design totally lacking in detail ornamentation get across satisfactorily. It was a common opinion until recently that in order to derive the impression of richness it was imperative to use heavily flowered papers, preferably of a red color. The result obtained on the film was often nothing like that sought. The design was so intricate that the camera could not register it and the red color did not appear as such. As a matter of fact it has only recently been learned what are the proper shades for camera work.

Many studios are adopting the ideas of futurist art evidently not remembering that what is excellent for pictorial work does not imply equally successful photography. Gold furniture as well as draperies and curtains has been dispensed with as much as possible. In some of the studios there still exist old sets which were constructed for theatrical purposes and in consequence can do service in only one form or shape, whereas in contrast to this new sets can be utilized in over one hundred different forms without recognition.

The possession of ingenuity on the part of the technical man is an effective aid in overcoming many minor obstacles which hinder the gross result of the picture. Instances of the value of this sense are exemplified in the discovery of the breakable bottle and of the fact that ordinary glue faithfully conveys the illusion of cobwebs.

Further examples of the detail changes which have taken place in the production work could be multiplied ad infinitum, but a word must be said about the influence of chemistry. Scenes of warfare and fire were always a source of danger and vexation. The ammunition used was identical with that employed in actual combat, and consequently injected an item of peril into the work.

Thanks to a man named Newman, a noiseless and harmless cartridge has been invented which serves the purpose to a nicety. Possibly only one who has really been blown up can fully appreciate the significance of this discovery.

Newman has also originated a cartridge which can do service at night and give the effect of real warfare. Formerly fire scenes were dreaded because of the deadly fumes of sulphur, but this is now avoided by using other chemicals which permit everyone to work in comfort and safety, besides giving the desired effect.

All in all, the technical man has a busy time around the studio. He is not a showy part of the machine, but without him it would be apt to be gummed up in a very short time.

In the Costume Room

By Mrs. Frank Farrington.

Costume Mistress, Thanhouser Film Corporation

HAVING charge of a Costume Room in a big motion picture studio is not exactly a recreation, but it has its compensations in the interesting nature of the work. We are busy almost every moment of the time—for the simple handing out of costumes is the least of our work—but you don't mind busyness when you know it is creative.

Mrs. Frank Farrington.

For the costume department creates, and don't let the big salaried director forget it. The taste of the costume mistress is consulted by every common sense player in the studio, and the least of her problems is that of delivering or having returned a costume.

To give an instance: A young woman rushes into the department with a rush call for a dress that will fit a vampire part that has suddenly been written into the picture. As the suddenness affected us all around—the author, director, assistant and finally the poor costume women—we weren't able to fill the order. However, the director had a huge company waiting and the young woman had to be garbed for the part. Here the costume mistress and her assistants get in their fine Italian hand. Snatching up some material that was right at hand, they deftly drape the actress until she is a vampire, indeed, and can rush onto the stage and change her director's gloomy face to a smiling one. No doubt while this rush fitting process is going on, the Costume Department must ransack its shelves for clothes for a "Giant" who must be dressed in a little boy's suit for the comedy director, and a dwarf who must be costumed as a "Pirate." We work with both hands in the Costume Room and, since there are also ladders to climb, often with both feet!

Costuming a film production is a thoroughly different proposition from costuming a theatrical production. The writer is enabled to speak of this contrast because she had costumed many Broadway productions before coming to the studio. Some of these included Olga Nethersole's "Sappho," productions by Augustin Daly, and Klaw & Erlanger.

And the difference is a time difference. The picture producers spend as much money in their Costume Rooms as the theatrical managers, but the work of costuming a theatrical production is generally laid out so far in advance that it would never fit in with a motion picture studio schedule. For that matter, however, it is "hustle," "hustle," "hustle," in the studio as you never find it on the stage. Perhaps that is why the motion picture producers have crawled up on their theatrical competitors so rapidly and now over-top them.

The work has its funny side. This is brought out when some sort of a costume play is being filmed. The sweet young ingenues seldom feel at their prettiest in some staid costume of a past period, and I have known them to rush such a costume to their own dressmakers and have some "style" put in. Of course, such a change showed up the chicness of the actress to better advantage when the scene was finally photographed, but when the scene was projected before the first print critics, you would hear a howl about inaccuracy and a re-take would have to be ordered. Yes, you will run into Vanity in the Costume Room; for isn't Vanity's chum—Dress, and isn't the latter our mainstay?

Norma Talmadge a Modern Female

Meets Her Guests in Riding Breeches With an After Luncheon Change to Modest Womanalls.

By Margaret I. McDonald.

SOMETIMES we are prone to forget that what used to be known as the modern female has "evoluted" from the severe type of a few years ago to one as sweetly charming as it is unembarrassed. It dons the attire of man with the innocence of babyhood, casts off its hair-pins and other like restraints and bubbles with the effervescence of perfect health. Such is pretty Norma Talmadge, the popular moving picture star in the solitude of her summer home.

Norma Talmadge at Home.

Her summer home at Beechurst, L. I., faces on the bay, with nothing on earth to obscure the view save a few bushes of wild honeysuckle scattered here and there. And as she came down the steps to greet us attired in neat fitting black and white check riding breeches, brown sweater and other accessories, I felt the seriousness of my intended interview dissolve to the importance of a thistledown. I was face to face with a little girl who for the time didn't care whether a moving picture ever existed or not so long as she was allowed to ramble through her vacation carefree and undisturbed.

At her invitation we ensconsed ourselves among cushions on easy chairs and couch hammocks and listened to and laughed at the prattle of a mere girl partaking the while of a dainty lunch. A tragedy had occurred in the Talmadge household that morning; one of Miss Talmadge's parrakeets had passed out. She fed it a chocolate drop, and at the moment of our arrival was tearfully wondering whether or not the blame for its untimely death lay on her own pretty shoulders. Its emerald mate drooped sadly in its cage nearby while its mistress turned over and over the problem of whether "he needed a wife or a husband," and to change the riding breeches for a modest pair of dark blue womanalls, then rambled off leaving the question unsettled.

There was much of interest to tell us of the radishes which she had picked in the back garden and had stuck back in the ground when she found that she had meddled too soon; and of her one ripe strawberry half of which had been devoured by an ant. There was the pathos of bug-ridden peach trees and grape vines which she "really must attend to, company or no company"; and so it was that we followed the lead of our little picture star into the back with its pretty trellises and arbors, and stood patiently by while the tree spray belched forth its death dealing concoction of arsenate of lead and Bordeaux mixture.

She talked little of pictures and was beyond coercion past a certain point where she mischievously imitated the fashion in which she "heaved sorrow" for the camera in the old days, and referred to various other incongruities of her amateurish period. So one must be satisfied to read between the lines and take for granted that her realization of the progress of the art of moving picture making is as keen as that of those who make it a business to criticize rather than to act.

Miss Talmadge in her own home is charming, hospitable, and artless as a child. And except for the quick change of expression, of which her countenance is ever proclaiming capacity for, it would be hard to believe that she had ever heaved sorrow, real or artificial.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle asserts that at least one good joke should be perpetrated at the family breakfast table every morning. This is more essential to starting the day right than the inevitable newspaper or coffee and rolls in the opinion of the funniest fat man.

Trials of the Cameraman

By WILLIAM E. FILDEW

IT HAS been said that the cameraman is one of the most important adjuncts in the making of successful motion pictures. Of course this means from the standpoint of techique and effect. As one authority puts it: "He is one man who possesses the entire confidence of the director. His is the trained eye that follows the active brain of the director, and accuracy is its keynote."

William E. Fildew.

The cameraman certainly has his fill of activity and is present from start to finish of all pictures. He is present even at rehearsals before there is any necessity to "shoot," because he wishes to be familiar with situations, exits, entrances, and have the stage business firmly fixed in his mind. And when the director is through with a scene and has called "strike this" the cameraman is still old Mr. Reliable, for he remains and takes still photos, and on many occasions is obliged to give a showing of the previously taken scenes to director and stars a few hours later.

In writing a short article on the cameraman that is limited to some general statements and a few anecdotes, it is necessary to get a "close up," for the topic of motion picture photography is almost inexhaustible. I am asked to indicate what has been the greatest aid and assistance to motion picture photographers during the past few years. Without hesitation I believe it has been the progress in the making of the film itself. Years back, when I worked in the old Biograph studios, where so many of the present day celebrities received their first instruction, the quality of the film was an obstacle to be reckoned with. But now both film and emulsion have made rapid strides toward the ideal.

Of course there have been improvements in the mechanical end, too,—lenses, stops, apertures, revolving heads and tilting tables. Nearly every cameraman has made his own improvements in some detail or other, but the basic foundation of camera work still remains the lens and box. Experiments are constantly being made by photographers the world over, and mechanical improvements are always in evidence, but with good film and accurate lighting the battle for good photography in motion pictures is half won.

Studio and motion picture photography go hand in hand in the matter of improvements, even in the matter of sensitive emulsions. I believe the future holds great things for the motion picture from the photographic standpoint, and I look to see very shortly a perfected plan for color work and greater tone effect. The developing and toning of positives by new methods and secret processes is now within hailing distance.

The Greatest Difficulty.

As to what constitutes the greatest difficulty in the making of motion pictures, I should reply the insecurity of the tripod in the making of outdoor scenes. Exteriors require the greatest amount of attention from the cameraman because of the varying light and shade and the mobility of the camera itself and its liability to accident. The location chosen by the expert may be all that is desired and there may be a whole lot of trained performers, but you can't get a trained camera. The tripod must be nursed like a contrary child. It must be firmly set.

These difficulties I can better explain by citing a couple of instances that illustrate the handicaps a cameraman meets. During my engagement as photographer with the Reliance Company, I was obliged to follow the progress of an express train from an aeroplane. We were compelled to fly at a low altitude for miles on account of the focus to be desired. During all of this flight we were constantly buffeted by "pockets" of wind, even the buildings contributing to this annoyance. Just as quickly as I had the tripod set firmly and got ready to grind, and pride myself upon the fact that I was almost making history, the aviator would call out a warning and down we would plunge twenty feet or more. It was one of the most difficult motion picture grinds that I have ever attempted, not excepting taking pictures from the trucks of fast moving trains. But somehow I managed to keep the camera head tilted at the right angle and with rare luck the scenes were taken successfully. Of course, after we had landed, there was considerable doubt voiced by the director, but the result more than pleased him. I forgot to mention that a man had to be dropped from the aeroplane—the first time, I believe, this had ever been attempted—and I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw how accurately the incident had been filmed.

Aeroplane Photography.

There is very little of aeroplane photography done now on account of this air pocket uncertainty, but with the era of bigger machines and better immobility, there is bound to be a lot of it. There is a weird sensation, too, in the taking of pictures from an aeroplane—one that is never forgotten.

I remember another instance of being up in the air and obtaining surprising results. Director Cabanne was making one of the most thrilling of his five-reel Fine Art pictures—one that is still popular—"Daphne and the Pirates." He decided to have the big moment or thrill take place at sea. The waters outside San Francisco Bay were chosen for the locale. The incident was that of a pirate ship boarding a merchant vessel with a big battle to follow on the decks. The ships were large, full rigged and mounted guns. They were several hundred yards apart and both maneuvering for position. There was to be constant action.

I was perched on the top of the mainmast with the camera in a most precarious position. After a little while I became used to the oscillation and the swelling of the ship and was making satisfactory progress. Of course there was always the danger of the tripod playing tricks. Director Cabanne and I, both with megaphones, were shouting to one another and we were doing nicely, thank you, when suddenly there came a very strong wind storm and the ships began to rock violently.

"Ah," yelled Mr. Cabanne enthusiastically, "the very thing I was hoping for. A good stiff breeze—this will make action."

And there was I up in the air over 120 feet, holding on to a mast that swayed like a pendulum. Oh, yes, 'twas fine for the director and the action for the picture, but no one thought of the cameraman. But then that frequently occurs in the taking of a picture. And finally, when the two ships had come together and the pirates had cast their grappling irons and boarded the merchant vessel, the pitching and tossing became much worse, and we had to hold on for our lives. I should have liked to have had a second camera taking a picture of myself. It certainly would have been a moving picture in the strictest sense of the world. Of course the results justified the risks. The scenes were favorably commented upon everywhere.

M. P. Photographers a "Risk."

Motion picture photographers are listed on insurance risks as among the "hazardous." Certain insurance companies will not write policies for you—not on your life. Yet I would rather take any of these up in the air risks than take one picture of wild animals in a cage. I think wild animals in captivity are the most difficult things in the animate world to photograph. A lion has no use for a camera nor its operator. Out in California cameramen have lots of experience with animal photography, for there are several zoos there Again an instance will suffice. For the benefit of those who do not know, I will say that the lion or tiger or other wild animal is placed in a large cage. The trainer gets him sufficiently quiet, so that a canvas screen may be put up between the animal and the cameraman and his assistants. Behind this canvas screen the tripod and camera box are hidden, and through a hole in the screen the head of the camera protrudes.

Doing Animal Stuff.

Memory will ever keep green my first experience in filming a man-eating lion. The trainer was not about, but the owner volunteered to officiate in his stead. We succeeded in getting the canvas screen erected and the lion did not appear to be the least bit curious until the head of the camera began to protrude on his side of the fence, so to speak. At first he looked squarely into the camera, and I began to grind quickly, so as to get this splendid pose. But the lion seemed to want a "close-up." He kept advancing cautiously while I kept grinding the film, realizing that this was an unusual "shot," and that the lion was an unusual screener. I was overjoyed and turned to say so to those behind me. But there was no one there. The lion had stopped to crouch, a position I had longed for him to assume, but the owner knew what it had meant and had yelled. "Look out! He's going to jump!"

All hands had made a wild rush for the door of the cage. Did I loiter or play the heroic? Not so that you could notice it. Duty may have called me to finish the filming for a few more turns of the camera, but it didn't call so loudly as did safety. The last I remember was a yellow hairy substance swishing through the air and a door slamming behind me. Fortunately the film was not injured and the picturization of the lion proved a good one. But I would rather photograph anything else than a wild beast. None of them are camera proof.

These experiences form a vivid contrast to the quietude that attended the practice of my profession in my home town of Detroit, Mich., some years ago. Nowadays photographers must keep up to date with all the literature that is devoted to the camera and that is considerable. In days of old there were no such terms as "paraphenylenediamine" or "chlor-ethyl-aceto-acetate" and other words of equal length. Chemists like to clothe their formulas in such manner, but all of these terms have a generic foundation in words like phenol or methylene.

Although I have only photographed three pictures for Metro, I am more than pleased with the high standard for pictures that they have set. I am fortunate in being assigned to one of the ablest directors in the world—William Christy Cabanne. I have often been asked how conditions in the East here compare with those in California. We have more equable weather in California and less varying light and thousands of ideal locations that help a great deal and make work easier for the cameraman. The great advantage in the East lies in the fact that no matter what a motion picture needs or a director finds necessary it can at once be supplied. But on the other hand Director Cabanne is no respecter of weather. Like Admiral Farragut, he believes in "damn the torpedoes and go ahead."

Difficulties of Screen Photography

Natural Lighting and the Necessary Screen Illusion.

By Antonio Gaudio.

Photographer with the Yorke-Metro Producing Company.

IN MOTION picture photography, when we compare the effects of real and natural lighting with that which is necessitated by the demands of the action which must be included in the picture, we discover several obstacles which are practically insurmountable under the present conditions of photography. Most directors and cameramen already recognize the desirability of showing all scenes with lighting which is as close to the real thing as possible. But when we try to get such lighting effects we find that it is almost impossible.

Antonio Gaudio.

For instance, we are taking a scene in which the leading actors go through their business in a room which has several windows exposed to the view of the camera. The natural thing would be to have the faces of the characters illumined from the windows of the room. But, owing to the fact that the side of the set in which the windows are placed must be practically closed in, and the sun is striking the set from above or from the opposite side, the faces of our characters on the screen will be illumined by light coming from some place in the ceiling or from the opposite side of the room, which in real life is presumably dark.

Only in a night scene can the real lighting be shown. In this the character is illumined presumably from moonlight streaming through the windows, or from a fireplace or from a table lamp. In these scenes, we can throw our artificial light where the natural light would fall, and the characters are illumined in a realistic manner.

The motion picture photographer is decidedly up against it. The necessities of the drama demand that the characters be shown plainly to get in all of their action. If the natural lighting is used, the face of the character is lost and the action is sacrificed. So the photographer must sacrifice naturalness and the artistry of reality for the benefit of playing up the faces.

In one lighting effect, which illustrates the point, we had the leading character looking down from a window, his face illumined by a street lamp outside, which in reality was below him. The real and natural thing would have been to have the light striking him below the chin. But, for the purposes of the drama, a light was arranged outside the set so that it struck his face from above, illuminating it entirely. On the stage, it would have been possible to let the light strike merely a portion of the face, and let the speaking voice supply the deficiency to complete the effect. But on the screen the director demanded that the reality of the light effect be sacrificed to get in the man's face.

These difficulties can probably never be surmounted until we have lenses or an emulsion of such perfection that we can photograph everything, exterior and interior, just as the eye would see it. When we consider the great progress which has been made, however, nothing seems impossible. I can remember twenty years ago, when we had to take pictures of people, bracing their heads and hands with iron clamps because of the necessity of holding the pose for a long time. Sufficient progress has now been made that, with certain lenses, we can take instantaneous action with very little light.

Until further progress is made, it will be necessary for motion picture photographers to do the best they can with artificially arranged lighting. We can get the effects of reality in as many cases as possible, and resort to unreal lighting only when necessary, which, in photographing interiors, is unfortunately most of the time.

Development of Photodramatic Writing

By Jeanie Macpherson

Author of Many Paramount Pictures Notes Many Changes in Scenario Expression

WRITING for the photodrama is becoming more and more difficult every day. Every day new photo-dramatic symbols are being created to take the place of involved action or explanatory subtitles. As the art progresses, so does the public's understanding of the art, and the methods we used two years ago to explain certain things are now archaic, as, for example, not so long ago, when we wanted to show a man thinking of his sweetheart, we had him sitting with his head in his hands, casually gazing into a fire, but faded in a vision of his sweetheart on the scene over his head. Now we get the effect by simply having him bring out her handkerchief, a glove or something which shows the same thing. The audience understands it, and the obvious symbols are no longer a necessity.

Jeanie Macpherson.

Illustrating sub-titles by means of moving pictures is also passed. No longer do we have to describe a scene of a sub-title and then act out the scene. Now a subtitle is being dropped wherever possible and everything told in terms of action. If a woman is going down town to buy a new hat because her old one is worn out, we no longer have to have our actors make a lot of gestures and use two or three spoken titles. It is simply necessary for them to show the worn, torn ribbon of the hat, with, of course, the necessary expression to show what is to be conveyed. To show a telephone conversation it is no longer necessary to show both parties hanging up the 'phone. If one hangs up the 'phone we know the conversation is discontinued. We no longer have to show a letter inserted more than once or twice. When the audience reads the letter they know that it is in the person's possession and they can follow it. It isn't necessary to show it from time to time.

We have found out it isn't necessary for a photodrama to have only one dramatic scene, but each scene must be a drama in itself. The whole picture must be made up of a series of small dramas. This makes the completed drama a mosaic of little ones. Scenes that have no dramatic value in them, or say nothing, must be eliminated. So the scenario writer must bear in mind at all times not what he can put into a picture, but what he can leave out. If each scene has a why and a wherefore and an excuse for being, then you get a perfect continuity.

When I speak of eliminating scenes I do not mean that scenes must be cut down to threadbare, straight plot. I find in a great many pictures that the writers deviate from their main theme—that they have two or three themes wandering through the story, which necessarily makes it complicated and hard to follow. If the writer will take a simple single theme, then work up the detail, decorate it with embroidery and lace, every little bit different from the last, but have each bit of trimming pertain directly to the main theme, he will have a much better story. Instead of that, writers branch off with a counterplot or sub-plot which is upsetting and makes the story hard to follow.

Within the next two years I expect to see a school of photodramatists as well known and as distinguished as the dramatists of the speaking stage. Already this school is being developed and established, and within that time it will be set on a firm foundation and photodramatic writers will be given their proper place and will be remembered for their contributions toward this new art.

New Art of the Motion Picture

By Leopold D. Wharton

EVERY now and then, when the clouds are gray and the world is a little off in general, someone is certain to rise up, shake his head dolefully and announce that the motion picture business will be a business always, that there's nothing but commercialism in it, that there's no hope anywhere. We've all heard it—now and then, a great many of us have been guilty of uttering the very words.

Discouragement, to tell the truth, is a very frequent thing with the making of motion pictures. We wonder sometimes if filth ever will find its place on the dump heap, if there ever will be anything but a struggle between censors and producers to get "past" with something —and a lot of other things. That's when the clouds hang low. But when the sun comes out—

Leopold D. Wharton.

A new light shines on things and we see that the motion picture business is an artistry after all, an artistry that is growing and growing and becoming better every day. For instance:

Do you remember the old one-reeler days? Do you remember when a reel of Bill Spivens and his bucking horses, taken at some rodeo or stampede, made a very thrilling picture and "packed 'em in?" Do you remember when every picture was nothing but a straight run of scenes, with half of them portraying persons going in and out of houses? Do you remember the stories that once formed the basis of most of the motion picture plays? Well, if you don't, here's a sample:

> "Richard Henderson needs ten dollars, so he robs the bank where he is working. On the way out, he meets the banker's daughter and tells her that he has robbed her father's bank and that he's turned bad now and that he might just as well go all the way. So he kidnaps her and takes her to a hut. There the police find him, but the girl has fallen in love with him, so she forgives him and marries him and saves him from prison."

Sounds silly, and illogical and foolish, doesnt' it? But just the same, that is the type of story that was being "put over" not so terribly many years ago. Just compare that story with the story that is necessary today to produce a good picture—one that will sell—and you will see that there is an art in the motion picture business after all.

As for the lightings, the settings, the character of the people who work in the picture, the types that are used, the close-ups, diaphragming in and out, the dissolves and the half a hundred other things that must go into the making of a modern picture—they are so palpable that there is no need of discussion.

However, there is this to impress:

The man who makes a good picture in these days, must first of all have a good story, well knit, well told, well figured out in advance. That story must be more than possible. That story must tell something besides mere action. The story must be the type of story that will make the world a little better, a little happier, a little cleaner and purer for its having been told. And then—

Then that story must have its characters, fitted to every part. The day is past of fitting stories to stars. The time is coming when the star must be fitted to the story. To tell a story well, to have the characters depict the various phases of that story in the best possible way, with every bit of ingenuity known to the scenic, the lighting and the photography, that is the mission of the modern motion picture. And it is the new art of the motion picture.

There is only one thing to do when the clouds hang low and when things don't look just right in the motion picture business. That is to compare today with yesterday, compare it bit by bit, theme by theme, story by story and picture by picture—

And when that is done, one can readily see that the motion picture business is a business no longer—it is an Art.

A Few Ideas

By Bessie Eyton.

I CANNOT speak of stage life for the reason that I was never on the stage. However, many of my friends who have engaged in the theatrical profession before playing in the pictures tell me that motion picture acting is an art in itself and as difficult as theatrical work. I have never been with any motion picture company other than the Selig company and I have been with the Selig company for six years.

In the art of motion picture acting one must continually strive for success and continually study the art of expression, gesturing, etc. These qualifications, to my mind, have been most artistically developed within the past year or two. Quiet, convincing work has supplanted the motion picture "ranting" of other days and with this quiet acting has come histrionic force to the pictures.

Bessie Eyton.

To my mind the personal appearance of motion picture stars in theaters is the wrong policy. I have personally refused hundreds of such invitations. Some of these invitations have been most tempting, being accompanied by cash offers, free railroad transportation, etc. To my mind the screen personality of a motion picture actress or actor is not only their stock in trade, but their most valuable offering to the employer. An artist is rarely so impressive as his screen photograph and when he or she appears in the theater, gives a little talk and then shakes hands with the motion picture admirers, right then and there much of the romance and the illusion surrounding his or her personality is lost.

The Trouble Is

By EMMETT CAMPBELL HALL

WHAT'S the matter with the pictures?

That question, asked with reference to any subject should start something, but I haven't great hopes that it will in this instance. I've asked it before, the only result being that a pessimist or so has snarled "Everything," and a few optimists have joyously burbled "Nothing!" Which isn't helpful. What I've been hoping for has been the thoughtful enthusiast who would say, "Something. Let's fix it."

E. C. Hall.

Ever so often, the industrious press agent, traveling his familiar circle, gets around to the scenario department, having exhausted everything else, and it is announced as a discovery second only to that of C. Columbus that "the play's the thing!" It is then conceded that the story is the foundation on which the whole picture industry rests, and the world is assured that henceforth the Bulbul stories will be even more wonderfully good than ever before. Then the subject is dropped, with everyone feeling that there has been another great forward stride, and that's all there is to it.

As a matter of fact, there has never been any real effort on the part of any element in the picture business to raise the quality of the screen drama. Also, the screen stories of 1917 are no better than were those of 1912. In fact, being the same stories and now stretched to the breaking point in order to run five or six reels instead of their average normal of two or three, they are poorer in effect.

One moment, please, before you slay me. Just which one of us, author, manufacturer, or exhibitor, has made any real effort? Just step forward and say "I. At such a time I did so-and-so, and kept it up."

Now comes one, bursting with indignation. He is a manufacturer, and says, "What talk is this? Did I not conduct a prize story contest, with a thousand dollars as the capital prize (reserving the privilege of buying non-prize winning scripts at about $100 each)?" And another snorts, "Bah! I offered to pay a thousand dollars each for a hundred stories." So they did, and got the same stories that they could have purchased for half those sums. As they doubtless expected. A "prize" offer of a million dollars would not, at this time, produce a better story than might be expected to come in the mail any day, as anyone with even the faintest knowledge of creative art knows full well. For that matter, any line of human endeavor requires continuous and consistent encouragement and appreciation, not spasmodic "prize" offers. Can you conceive of a community of farmers raising potatoes, in the hope of pulling down the thousand dollars offered at the county fair for the best basketful, and selling the balance of the crop for ten cents a bushel? Yet that, substantially, is what the photoplaywright has been asked to do.

Manufacturer Has Not Done "Bit."

No, Mr. Manufacturer, I cannot concede that you have done your bit. The fact that you paid, the other day, ten or fifteen thousand dollars for the picture rights to a novel doesn't strengthen your case at all. This was, in truth, a kick in the face for the picture-writing art. You didn't really think the story worth a tenth of what you paid for it, and when your hundred-dollar-a-week continuity man is through with it, it will bear slight resemblance to the original. Given the time and a little encouragement, that same tame author could probably have turned out a better play than this finished product—a sort of Irish stew of literature, will be. You paid for the "big name" of the author, and its supposed advertising value.

To bring down the average cost per script, the prices paid twenty authors, who have written good stories for the screen, but who do not happen to have big names, must be shaved. It is, I am afraid, a short-sighted policy. You can't count on Big Name (you tried it and he stung you with an old story he had never been able to sell to a magazine), and you are discouraging to the quitting point on that twenty on whom you could count. Moreover, you are discouraging the public. When Bill Smith and Jane Jones go to see a picture, they do not care a hoot whether the story was written by Big Name or Tom Brown—they only want it to be good. Incidentally, if you would take the trouble to check up, you would probably be astonished to discover how few Bills and Janes ever heard of Big Name. The "advertising value" lasts until the beginning of the show, unless the story itself is good, and you know how many of Big Name's stories would have been given a moment's consideration had they been submitted by Tom Brown. And by none of this do I intend to discredit Big Name's work—probably I am one of his most ardent admirers—when he is kept in his proper medium.

Form of Expression Forced.

If you desired a painting of your favorite landscape, would you employ at a high figure a famous sculptor to do the work? Does it follow of necessity that the subject which lends itself perfectly to the brush would serve as an ideal model for the chisel? Then why attempt to force into one form of expression that which was created in another? The arts of the novelist and the photoplaywright are as distinctly different as those of painter and sculptor, the mediums of expression are as different as the dry paint and modeling clay. Not one novel or stage play out of a hundred is suited to photoplay uses. Why should they be? They are entirely dissimilar thought mediums.

The Big Names are quite aware of this, Mr. Manufacturer, and they are accepting your money, and laughing at you.

And you, Mr. Exihibitor? What have you done toward getting better stories? The whole thing is really up to you, you know, as the consumer, for while the public is the ultimate consumer, you, so far as the manufacturer is concerned, are the spokesman for the public. Have you ever written to a manufacturer saying, "Give me more stories by the author of The Big Success?" Do you know the names of three photoplay authors—the men who have made your business possible? Did you ever say "The story by Big Name was an ordinary thing—not at all the kind to keep my patrons coming back?" You've written about everything else, from the beauty patch on the leading lady's cheek to spots on the prints, but what have you said or done about the stories? Or are you satisfied with them as they are? Do you figure that mere elaborateness of production and the fact that Dotty Dimples is in the leading role will serve your ends? If so, I would advise that you spend a little time taking notes on your audience. People are not growing "tired of the pictures," and never will, any more than they will grow tired of books or magazines. But isn't the average mental grade of your patronage falling a bit? When a new patron shows up, if he is of any real mentality, does he become a permanent patron, nowadays? Is the quality of your audience advancing in the same ratio as the quantity? Better wake up, Mr. Exhibitor, and get busy, or you'll presently find your business sick of an illness for which there is no cure, or, at least, not while you are alive to profit by the recovery. Take a tip from the fate of the small town theater—the speaking stage. It wasn't the pictures that killed it—it committed suicide.

What Have Authors Done?

And we, Messrs. Authors, what have we done? Can we honestly say that we have not sold our birthwright for a very scanty half-portion of pottage? Suppose we had conscientiously taken the time to do our best, would our status have been different? Would the labor of love at the end have brought material reward? Probably not, if that is any consolation. And authors are, after all, only human beings, who must eat and pay the coal bills. It takes time to write a good photoplay, and few photoplaywrights can afford the time. At the prices he can get, the photoplaywright must turn out, in order to make a decent income, too many manuscripts.

Suggests Royalty Basis.

Then what should we all do about it? Why, the first thing is for the manufacturer to realize the difference between mere story value and photoplay value, stop paying absurd prices for the former, plus a name of more than doubtful advertising value in the picture field, and use the money to pay decent prices for the real photoplay—encourage the people who could and would write real photoplays, if they could afford to. Guarantee a reasonable sum, but pay on a royalty basis, the author's percentage being on the net profit. This would place a premium on taking pains, not only in story construction but in technique. To get maximum screen effect at minimum cost is an art, and the place to save in production is in the manuscript. The man whose play—no better on the screen—costs five thousand dollars more to produce, through the fault of the author—is now given just as much for his manuscript as the author whose ability and skill saves that sum.

For the exhibitor the thing to do is to indicate forcefully that he knows a good story when he sees it—say so when it is good, and likewise when it is poor—demand that the goods he sells be manufactured from the best raw material available, and see to it that it is done. Everything but the story is at the highest pitch of development; the pictures must improve, and the only opening for improvement is in the story.

And the authors—why, I suppose we will just have to try and prepare ourselves for what will surely be—to supply the demand for real photoplays when it duly arrives. If it doesn't arrive, we can be worrying about something else—there won't be any picture business to concern us.

The Legitimate Player in the Films

By Frederick Warde.

MY experience in moving pictures has been limited; my knowledge of the stage is of nearly half a century. My education and training has been "to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature."

When I entered the moving picture business I found I had much of this to unlearn. Not that it was necessary to be unnatural before the camera, but to curb the natural tendency to spontaneity, and to synchronize one's emotions and movements to the action of the machine.

To many of the distinguished actors who have appeared in pictures this was a difficult task, but I was most fortunate in having the direction of my son, Ernest Warde, himself an actor and stage manager for many years, before he became a moving picture director, who curbed my natural tendency to rapid action and by patient instruction moderated my spontaneity and reduced it to the proper tempo.

My first effort was as "Silas Marner," a visualization of George Elliot's novel; my second as "King Lear," in which I was more at home; and my third "The Vicar of Wakefield," all of which were pronounced successes. They all demanded acting as well as appearance, and without the experienced legitimate actor, would not have created the impression that they did.

That dramatic training and experience is of advantage to the moving picture actor has been demonstrated by the success of such cinema stars as William Farnum, Robert Warwick, W. S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Ethel Barrymore, and many others who have achieved distinction in the new field, and brought their keen intelligence, broad culture and dramatic instinct to the screen.

Physical beauty is a powerful asset for a picture, and for a time was practically the only one, but the development of its dramatic possibilities has created a demand for something more than attractive personality in the illustration of a story. The expression of the face must carry with it the conviction of sincere emotion. The walk, the carriage of the limbs, every action must be in harmony with the feeling of the moment or the effect is only artificial and worthless.

The lack of sequence and continuity in taking the pictures is another difficulty the, so-called, legitimate player has to overcome. The emotions are not cumulative as in a dramatic performance; but a thorough knowledge of the plot, familiarity with the scenario and a clear and complete study of the character and its relations to the others makes it a simple matter to keep the mosaics true and piece them together on completion, effectively.

In short, the technique of the moving picture is not so difficult to acquire, if the legitimate actor will subjugate his prejudices to the conditions, and recognize the many material advantages that conscientious work before the screen may bring him from this new and most popular form of public entertainment.

The actor's work upon the stage leaves but a memory, sweet and often tender, as it is, but his work upon the screen will live when he is dead, and many friends and admirers will look upon his features as in life, and recall those memories; while new generations will admire and praise his art and skill long after he has passed away.

A Business Without Brains

By ROY L. McCARDELL

WHAT I am stating here is set forth temperately, earnestly, honestly and with every desire to advance the interests and the ideals of the great and wonderful art industry of motion pictures. There is crying need for betterment in every phase of the production and distribution of photoplays. Waste, stupidity, ignorance and conceit are the detriments that must be overcome.

Roy L. McCardell.

I am informed by a gentleman whose veracity I have no cause to question that one of the heads of the J. P. Morgan firm, after a careful investigation of the moving picture business, with a view to financing a proposed amalgamation of big picture companies, stated that "The motion picture industry is a business without brains."

That it is without brains in production and distribution goes without saying. The mad waste of money in those departments is openly acknowledged by the heads of the big picture producing and distributing concerns themselves. They have made these admissions verbally and in signed statements. Of these things it is not my province in this article to comment upon.

But that the motion picture industry is without brains in the most vital place where brains ought to be—in its play or scenario departments—does concern me, as it concerns all who really and truly have the interests of the art industry at heart.

The screen star and the director have been encouraged and developed, but the treatment of the screen author and the treatment of the author's efforts have been contemptible.

With but very few exceptions, the heads of the big producing companies have no respect and doubtless never will have any respect for any author or authors, living or dead. They have never shown any great inclination to treat writers or their work, be the writers great or small, with anything that approches decency and fairness.

Writers Antagonistic.

As a result, the whole tribe of scribes are antagonistic to the moving pictures. The Authors' League, an organization in which every American writer and dramatist of note is enrolled, has for two years past made every endeavor to impress the moving picture producers with the idea that all the authors and playwrights of this country are eager to give their best efforts to the screen, and to bring about the same status of mutual fair dealing and respect that obtains between authors and the publishers of books, magazines, newspapers and periodicals. Also the same relations of mutual interest and respect that exists between established playwrights and the big theatrical producers.

But the efforts of the Authors' League have been in vain, and in recent symposiums in the Authors' League Bulletin such noted authors and playwrights as Rex Beach, Channing Pollock, Robert Stodart, Anna Steese Richardson, Ellis Parker Butler and others have indignantly cited their personal experiences with "scenario departments" and have advised established writers and authors generally to restrain from further endeavor to contribute their original writings to the screen until better conditions prevail.

Pollock Sums It Up.

Channing Pollock sums up the whole indictment the writers have brought against the moving picture producers as follows:

"I can truthfully say that in all my experience as a photoplay writer I have never known moving picture companies, as represented by their officers or editors, to keep their word in any particular or to pay when, where and as promised."

In short, the moving picture is without friends among writers, authors or newspaper men generally. The moving picture producer has never had any respect for writers and now writers have no respect for moving picture producers.
